OVERDRIVEN.

GEN. BELL INVALID.

Army Chief of Staff at Muldoon's.

Ranking General Takes Room at Sanitarium Secretary Root Had.

Victim of Overwork Which Results in a Nervous Collapse.

Unable to Stand When He Arrived at the Famous Retreat.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Brig.-Gen. J. F. Bell, chief of staff, U.S.A., whose name leads the army list, is the latest high Washington official to succumb to the strain of overwork and worry. For two weeks he has been an inmate of Muldoon's sanatorium at White Plains, occupying the room recently vacated by Secretary of State Root.

The utmost secrecy has been observed in official quarters as to the condition and whereabouts of Gen. Bell, who was practically in a state of nervous collapse when taken to White Plains.

As chief of staff under the spur of President Roosevelt's direct supervision, the general has worked unceasingly, so well informed persons declare. The inevitable break-down followed and, remembering the success attained by Muldoon in Secretary Root's case, his friends hurried him to White Plains.

Muldoon admitted tonight that Bell was under his care.

"It is true also that he has been here with me for two weeks," he added, "and I am glad to be able to say that he is steadily improving."

From other sources it was learned that, when General Bell arrived at Muldoon's farm he was not able to stand, as a result of [illegible] and physical weakness.

MAGNATES NOW PART COMPANY.

RYAN AND BELMONT NO LONGER GOOD FRIENDS.

New York Financiers Are Still Bound Together in Street Railway Merger, but Latter Has Repudiated Metropolitan System and Water-logged Combine.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] August Belmont has parted company with Thomas F. Ryan, in the Interborough-Metropolitan Company, which controls all the railways of this city. Though they are still bound together by the street-railway merger, hostility has taken the place of alliance and harmonious action between them. Two years ago Ryan forced Belmont into the merger.

Today Belmont has repudiated and disowned both the Metropolitan surface system and the gigantic, water-logged merger, and is engaged only in holding tight to his original profitable properties—the subway and elevated lines—leaving Ryan responsible for the rest. He has refused to give up one penny of his profits to help out the stranded Metropolitan, and the Interborough-Metropolitan Company, called the merger, is facing a crisis.

The only source of income for the merger is what is paid in by its subsidiary companies. The Metropolitan, being bankrupt, is now unable to pay anything. The Interborough has given notice that nothing need be expected from it above the regular demands to meet interest on merger bonds that represent subway stock held in trust. Fresh financiering will be necessary to stave off the day of reckoning.

PANIC IN BUSY STREET.

Thousands Lost in Raid on Florence Mining Shares in San Francisco.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

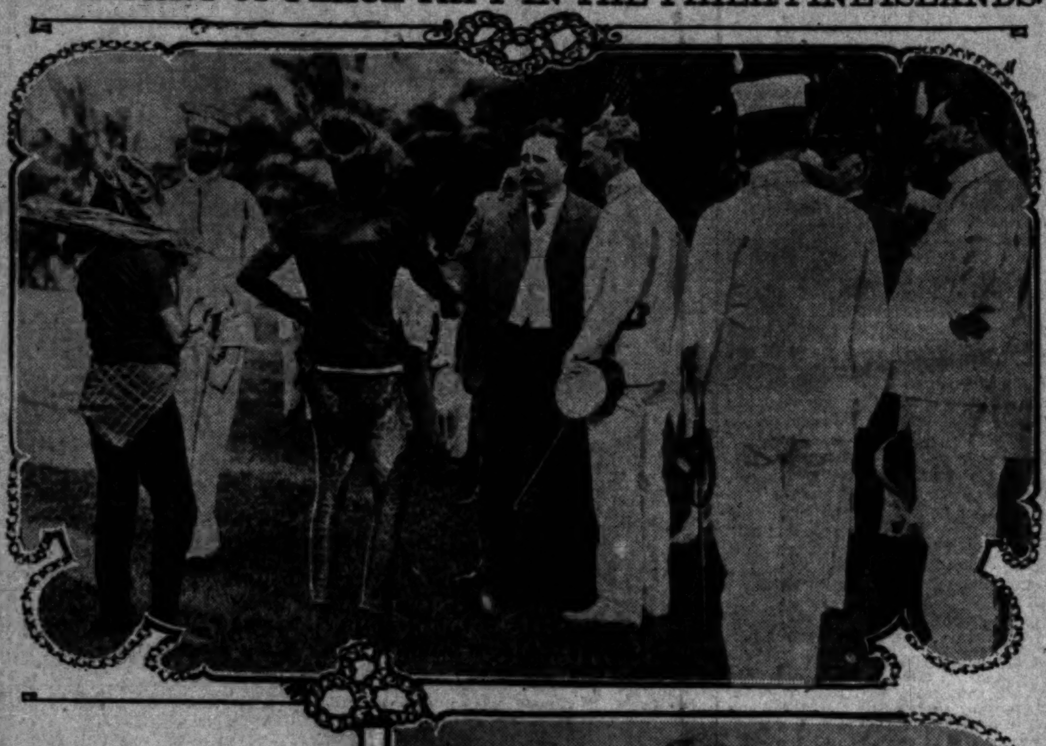
SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—Many thousands of dollars were made or lost in Bush street in a raid on Florence mining shares today. There was pandemonium such as a Bush-street mining exchange has not experienced since April, 1906.

The proceedings grew directly out of the selling of some thousands of shares of Florence that were held as security for loans to A. D. Hudgins by Brokers Hinkel, Van Wyck, Chamberlain, Epstein and others.

MILLIONS ROLL IN STREET.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Millions of dollars, gold and silver, rolled along Monroe and Clark streets today. The Commercial National Bank was moving its "cash on hand," consisting of about $15,000,000 in coin and currency to its new home at Adams and Clark streets. The almost incomprehensible amount of money was carried in safety and without much comment. However, there were 200 employés of the bank and fifty Pinkerton detectives and city policemen to guard against any contingency which might have arisen.

SECRETARY OF PEACE TAFT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.



NEAR JOURNEY'S END.

TAFT IS DUE IN MANILA MONDAY.

EMBARKED AT HONGKONG LAST NIGHT FOR ISLANDS.

Secretary of War and Wu Ting Fang Exchange Expressions of Cordial Friendship—Received by Leading Chinese and Dined by the Governor.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

HONGKONG, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Secretary of War Taft arrived here this morning. The weather was splendid and Secretary Taft was warmly welcomed. The United States revenue cutter McClellan and the gunboats Wilmington and Callao assisted in the greeting given to him.

Immediately after his arrival, he visited the Governor, Sir Matthew Nathan.

A banquet given in honor of Secretary Taft by American Consul-General Wilder was attended by many representative Chinese, including Wu Ting Fang, recently reappointed Minister to Washington.

Speaking in Chinese at the banquet, Wu Ting Fang said that China and America had always entertained the friendliest relations. His duty, after arriving in the United States, would be to continue these relations which were being cemented, strengthened and brought closer day by day.

Secretary Taft, in concluding his address, said that all improvements that can take place in China, whether governmental or administrative reform, development of the resources of the country, the elevation of people by education, the betterment of the civil service, or anything increasing the strength of that empire, cannot take place without receiving America's cordial sympathy.

This afternoon Secretary Taft attended a meeting of the Chinese Young Men's Christian Association and a reception given by the leading Chinese. He will dine tonight at the residence of the Governor, and after the vice regal reception, will embark at midnight for Manila, where he will arrive Monday.

Great preparations have been made for his reception as he is exceedingly popular in the islands and the Filipinos consider him one of their best friends. As Governor he did a great deal for the islands.

THIRD-TERM QUESTION IS BOTHERING TAFT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Taft leaders have reached the point where they are prepared to demand a showdown from President Roosevelt on the third-term question.

They want him to make it clear when he returns from the South that he will not be the nominee. Their reasons are found briefly in the fact that they are finding it impossible to get delegations in certain States where Roosevelt third-term sentiment is strong. They believe it vital to Taft that Roosevelt put himself absolutely out of it.

This was one of the matters urged on the President by Arthur Vorhis at the recent conference when the President was at Canton.

FIGHT ON FOR RE-ELECTION.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—The campaign of Mayor Taylor and Dist.-Atty. Langdon for reëlection was formally opened tonight at Dreamland Rink, the occasion being the first mass meeting under the auspices of the Democratic party and Good Government League.

The Auditorium was crowded.

Mayor Taylor, Langdon and other candidates addressed the gathering and the announcement of their policy was well received.

Mayor Taylor, in his address, declared that if reëlected he would continue to do all in his power to assist in the work of rebuilding San Francisco, and adding to its prosperity.

Langdon said: "A campaign against graft and corruption in the city has begun. The people must decide whether or not it shall go on. The work is not completed. Shall it be abandoned now by command of the people?"

Bidding Farewell to the Filipinos.

The hitherto unpublished photograph at the top was taken on the occasion of Secretary Taft's last visit to the islands as he was preparing to take his departure. The speaking likeness of the Secretary's broad back and massive head, as he made his farewell remarks, which apears at the bottom, was made at the same time.

BATTLE OF GIANTS.

PATTEN ROUTS ARMOUR IN WHEAT PIT BATTLE.

Second Day of Wild Speculation in Chicago Grain Market Ends in Victory for "Big Jim's" Bulls—Bear's Millions Unavailing.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The second day's battle in the wheat pit resulted in the complete rout of the "bears."

J. Ogden Armour, leader of the "bear" forces, is credited with having been caught short, and to have lost heavily in consequence of the upward turn of the market.

Time and again the "bulls" led by "Big Jim" Patten, charged the market, and at the last the bulls—unable to withstand the fierce attacks—took to the timber.

Closing prices showed better than one-cent advance, with December at $1.06⅝ and May at $1.11⅝.

Not since the memorable "Leiter year," 1897, has the Chicago wheat pit witnessed a day of so much wild excitement.

BIG INTERESTS INVOLVED.

Although Patten and Armour are the nominal leaders of the opposing crowds in the pit, it is well understood that "bigger interests" are behind them.

Patten, it is whispered, has the backing of D. G. Reid, the tin-plate millionaire, while behind Armour stand certain well known interests in Chicago and New York, with millions to pour into the pit.

Today their millions were of little avail in stemming the tide.

The Chicago banks are watching the battle with keen interest. They are not "in" the market to any extent. It is stated on good La Salle-street authority that the banks have not advanced more than $20,000,000 on wheat in the present contest, and $20,000,000 is a mere drop in the bucket to the big banks in this city.

One of them carted $200,000,000 through the streets in drays today while moving from old to new quarters.

It is generally conceded that Armour is engaged in the battle of his life. He has in his Chicago elevators all the way from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 bushels of wheat.

It is not known to what extent he has sold short. Reports this afternoon declare he was squeezed badly in today's fight, but his friends deny anything of the kind.

Armour himself issued a statement denying that he is speculatively short, but is generally figured that his interest in hedges against large quantities of cash wheat is important enough to make him a leading factor in the general situation.

SAYS BUSINESS IS TOO BRISK.

Daniel Guggenheim Declares the World's Supply of Money Is Not Sufficient.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SALT LAKE CITY (Utah) Oct. 12.—Daniel Guggenheim, head of the American Smelting and Refining Company, arrived in Salt Lake today. He is on a tour of inspection of the company's plants in the West.

Mr. Guggenheim says the recent curtailment of the copper output was a natural outgrowth of the fact that the world is doing about 5 per cent. too much business for the money it has. He says he does not anticipate serious hard times, and declares that as soon as business shrinks to a par with the amount of capital to be invested, the financial situation will be relieved.

Copper, he said, is as good as ever, and as soon as money is freer the demand for copper will be as great as ever.

RICH PRIZE.

MRS. VANDERBILT TO WED COUNT.

WILL FOLLOW HER DAUGHTER GLADYS TO ALTAR.

Statement Is Made That Marriage of Perhaps Richest Widow in America Will Occur Month After She Becomes Mother-in Law of Hungarian Nobleman.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Within a month after the marriage of her daughter, Gladys, to Count Szechenyi, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, it was said today by a person in thorough touch with the affairs of the family, will announce her engagement to a count.

The marriage, it is said, will follow a month later. The mistress of "the Breakers" is to live abroad after her wedding. Her plans have all been made, it is said, for the purchase or the rehabilitation of the estates that are now owned by her future husband, and upon these she will spend the greater part of the time that is not spent in Paris. It is understood that the Count, who will wed perhaps the richest widow in America of marriageable state, is a friend of Count Szechenyi. While the latter person courted the daughter, it is said the elder man paid his attentions to the mother.

In Newport it is believed that by the time of the wedding of Miss Gladys this elderly friend of Count Szechenyi will have arrived in this country. The engagement of Mrs. Vanderbilt to one Count and the near approach of the wedding of his sister to another, it is said, has caused a serious rupture between Reginald Vanderbilt and his mother.

"KIDNAPING" INVESTIGATED.

Oakland Newspaper Man and Others Appear Before San Francisco Grand Jury.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—The grand jury today examined a number of witnesses to inquire further into the matter of the "kidnaping" cases against Porter Ashe and Luther Brown, and to consider other questions as well.

The first witness was H. A. Herrick of the Oakland Tribune, who was followed by Erne Noon. Morris Levy, the fight promoter, was on the stand for a while, and Frank Coultre was called to explain the absence of his partner in the automobile business, Pete Callender, who he said was on a vacation. Al Hubbard and G. A. Wyman were questioned regarding the kidnaping affair.

The grand jury will meet again Monday afternoon.

Pete Callendar, the chauffeur who, it is alleged, drove one of the automobiles in the alleged attempt to "kidnap" Fremont Older, is reported to have disappeared. He was wanted as a witness by the grand jury.

Callendar, it is claimed, drove the machine in which Lawyer Ashe and Luther Brown led the way to Redwood City.

DONS DON'T LIKE IT.

VICTORIA FRIGID.

Spain's Queen Loses Popularity.

She Antagonizes Royal Family and Proud Spanish Nobles.

Hides Her Face With a Fan at Bullfights and Shows Disgust.

King Alfonso Still Remains Intensely Loyal to His Bride.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MADRID, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Queen Victoria is fast losing, or rather ridding herself, of the great popularity which was hers.

Only recently her husband's people idolized the Queen. Courtiers and nobles highly admired her. Now she is fast becoming one of the less loved of sovereigns.

The Queen has plainly shown the numerous members of the royal family that their society is not congenial to her. She has done away with the dinners at which the King met all of his relatives, each day.

From time immemorial, all of the royal family and their suites have resided in the palace. Now the Queen's exclusive ways and imperious manner has made the palace almost appear so frigid for them they are leaving it for good and all.

ANTAGONIZES NOBLES.

Through her husband's kin, Queen Victoria is antagonizing the proud Spanish nobles, whom the Queen Mother conciliated only after years of diplomatic effort.

The nobles bitterly resent the Queen's refusal to attend bull fights, except when court etiquette compels her presence. Even then, she ostentatiously screens her face with her fan, making it plain that the sport so dear to every Spaniard is disgusting to her.

All kinds of stories are afloat, even among the people, about the Queen's "fiery temper" and the condition of subjection to which they say she has reduced King Alfonso.

All Spanish diplomats who have served in England say that Her Majesty inherits the hot temper of her mother, Princess Henry of Battenburg, who ruled the English court in Queen Victoria's time and oppressed her husband until he became the merest lay figure, and say that she is notorious for her unamiability, to put it mildly.

While traits of little account in England, they are dangerous here among people so largely swayed by enmities or friendships—so dangerous that they may provoke a tragedy.

QUEEN DOWAGER TROUBLED.

Queen Dowager Christian, it is known, is deeply troubled and apprehensive over the turn affairs have taken; but she has found it useless to try and reason with the young Queen, who does not even attempt to hide her distaste for the antiquated notions, the tedious formalities and the impenetrable reserve of her Spanish subjects.

King Alfonso supports and applauds everything the Queen does and says. Not only is he intensely loyal and loving to his wife, and not only does his volatile nature submit to her resoluteness, but he, too, detests to be bored by senseless etiqutte and restraints.

It is said here that it will be well for King Edward to impress some sound advice on his headstrong niece, when she visits England, else the unstable Spanish throne may be so shaken that its occupants will be startled from their complacent security.

SAN JOSE REALTY DEAL.

SAN JOSE, Oct. 12.—The property at the northeast corner of Second and San Fernando streets, on which is located the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, building, was sold today by W. K. Jenkins to Marcus Blanchard for $55,000.

FIFTEEN MILLIONS STOLEN IN LAST THREE YEARS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The bonding companies of this city have just found out how much clever rogues here and elsewhere in the United States have stolen during the first six months of the present year. The total compared with the corresponding period in 1906 and 1905 is as follows: 1905, $5,234,285; 1906, $3,829,399; 1907, $5,482,687; total for the three periods, $14,546,687.

April is the favorite month with embezzlers. They begin their operations with the first gladsome warbles of spring, just before race tracks are swept up for the season. Defalcations by months this year were as follows: January, $728,715; February, $1,590,161; March, $1,421,800; April, $1,130,633; May, $406,962; June, $204,410; total, $5,482,687.

In April, 1905, nimble thieves got away with $2,333,044 and, in the following April, they made their biggest hauls. Banks and trust companies were the worst sufferers. They lost $2,080,590, as against $758,750 in the first half of 1906. Public service corporations and the like were next hardest hit. They parted involuntarily with $576,335.

QUEST REWARDED.

ELOPERS ARE NOW LOCATED.

Clarkson and Helen Maloney Traced to London.

Couple at Hotel, but Refuse to Be Interviewed.

Dual Wife's Sister There in Search of Her.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Samuel Clarkson and Miss Helen Maloney are in London, registered at the Carleton as "Mr. and Mrs. Clarkson."

The eloping couple arrived yesterday from Liverpool, where they landed from the Quebec liner Empress of Britain, while the White Star steamer Baltic was being fruitlessly searched.

Your correspondent called at the Carleton as soon as it was laerned that Clarkson and Miss Maloney were there, but was told that he "had been misled by a similarity of names."

"It is true," the clerk said, "that there is a Clarkson who is a guest in the house, but he is a wealthy Vladivostok merchant, an old man and alone."

From the circumstances that in his bachelor days "Sammy" Clarkson was a familiar figure in about the Carleton, the correspondent was able to learn from old acquaintances that the "wealthy Vladivostok merchant" was young, and accompanied by a young and pretty woman, and was, in short, no other than "Sammy" Clarkson, well known in fashionable and sporting London circles.

Later in the afternoon, your correspondent was able to get the Clarkson apartment by telephone. A woman replied that Mr. Clarkson was out, but that she was Mrs. Clarkson. In answer to a second question as to whether she was the former Miss Helen Maloney, the telephone receiver was abruptly hung up.

The two are keeping much to themselves and firmly discourage all efforts to interview them.

SISTER AFTER HER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mr. and Mrs. Clarence B. Ritchie are now in London on a search for Helen. Mrs. Ritchie is Helen Maloney's sister. It has been definitely learned that Miss Maloney and Clarkson were married in Montreal in spite of the fact that the girl had secretly wed Arthur Herbert Osborne in Mamoroneck, N. Y., December 28, 1905.

It is believed that Clarkson and the girl went to London under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham.

The steamship arrived at Liverpool yesterday. The couple took the boat train for London.

Clarkson was a member of the now defunct Atlantic Club of No. 17 Dover street, West London. This club had a membership of 500, and included many Americans.

According to a card he left at the Holland House, when staying in this city, his London address was No. 42, St. James Place, S. W.

MISSION A SECRET.

The Ritchies did not let it be known that they were sailing for Europe to look for Miss Maloney. In fact, at the time of Miss Maloney's elopement, it was reported that Mrs. Ritchie had aided her.

That she did not know she was aiding in an elopement when she took Miss Helen's trunks from her father's house, near Spring Lake, the day after the girl disappeared, is generally believed.

No member of the Maloney family knew then that Miss Helen was the secret wife of young Osborne, and up to that time absolutely no objection had been found to the suit of the Englishman.

Mr. Maloney, the Standard Oil millionaire, is prostrated by grief at the actions of his daughter, and it is said the condition of the girl's mother is little better.

While they were both shocked at Miss Helen's elopement with Clarkson they would readily have agreed to the marriage. It was the news that their daughter was already a wife, when she married Clarkson that stunned them completely.

COUPLE AT LIVERPOOL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 12.—A young couple traveling under tne name of Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, but whose names do not appear on the passenger list, landed here today from the steamer Empress of Britain. It was learned that they boarded the liner at at the last moment at Quebec. They waited at Liverpool until all the other passengers had gone ashore. These and other circumstances led to the suspicions that they are Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Clarkson, although this statement cannot be made with certainty. The couple at once left here for London.

WATERY GRAVE.

STEEL STEAMER SINKS IN LAKE.

TWENTY-ONE SAILORS GO DOWN WITH VESSEL.

Cypress, Loaded With Iron Ore and on Her Second Voyage, Is Thought to Have Suddenly Sprung a Leak—Second Mate Only Person on Board Saved.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAULT STE. MARIE (Mich.) Oct. 12.—The steel steamer Cypress, owned by the Lackawanna Transportation Company and on her second trip down the lakes with a cargo of iron ore, was wrecked thirty miles from Grand Marias and all her crew of twenty-two, excepting the second mate, were lost.

He was washed ashore near the Deer Park, lashed to a life raft and barely alive. He is in a critical condition and thus far has been able to tell only that the steamer was the Cypress and that he is the sole survivor. He is being given careful attention in the hope that his life can be saved. He has suffered terribly from cold and exposure, in addition to battering of the waves. Two bodies have also been washed ashore at Deer Park.

The Cypress was a new boat, 440 feet long, with a capacity of 7400 tons. It is believed here that the machinery of the Cypress must have met with an accident, as the northwest storm last night was not severe enough to wreck such a strong ship. No details will be known until the second mate revives sufficiently from his terrible experience to talk.

A careful patrol of the beach is being made by the life-saving crew in search for bodies.

The indications are that the foundering was due to a sudden leak. The steamer George Stevenson reported today that she passed the Cypress late yesterday. A red streak was distinguished in the water behind her, indicating that her plates had been sprung and that the iron ore with which the ship was loaded was discoloring the water.

Capt. Harbottle of the Stevenson says he passed so close that he could see that the hatches of the Cypress were not covered. A heavy sea was running and the decks of the Cypress were continually awash with the combers that broke over her rails. Late last night the lights of the vessel near Deer Park were visible to the crew of the Stevenson and then they suddenly disappeared.

MAY ALSO BE LOST.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

JAMESTOWN (N. Y.) Oct. 12.—When Capt. Huyck of the Cypress left his home here for his present trip, he was accompanied by his wife and two sons. It is generally believed here that they were still with him on the Cypress.

BALLOON OFF FOR RUSSIA.

London Aeronauts Start on Aerial Race to Break Long-Distance Record.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Under the auspices of the Daily Graphic, a mammoth balloon left the Crystal Palace tonight in an attempt to break the long distance record by a voyage to Russia.

The aeronauts expect to cross the North Sea during the night and to be well over the country by midday tomorrow.

The balloon is equipped with every scientific instrument and many new inventions, as well as air-tight compartments to enable the aerial travelers to keep afloat in the event of the airship falling into the sea.

AERIAL.

FEAR OF LAKES THEIR BUGABOO.

EUROPEAN AERONAUTS ARRIVE FOR CUP CONTEST.

British and French Representatives Reach New York and Start Soon for St. Louis—Lake Craft Warned to Be on Lookout—Parisians Want to Be Landed in North Wilds.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—All of the European aeronauts who are to compete in the James Gordon Bennet Cup race to start from St. Louis, October 21, are here. The four French contestants arrived on the La Touraine today.

Griffith Brewer and Lieut. Brabazon, representing the Aero Club of Great Britain, reached New York on the Lusitania yesterday. With Alan R. Hawley and J. C. McCoy, two of the cup defenders, the Englishmen already here will start for St. Louis tomorrow afternoon, all of the balloons now being on the ground.

The fear of dropping into the Great Lakes is the chief concern of the aerial racers at the present time. Tonight officers of the Aero Club of America made the request that all newspapers throughout the lake region print a general notice to mariners to be on the lookout for the balloons.

For twenty-four hours after the start of the race, at 3:30 o'clock on the afternoon of October 21, those sailing on the lakes have been requested to keep a sharp watch in all directions, especially at night.

The prevailing wind at St. Louis at this time of the year is from the southwest, and that will carry the balloons toward Lake Michigan and Lake Superior. Should a balloon sail over one of these bodies of water, with sand ballast exhausted, and without wind enough to carry it to the other side, the aeronaut would be almost certain of drowning, unless he was seen and rescued by some of the lake craft.

One of the reasons for selecting this time of the year is that the lakes just now swarm with commerce toward the close of navigation, and this, together with a full moon, renders the waters less perilous than at any other season. It is not likely that any of the balloons will remain in the air longer than forty hours, and it is expected, if favored with a good wind, that they will all be down within twenty-four hours.

The French representatives in the race, who have arrived in New York, are Alfred LaBlanc and M. Mix, who will compose one team, and René Gasnier and Charles Levée.

M. Mix said: "We start for St. Louis Monday. I am in this race for fun—pure sport—nothing else. All I hope for is a south wind, which will carry us far up into Canada, and land us somewhere in the wilderness far from civilization, so we will be obliged to work our way out. M. LeBlanc and I are business men off on our annual vacation, and we cannot get too much sport out of it."

Altogether six of the balloonists left for St. Louis today. They are the four Americans, J. G. McCoy and Capt. Charles de F. Chandler, who will manage the balloon America; Alan R. Hawley and August Post, who will sail the St. Louis, and the two Englishmen, Griffith Brewer and his companion, Lieut. Hon Claude Brabazon of the Lotus II.

Fire of unknown origin, in New York early yesterday, destroyed a six-story brick factory building at Nos. 176-180 Grand street, causing a loss estimated at over $200,000. Hundreds of families were driven from surrounding tenements in a pouring rain.

HARRIMAN NOT BEHIND ORDER.

Espee Plan to Curtail Only for Local Lines.

Calvin's Office Says Service Will Be Unimpaired.

Retrenchment Does Not Effect Through Trains.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] According to the general manager's office of the Southern Pacific, the order to curtail expenses issued by General Manager E. E. Calvin, is not in response to orders sent out by President Harriman.

The reductions are being made locally, as the necessities present themselves. They are not intended, it is announced, nor will they be permitted in any measure, to affect the efficiency of the service, or lower the standard of maintainence.

The heavy expenditures made by the company during the past two years, it is declared, have resulted in a condition which makes it possible to carry out the programme for retrenchment without lessening the efficiency in any degree.

REDUCTIONS BENEFICIAL.

In the statement of the general manager's office, it is admitted that in the matter of train service reductions will be made where they can be to advantage. Trains on the Santa Cruz and Sacramento lines have already been withdrawn, but it is pointed out that they would have been taken off in any event at the close of the summer season.

Some time ago the company put on a number of express trains, partly as an experiment, and these are to be taken off. For the most part, the cuts will be made on the local service and through-train schedules will not be affected. In this way the company can effect a saving of thousands of train miles a month.

The retrenchment, it is announced, will not affect any of the large improvements now under way. They will be carried out to the letter; but there are many contemplated improvements withheld until some future time.

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM.

According to the statement issued today, the company does not want to alarm the public by permitting the impression to get abroad that there is to be any curtailing of expenses.

It is declared that the public will be afforded practically as good service as in the past, in spite of the programme of retrenchment. In curtailing the shop forces, it is asserted, sufficient men will be retained to keep all equipment up to a high standard of repair.

The company lays particular stress on the fact that the plan to convert the trans-bay system of local roads into electric lines will not be abandoned. The work on this big undertaking will proceed.

The contract for a new power-house at Fruitvale has already been let. The appropriation for this item was $2,000,000.

HARRIMAN'S DENIAL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] E. H. Harriman said today there was no truth in the dispatch from San Francisco to the effect that he had told the general managers of all his railroads and steamship lines to reduce all expenses, so far as possible, without delay; to reduce train service, shop forces and retrench generally, the whole thing to involve the dropping of 20,000 men from the pay roll of the Harriman properties.

Mr. Harriman says: "No such orders have been given, nor are they contemplated. We are going ahead and attending to our business and meeting our traffic demands as sensible business men should.

"It is perhaps hardly necessary for me to say that we are not doing anything extraordinary, or taking on a lot of new and costly work, but we are taking all steps required to keep our properties in shape to handle our business efficiently and economically.

"It is, of course, ridiculous on its face that we are discharging men by the wholesale, because the volume of our business is far heavier than it was a year ago, and the prospects are that it will continue to be heavier for the next few months at least, which is as far ahead as one can safely see."

FISH PREPARES FOR CONTEST.

ARRIVES IN CHICAGO FOR I. C. BATTLE FOR CONTROL.

Rumored That He Will Ask Courts to Issue an Injunction to Prevent Harriman-Harahan Crowd from Voting Union Pacific Holdings to Prevent Cumulative Voting.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Stuyvesant Fish and James T. Harahan today began to marshal their forces for the final battle for the control of the Illinois Central road. The long and bitter struggle between these two rivals for the chieftainship of the great backbone system of American railways will end in a decision in this city next Wednesday at noon at the annual meeting of the stockholders.

Stuyvesant Fish arrived in the city tonight by special train. He had engaged apartments at the Auditorium Annex in advance and came prepared to open headquarters for the final struggle. He had nothing to say of his plan tonight.

There are rumors tonight that Mr. Fish will spring a coup on his opponent by going into court and asking for an injunction to prevent the voting of the Illinois Central stock held by the Union Pacific.

On the other hand President Harahan is serenely confident of victory. Officials of the company declared tonight that, allowing even for the possibility of the Union Pacific being enjoined from voting the 280,000 shares of Illinois Central stock it holds, the Harahan-Harriman forces will control a majority of the rest of the stock at the Wednesday meeting. The total issue is 950,400 shares.

"UNCLE JOE" KICKS OFF.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

GALESBURG (Ill.) Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Uncle Joe" Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives, at seventy-two years, opened the Lombard and Carthage College football game by kicking twenty-five yards. "That's easy," he said; "let me have another trial." "Uncle Joe" took a hitch in his trousers and booted the ball seventy feet, then he tried again and did better, and the game began, Lombard winning by a score of 40 to 0.

"NIGHT RIDERS" WHIP WOMEN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CLAUD'S LANDING (Ky.) Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Night riders" whipped Mrs. Kate Williams and Mrs. Jennie Freeman last night because they would not reveal the whereabouts of their husbands. The women were dragged from their beds and taken to the road in front of their homes, where switches were applied by several men who wore masks over their faces. Despite their sufferings the women would not tell where their husbands were and the baffled men rode away. The husbands of the women had been warned to join the "Association," a local organization of the Tobacco Planters' Protective Association, on pain of torture.

OBJECTS TO POLICIES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CARMI (Ill.) Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Superintendent Frank Potter of the insurance department of Illinois has issued orders to the National Protective Legion of Waverly, N. Y., the reformed American Mutual Union of Chicago and the Keystone Guard of Athens, Pa., requesting that they discontinue the issuance of certain kinds of policies in this State. The policies placed under the ban are ones purporting to have a surrender value after a number of annual payments have been made.

FRESH BEAR SIGNS FOR THE PRESIDENT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

STAMBOUL (La.) Oct. 12.—The President will not go to Tensas as announced yesterday. A courier arrived from Bear Lake camp at 9 o'clock tonight, saying that such excellent bear signs had been discovered there as to persuade him that it would be unwise to change and he decided not to do so.

Later this afternoon a halt was called in the preparations for the transfer of the President's hunting camp from East Corral to Tensas and when darkness fell there was uncertainty as to whether the move would be made tomorrow in accordance with the announcement.

The hunt was confined today to the Bear Lake neighborhood, and residents assert that the probability of securing big game in the lake quarter is much better than it was at the old grounds. A negro just in from the lake says fresh bear signs are plentiful and he said the President would find such entertainment there as would make him hesitate to leave.

Provision will be made immediately for the improvement of the President's accommodations, which are now quite meager. At the old clubhouse on the lake are several mattresses in usable condition, and each of the members of the party, including the President, attached a roll of blankets to his saddle when they left camp yesterday morning. With this combination they were comfortable last night. However, the temperature was higher than it is tonight and they may not fare so well if the thermometer should fall.

Mr. Shields is acting commissary and has already sent out two wagonloads of provisions to the new headquarters. A runner from the camp says that the President and entire party were on their horses at dawn this morning. Yesterday's hunt for wild cats was fruitless.

FIGHT FOR INJUNCTION.

CINCINNATI (O.) Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The court fight to prevent a strike for an eight-hour day by the International Pressmen's and Assistants' Union was begun today before Judge Thompson of this city. Representatives of the United Typothetae and several publishing firms in Chicago, New York, St. Louis and other cities applied for an injunction to prevent violation of the agreement of January, 1907, providing that the pressmen will wait until January, 1909, for the eight-hour day. The judge reserved his decision.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BAKERSFIELD, Oct. 12.—William Glenn, well known in this vicinity and employed by the Vichnu Oil Company, in San Luis Obispo county, became suddenly insane yesterday, and, naked, chased the Chinese cook from one of the cottages. When the Chinaman escaped, Glenn buried the eight-inch blade of a knife in his own body.

Glenn then went to a bunk-house, where Fred Sperry and two companions were, and tried to batter down the door. The occupants had been awakened by the screams of the maniac and of the Chinaman and had seized their guns to protect themselves.

The crazy man finally forced open the door, and Sperry broke the stock of a gun over his head and knocked the knife out of his hands. Both stooped for the knife, but Glenn got it, and, failing to reach Sperry, again plunged the weapon into his own abdomen and neck. Sperry again hit him on the head with the butt of a gun, dazing him.

A surgeon was sent for, but the man's abdomen was literally hacked to pieces, and he died in a few hours.

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The contract for the foundations for the new Santa Fé machine shops at this place was let today to Carl Leonardt of Los Angeles. They will be 100x500 feet. Two carloads of forms for the work arrived this afternoon. Leonardt will have 200 men employed on the job. When the building is complet and equipped it will represent an outlay of $250,000. Leonardt also has the contract for the new roundhouse to cost $150,000. Eleven of the thirty-five stalls are to be completed by Christmas. The letting of the contract is a repudiation of the recent report that Vice-President Kendricks has ordered all expenditures for improvements on the Santa Fé system to cease.

President Small Gives Up the Fight.

Advises Locals to Vote on the Proposition.

Other Telegraphers' Officials Are Stubborn.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—Following the visit to this city of Labor Commissioner Neill, President Small of the Telegraphers' Union took decisive steps to close the telegraphers' strike. He sent the following telegram to all of the leading cities in the country:

"NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—Prominent New Yorkers have appealed to me to call the strike off. All efforts at negotiations are exhausted, and the companies' officials say they will fight to a finish. The treasury is depleted, and no more funds are available. Requests for relief from all sides are heavy and urgent. The general assembly cannot meet them. The strike having been ordered without the president's sanction, I recommend that the locals vote on the proposition."

A meeting of the New York local will be held tomorrow, when President Small's recommendation will be discussed. Daniel Russell, chairman of the strikers' board of strategy, said tonight that President Small had said nothing to the members of the local board regarding recommendation either before or after the same was made public.

Mr. Russell said he had protested against the strike in the beginning, but at the same time had said that, if it was declared, he would support it to the end. This promise, he said, he had kept, and he would never ask the strikers to go to work unless they receive material concessions.

Percy Thomas, former deputy president of the general body, issued a statement tonight, in the course of which he said:

"We have $15,000 in the treasury of the general assembly. I am advising all locals not to declare the strike off, but to continue the fight with greater energy than heretofore. If we were right on the first day of the strike, we are right now. It is better to starve than to surrender."

REASSURED.

RUN ON BANK STOPS QUICKLY.

LONG BEACH FIRST NATIONAL IS LITTLE AFFECTED.

State Examiners Give Assurance of the Solvency of the Institution and Panicky Depositors Return Their Withdrawals—Why Names of "New Blood" Are Not Announced.

LONG BEACH, Oct. 12.—The First National Bank today successfully withstood a brief run, the first in the banking history of Long Beach. Prompt payment of all demands, the sight of stacks of gold and bills and a positive statement made in the bank lobby by State Bank Examiner Gotch, had the effect of making the run a short one, and by noon there were only two or three customers at the teller's window. Just after the statement made by the bank examiner, President Walker announced that instead of closing at noon, as usual, the bank would remain open all afternoon, tonight, and Sunday, if necessary, to pay all demands, and that every depositor would be paid in full.

Whatever doubt still existed was dispelled by this assurance, and, although the bank remained open this afternoon, there were practically no withdrawals, but many, reassured, hastened to redeposit.

The run had been expected, and the bank was prepared for it. Several days ago it was rumored that changes were pending in the roster of the bank, and a vague sense of financial unrest resulted, which was not allayed yesterday, when the brief announcement was made that J. B. and Charles L. Heartwell and W. L. Porterfield had disposed of their holdings to Los Angeles capitalists and had retired, C. J. Walker assuming the presidency. The statement lacked information as to the identity of the new blood, and this undoubtedly caused the run this morning. Today the tardy statement is made that a hitch in securing a gentleman from another part of the State to assist President Walker in the management of the institution, made it imperative to withhold for the present the names of the new backers.

The formal announcement startled depositors, and some money was withdrawn yesterday, although the sight of men unloading a wagonload of gold and currency yesterday held the timid ones in check. With the passing of the night these fears were rekindled, and when the bank opened, depositors began to gather at the teller's window. As the line increased, other windows were utilized, all depositors being met with a smile and their checks exchanged for yellow gold from stacks that seemed to show no effects of the drain.

E. S. Gotch and J. A. H. Kerr, State bank examiners, who were called here yesterday to check over the exchange of stock in the transfer made, remained over, and about 11 o'clock Mr. Gotch addressed the crowd and made the statement that he and Mr. Kerr had made an examination of the bank's affairs, and that it was absolutely sound and able to pay in full every depositor, and that the bank's doors would remain open as long as any depositor wanted his money. This assurance checked the rush perceptibly, and fifteen minutes later only one teller was on duty, and he had plenty of leisure. The receiving teller, however, was busy receiving deposits which had previously been withdrawn. One excited man drew out $8000, which was paid him in gold, and after looking at it a minute, carted it to the receiving teller's window and put it back.

President C. J. Walker was in a happy mood. "I expected it," he said, "and wired our New York, Chicago and San Francisco correspondents for our holdings there. It arrived yesterday—$500,000—and we have money and then some."

The excitement was not shared by any of the other banks, except that they secured many new depositors. The Citizens' Savings Bank, heretofore an auxiliary of the First National, felt the effects of the run, but promptly took advantage of the law requiring depositors to give ninety days' notice of withdrawals, and this, while it checked withdrawals, added to the alarm for a while.

No one knows what started the rumor but the bank will make an effort to locate the source.

The general opinion this evening is that the bank, having demonstrated its solvency will be stronger than ever. According to a statement made last Monday, the bank has resources of $1,750,053.98, with a cash reserve of $285,221.29. The capital stock is $500,000 paid in and deposits amount to $875,019.10.

In a collision between a Louisville and Nashville freight train and a St. Louis and San Francisco passenger train at Pratt City, Ala., yesterday, Pullman Car Conductor J. C. Smith of Birmingham, Ala., was instantly killed and several persons were injured.

GERMANY'S IRELAND.

ATTEMPT TO GERMANIZE RECALCITRANT POLAND.

Crown Prince to Establish Court in Beloved City of Posen.

Emperor William Adopts This Plan, in Hopes of Reconciling Three Million Subjects Who, for Almost Generation, Have Been Source of Trouble to Prussian Government.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Weary of seeing strife in Poland, a sort of Ireland to Germany, Emperor William has evolved a plan to reconcile his subjects in that alien portion of his domains.

The attempt will be made on a grand scale to Germanize these recalcitrant people. The plan includes the sending of the Crown Prince to live among the Poles in their beloved city, Posen. This, by the way, is a great affliction to the heir apparent, and he only obeys orders of the most positive sort in exiling himself from Berlin.

For almost a generation, German Poland has been a thorn in the flesh to all Germans, and a source of trouble to the empire. Three millions strong, the Poles live in compact masses along the eastern frontier. They are strangers to Germany in language, customs and religion, and are out of sympathy with every German ideal. They preserve, as the Irish do, an independent Poland, which the glorious traditions of their history have cherished.

Foundations were laid three years ago for a magnificent imperial palace at Posen. This huge building, now nearing completion, will be occupied by the Crown Prince. He will live there the greater part of the year and establish his court there. He has been resignated to command the cavalry regiment, in which those young Polish nobles, who are believed to be friendly toward the Prussian rule, serve as officers.

EFFORT AT ASSIMILATION.

The establishment of a young and brilliant court at this Polish center, and the prosperity and gayety which it is expected to add to the people of the city, are calculated by the Emperor to do much toward the placation and assimilation of the most influential nobles and gentry of these provinces, making them loyal and devoted subjects.

This, however, appears preposterous. Every day news comes from the provinces of some petty measure taken by the government, which irritates or exasperates the Polish population.

For instance, yesterday's newspaper had the story of a school teacher named Shapski, a Pole in name only, whose sympathies were German, and who applied for a transfer to a better position in another district.

The answer came back to him that it was impossible, for the reason that he spoke the Polish language. His superiors asserted, in explanation, that the Minister of Education had made it a rule that no teacher who could speak Polish was eligible for promotion.

The "Association of Young Poles," composed of youths and girls who cultivate native songs and music, recently published a song book. The government promptly confiscated it. Where the danger of sedition lay in this book is hard to discover.

CASE OF PERSECUTION.

Only a truly typical case of senseless persecution in this unhappy country is seen in the experience of a farmer named Dozymalas. He bought some land and began to build a house on it. There was a law not in effect at that time which forbade any Pole to build a dwelling on land acquired by purchase. Dozymalas made an effort to plead that an ex-post facto statute could not be applied to him. He bought an old van, such as is used by itinerant showmen. This he fitted up for his family to live in. He has a wife and three children.

The police saw in this a seditious and unpatriotic evasion of the law. They told Dozymalas that if he would live in this vehicle he must keep it moving.

"How long?" he asked, "may I remain in one spot?"

No more than three days, he was answered. So he will have a moving day twice a week, and sometimes three times a week. All they have to do is to haul it a few yards, but every fourth day a policeman visits the farm to see that he has moved.

WED IN WESTMINSTER.

Capt. William H. Clifford, United States Marine Corps, and Miss Mabel Moore Are Married.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Capt. William H. Clifford, United States Marine Corps, until recently commander of the American legation guard at Peking, was married today at St. Andrew's Church, Westminster, to Miss Mabel Moore, daughter of George Moore, formerly of Portland, Me.

Capt. Clifford and his best man, Capt. Sydney A. Cloman, the American military attaché, were in full uniform.

The Cliffords left for Naples, whence they will sail for Manila, Capt. Clifford having been assigned to duty at Cavite.

GERMAN VENTURE IN DRAMA.

Hauptmann Thinks Psychological Problem Play Decadent, and Tries Historic Brand.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] German playgoers are agreed that the psychological drama has had its run, and that they are not calling for romanticism in its most extreme form.

Recognizing this, Gerhardt Hauptmann, the greatest of German dramatists, is about completing a play in which he has returned to his historical style.

The central figure is Charlemagne. The plot deals with a healthy and simple medieval story.

Hauptmann does not disdain to make his work a sort of fairy tale with wizards, enchanters, spell-bound maidens, who turn out to be princesses soon.

The treatment of the story is practical, and there will be no suggestion of the "problems" of decadent modernists in it. The play also has rollicking humor in it, furnished by court jesters and clowns. It will be produced before Christmas.

STRIKE RIOTS.

DISORDERS OCCUR IN ITALIAN CITY.

CARBINEERS TAKE HAND IN THE STRIKE IN MILAN.

Fire Upon Mob Which Had Attacked Men Who Had Taken Places of Striking Gas Workers—Newspapers Fail to Appear and Nearly All Stores Are Closed.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MILAN (Italy) Oct. 12.—Work in all the factories has ceased and traffic on the street railways was stopped, as a result of the general strike declared yesterday, due to the encounter between a mob of striking gas workers and a body of strike-breakers, in which the carbineers interfered and fired on the mob.

The railroads to the north are still running, but the newspapers of this city did not appear today, and nearly all the stores are closed. All public buildings and railway stations, as well as the shops, are guarded by troops.

The executive strike committee, in spite of the clamor raised by the strikers, has declared against a general strike throughout Italy.

WANDERING WONDER.

TRAMP SPURNS PRINCE'S JOB.

VAGABOND AND DAUGHTER ARE AN ODD COUPLE.

Austrian Wheels Baby Carriage 75,000 Miles, Wears Out 103 Pairs of Shoes, Wife Dies of Fatigue, and Still He Prefers to Keep on, and Refuses to Serve Bavarian Prince.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MUNICH, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "No, Your Highness," said Anton Hanslian, globe-trotter, to the Prince Regent of Bavaria. "I thank you for your offer, but I cannot serve under you. When a man has tramped more than 75,000 miles over five continents, and worn out 103 pairs of shoes doing it, what would the ease and monotony of the place of a forester be to him? He would be tortured by the lack of change for which he craves."

The Prince Regent saw the point and agreed that Hanslian was a confirmed vagabond. This man arrived here last week from Vienna, wheeling a perambulator, in which his daughter, a big girl, 11 years old, rides.

This oddity was a carpenter in Austria, when on September 12, 1900, he started with his wife and child on his travels. He was to walk on a wager through Europe, Asia, Africa, and the two Americas, with his baby carriage, and return on a circus manager's bet.

Hanslian's wife died of the fatigue of the road, after three years, but the little girl has thrived and seems to be bright and happy.

She, by the way, has outgrown or thrown away thirteen baby carriages. Her father is giving public lectures here, which have been patronized by two members of the Bavarian royal family.

After a short stay, the wandering carpenter will take up his journey.

CAPITULATES TO DEATH.

Gen. Adolph von Buelow, Imperial Adjutant of Germany, Dies of Heart Failure.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

POTSDAM (Germany) Oct. 12.—Gen. Adolph von Buelow, the imperial adjutant, died today of heart failure.

The wife of the general died October 9. Her husband, who had been suffering from asthma, had a severe attack in the night of October 9. When she saw him apparently suffocating she cried: "The general is dying, so am I," and fell dead at the general's bedside.

RUSSIAN MONKS HAVE BIG FEAST IN SOLITARY CELLS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] To celebrate the feast of their patron saint, the orthodox monks of the Monastery of St. Alexander recently gave a monster banquet.

There were five hundred guests, who occupied tables in a great hall. The monks, however, dined each in his own cell.

At the feast 38,400 pounds of food were consumed with 4300 bottles of wine and beer. Among the items were 400 pounds of caviar, 700 pounds of preserved fish and 1000 pounds of fresh fish, besides tons of meat.

The monastery is one of the richest in Russia, and has an income of about $250,000 a year.

The property of the orthodox church is estimated at $35,000,000,000, which makes the Standard Oil figures look puny.

BRANDED A TRAITOR.

SENT TO PRISON FOR HIS BOOK.

SON OF FAMED SOCIALIST IS CONVICTED OF TREASON.

German of Prominence Sentenced to Eighteen Months for Publication of Pamphlet Advocating General Military Strike—His Fate Expected to Force Change in Plans of Party.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Karl Liebknecht, son of the late famous Socialist leader, has been sentenced to eighteen months' detention in a fortress on a charge of high treason, a result of the publication of his pamphlet advocating a general military strike in the event of an "unpopular" war.

That the sentence will force a change in the form of the Socialists' anti-military programme and methods of propaganda is admitted by leading members of the party.

The fact that prominent professional men in good standing can thus be punished holds out a warning, which the minor personages in the organization are scarcely likely to ignore.

While the fight against militarism will not cease, it will be carried on in some other form, more indirect methods being employed.

UNDER ONE ROOF.

MARLBOROUGHS AT A WEDDING.

ESTRANGED COUPLE MEET AGAIN IN LONDON.

Fashionable Crowd at English Fane Is Set Fluttering by Appearance at Nuptials of Duke and Duchess, Who, However, Do Not Meet Face to Face—Consuelo Is Nervous.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough should meet or be under the same roof, interested the fashionable crowd at Miss Anne Breese's wedding on Thursday, just as much as it did the bride and bridegroom.

For the first time since their estrangement, the Duke and Duchess appeared at the same function. With studious care each has refrained from going where the other was.

The Duchess, looking sad and rather nervous, and wearing a gown of subdued lace, went to St. George's Church with Mrs. Lewis Harcourt. The Duke had his determined-looking aunt, Lady Sarah Wilson, as guard and escort.

Husband and wife sat on opposite sides of the church. The Duke looked interestedly, but coolly at the Duchess, whose entry created a stir.

Instantly all eyes were turned on the Duke, but he seemed perfectly unconcerned.

Mrs. Hill Wilker, seated almost immediately behind the Duke, exclaimed in tones audible around her: "How pretty the Duchess looks today! Even the Duke cannot help admiring her."

The remark caused a flutter, but the Duke, whose ears it must have reached, gave no sign that he heard it. When the guests left the church, the Duke of Marlborough went to sign the church register as a witness. The Duchess, to whom the bride nodded as she passed to the vestry, went away, so the Marlboroughs did not meet face to face.

Nevertheless, the event has caused much chatter. It is taken as proving that the Duchess has determined to assert herself. This she did not do during the season, and so has lost ground with the "fickle fashionables" who constitute her set.

The Duchess went to the wedding with Mrs. Lewis Harcourt and Lady Ridley, formerly Lady Rosamund Guest, the Duke's first cousin, but they left before the Duke arrived.

The Duchess is on good terms with all the Churchill family except Lady Sarah Wilson, who is a violent partisan of the Duke and insists especially that he should have the custody of his two sons and the care of their education.

NOT ENOUGH WHEAT.

Prediction Made by German Professor Some Years Ago Is Being Verified.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The action of the London Flour Association yesterday in raising the price of flour six pence (12 cents) a sack will be followed by similar action on the part of the National Association of the French milling interests. Wheat has now reached an advance never hitherto realized since Joe Leiter's "corner" in 1898.

"The high price will come to stay," declared the manager of Corbeil flour mills, "but it is not due primarily to speculating. The fact is that the population of the world is getting beyond the supply of wheat. This was predicted by the German professor, Pohle, some years ago, as a thing that must happen."

Three trainmen were killed and much property damaged yesterday by the explosion of an engine of the Central of Georgia which was standing near the station at Reynolds, Ga.

BIG SHOE PURCHASE.

The Mammoth Shoe House Buys Stock of Bon Marche.

The trustee sale of shoes at the Bon Marche ended last evening. Because of expiration of the lease, and the proprietors of The Hub, who have released the store, wishing to move in, the remainder of the stock, amounting to about $30,000, had to be sold at a further sacrifice of 50 cents on the dollar, the purchasers being Ginovich & Streicher, proprietors of the Mammoth Shoe House. This firm will begin moving out the stock immediately to their own store.

Hitchcock Grants Us More Postal Clerks.

Listens to Pleas of Near-by Cities and Towns.

Western Business Keeps Up Country's Average.

Frank H. Hitchcock, First Assistant Postmaster-General of the United States, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday morning and interviewed Postmaster Flint and the postmasters of Riverside, Redlands, Long Beach and Pasadena, assembled in Mr. Flint's office, regarding their requests for additional carriers and clerks. After the conference Mr. Hitchcock said that he would recommend that the requests be granted.

One of the matters that Postmaster Flint laid before Mr. Hitchcock was the proposed consolidation of the postoffices of Hollywood, South Pasadena and Prospect Park, with the main office in Los Angeles. The plan outlined was to make a sub-station of each of the smaller offices. This would give free delivery, among other benefits. Mr. Hitchcock approved the plan, stating that he believed in consolidating small offices with one of the first class, as it improved the service.

"The one drawback," said Mr. Hitchcock, "to consolidating small offices with larger ones is that, in the majority of cases, there is always a great vacant district between the suburban town and the city. I do not think that such a condition exists in the present case, but I will have to inquire further into it."

When questioned in regard to additional carriers and clerks at the local office, Mr. Hitchcock laughed heartily.

"Do you know," he said, "that you have received perhaps the greatest number of new clerks and carriers of any city in the United States? In August, the department added five new carriers to the office here; in October five new clerks were added and now it has been decided that there must be five more clerks on December 1. Los Angeles has been growing by such leaps and bounds that the department at Washington scarcely knows what to do with Mr. Flint's requests, but he is so well versed in the postal business that we have become accustomed to accepting his recommendations with little question."

Mr. Hitchcock is deeply interested in the problem in Nevada. He says that the salaries allowed postal employés are not equal to the wages men can earn in the mining cities and that the lack of help is proving injurious to the service. He has just completed a tour of Nevada and says that he will endeavor to have new regulations made whereby the remuneration for postal employés will be on a par with what they could earn in other lines of work.

"It is little known," said Mr. Hitchcock, "that the postal business of the United States as a whole has increased during the last year 10 per cent. In the West it increased 30 per cent. while in the rest of the country it fell far below 10 per cent."

Mr. Hitchcock is making the Jonathan Club his headquarters during his short stay in the city and yesterday afternoon he held a sort of informal reception for prominent business and professional men of the city.

He plans to leave this morning for Nevada, although he stated that he had not decided whether he would go to Tonopah or Goldfield. He expects to reach Washington within the next ten days.

ROYAL PATIENT.

AUSTRIAN RULER GROWS WEAKER.

HIS CONDITION IS NOW CONSIDERED SERIOUS.

Unsatisfactory Symptom of Emperor Francis Joseph's Case Is Royal Patient's Indifference to What Is Going on Around Him and to His Own State of Health.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

VIENNA, Oct. 12.—The condition of Emperor Francis Joseph took a turn for the worse at noon, and it is now considered serious. The following bulletin has been issued by the official news agency:

"The coughing continues, though the Emperor spent quite a good night."

The Emperor was able to rise at his usual early hour this morning, after having passed an unexpectedly good night. He coughed less and slept more quietly. The catarrhal inflammation, however, has not diminished, and his appetite continues bad, although he takes sufficient nourishment to maintain his strength. His temperature was only slightly above normal, and at 8 o'clock, an hour after his temperature had been taken, the Emperor received his aide-de-camp, Gen. Baron Bolfras von Ahnenburg, and others, listening to reports which they read.

An unsatisfactory symptom of the Emperor's condition is his recurring indifference to what is going on around him, and to his own state of health, which his physicians declare is only slightly improved today. The report from Madrid that the visit of King Alfonso and Queen Victoria to Vienna has been postponed indefinitely is confirmed.

PROSPECTIVE NEW RULER.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BERLIN, Oct. 12.—The prevailing official opinion here is that if Emperor Joseph of Austria died in the near future, the transfer of the crown to Duke Francis Ferdinand would take place without a shock to the dual monarchy or without a controversy of moment arising between Hungary and the new sovereign.

The opinion is based upon study of the personalities of the Hungarian and Austrian statesmen, and from knowledge of the private affairs and policies of the Austrian court. The German government has taken care for years to be always in possession of information regarding the Austrian situation. During the present period of doubt concerning the result of the Austrian Emperor's illness telegraphic reports on the subject have been received by Emperor William twice a day from Schoenbrun Castle.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath

Bad Odor of Indigestion, Smoking, Drinking or Eating Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking, give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning,—that awful sour, billious, bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines, all the impurities there massed together and which causes the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner inside."

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

SWITCHMEN WANT MORE PAY.

Demand to Be Made That Will Affect All Yards from New York West Controlled by Union.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—The chairman of the Grievance Committee of all yards under the jurisdiction of the Switchmen's Union of North America concluded a three days' session behind closed doors here last night, formulating a demand for an increase in pay equal to that granted to the men in the Northwest.

The conclusions of the gathering will now go before the local unions for ratification. It is the purpose to ask for an increase of 5 cents per hour, time and one-half for overtime and double pay for Sunday work. One of the pleas forming the basis for the demand is that the East and Middle West work under more strenuous conditions than those in the Northwest.

The demand will affect all yards from New York west controlled by the union. President Holly said there was little likelihood of a strike.

VETERAN REFEREE WEEPS.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] George Siler, veteran referee of scores of smashing ring battles, broke down in Judge Kavanagh's court today and wept.

The case before the court was that of Siler against Mrs. Fred Bennett, and was the hearing on a writ of habeas corpus for Rosie Siler, 10 years old, whom the veteran adopted from the McKinley Orphanage at San Francisco September 16, 1906.

Siler's break-down came when the child said she preferred to live with Mrs. Bennett, with whom Siler left her some time ago.

The Value of First Impres

Do you know what's the first thing an employer judges in a man?

It's his personality!

Most important, of course, is the character appearance—

But almost equally important is the Attire—the man from the shoulders down.

A man may have a magnificent Personality—yet he can discount it materially by wearing ill-shapen clothes.

And it's mighty easy to have the discount clothes—for fully 80 per cent of all clothes are improperly cut and tailored, and a temporary shape resemblance is merely pressed into them by the Hot Flat Iron—(Old Doctor Goose)—to come out after brief wear—and make a fellow appear ill-clad and freakish.

But it's just about as easy to get the right kind of clothes—that add to and do not detract from a man's personality.

All you have to do is to see that the label "Sincerity Clothes" is in the suit or overcoat you buy.

You see, the "Sincerity" makers insure their loss of style or shape.

PENNANT WINNERS RICHLY REWARDED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Oct. 12.—President W. H. Yawkey of the Detroit American League club, tonight added as a gift to his players, for winning the American League pennant $15,000 to their share of the receipts from the world's championship series, making $36,937 which the local players will divide. The share of the Chicago team in the world's series is $32,960. Secretary Bruce of the National Baseball Commission, announced tonight that the total attendance at the five games which were played was 78,068, and the gross receipts $101,728.60.

The receipts were divided as follows: National Commission, $10,172.85; Chicago and Detroit baseball clubs, $18,311.13 each; Chicago players, $32,960.03; Detroit players, $21,973.56.

Had the American League team been successful and won the world's championship, on top of their capture of the American League pennant, Mr. Yawkey's gift, it is said, would have been $30,000 instead of $15,000.

President Ban Johnson of the American League said tonight of the series just closed:

"We were fairly beaten by the Chicago team. They played better ball. Of course, we of the American League are disappointed, but we feel that the Detroit team took the field in the series in the same condition as an over-tarined race horse. They jumped into the world's series right on the heels of the greatest championship race known in baseball history, and without any opportunity to recuperate from the strain of the season's fight, which you will remember was not decided until the last game, but two of the year. They certainly showed none of their true form in the games with Chicago.

"I do not think that Mr. Jennings during the series followed the generally well-defined rules of baseball entirely in handling his team during the series, but there is no criticism of him for that. It was his managing which brought them to the head of the American League."

RUBE ELLIS IS REAL SHINER.

Los Angeles, 3; Portland, 2.

Punk errors and sensational fielding stunts were the only bright spots in yesterday's struggle at the Chutes grounds, and some of the fans thought the Detroits and Chicagos were playing here this week. The Beavers have done better, however, than the Tigers did, for they won one game in five.

Rube Ellis, in center for Los Angeles, was the hot, luminous star of the day, for he ran like a race horse for two flies over in right field, and nabbed them out of the air in grand style. He is the real sticky-fly-paper kid, for nothing that gets near him, gets farther away. Bassey hit one of these and Donahue the other, and both were as much surprised as the fans to see Sticky hold them.

Bassey himself was a warm article over in left field, and had one beautiful, long, running-away catch to his credit. Casey at second was another star for a fine running left-handed catch of a high one back of first base, and the aggregation of fine nabs made one almost forget the careless errors.

There was only one run that didn't have a blunder in it, and this was the one the locals made in the fifth on Ellis's single and steal and Hosp's hit to left field. Both Hosp and Groom pitched good ball, but the boys behind them handed out several packages that made the fans weep. In the fourth inning, with one out, Raftery singled to center. After Donahue had given Ellis a chance to make a great catch in right field, Johnson hit a fast grounder to Bernard that he misjudged, and allowed to slip between his hands and feet to right field, Raftery going to third on this. Then Kennedy hit to left, scoring Raftery, and when Carlisle let the ball get through his feet to the left fence, Johnson scored. These were all the runs the Beavers secured.

The Looloos grabbed one in the same inning. With two out, Cravath singled to right, and a moment later ran to second, Croom throwing the ball to Kennedy to catch Cravath off the bag, and Kennedy muffing the ball. Brashear then cracked a liner to center, and Cravath scored. The next run came through Ellis and Hosp, and the final on Brashear's double to left, Ellis's sacrifice and Johnson's juggle of Delmas's fast grounder to short.

SEALS WIN ONE.

WILLIS PITCHES WELL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Carnes and Bliss between them donated a 4-to-2 game to the Seals this afternoon, in spite of the fact that the Oaks tied the score when the locals were out in front 2 to 1. Long's men came back with a couple of extra tallies and these were enough to count. Willis was wild at times and his delivery always gave the Commuters a chance. After a couple of disastrous innings, in which two hits in each gave two runs, the San Francisco pitcher settled down to his work.

The Seals were off in front in the second inning. With one down, Zeider walked and went to third on a sacrifice. Esola was hit and the two worked the double steal for the first score. Willis hit to left and scored the chief.

Oakland got away with their first run in the same inning, when Bliss singled, advanced on an out, and was scored by Devereaux. Heitmuller scored the run that tied up things in the sixth. He singled and after Eagan was out to Melchoir, he came home on a drive to center that was booted by Piper.

The seventh and eighth proved run-getting innings for the Seals.

In the seventh Hildebrand walked, took two more bases on Piper's hit and when the latter stole second, scored because Eagan dropped the ball. The last run of the day was the only one earned. Melchoir doubled, went to third on a sacrifice by Zeider, and scored on the throw-in after Spencer flied to Heitmuller in right.

POMONA ALL THE WAY.

College Pigskin Chasers Defeat Santa Ana High School Boys in One-Sided Game.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CLAREMONT, Oct. 11.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the opening game of the season, Pomona defeated Santa Ana High, this afternoon, with the score 19 to 0. The High School team put up classy ball, while the collegians played raggedly and made frequent fumbles.

The guards were the weakest points of the 'varsity line. Metcalf tried repeatedly for field goals, but was unable to score one until during the last two minutes of the play. "Bob" Spurgeon, the new Claremont quarter, was the star of the game. His sure passing, long punts, and speedy runs did much toward piling up the blue and white's score.

Culver at half played a good game, and made several substantial gains. At end Parker showed that he has the position cinched, all linemen were run from position, except the guards and center, for substantial gains. Metcalf and Halladay were sure ground gainers on tackle bucks.

For Santa Ana, although they never had a show to score, Tedford, fullback, and Vanderlip, quarter, played the best game. Tedford did the punting for Noble's men, while Vanderlip ran the team well and frequently made ground on his quarterback kicks. Penalties were often enforced, many being for failed forward passes. Tedford began the game by kicking off to Rogers, who ran in several yards.

After some scrimmage, Bob Spurgeon got way for 40 yards. Rogers annexed several more, as did Culver and Metcalf, on a tackle buck. Metcalf made a place kick from the 20-yard line, but Santa Ana was off-side, and the goal did not count. A few moments later Capt. Metcalf went over for the first touchdown of the season here, but failed to kick goal. Score, 5 to 0.

Pomona again scored on an exchange of punts when Spurgeon punted to Vanderlip, who tried to return the kick, which was blocked by Metcalf and downed on the other side of the goal. Score 10 to 0.

In the second half, during the first two minutes of play, Pomona scored again, R. Spurgeon getting the ball on a quarterback run within five yards of goal line. The next down Rogers bucked over. Score 15 to 0. In the last three minutes of the second half Metcalf kicked a beautiful goal from placement, Spurgeon holding, making the score 19 to 0. Each attempt at goal after touchdown failed.

"HANDS UP!"

RICH HAUL BY BOLD ROBBERS.

Charles Stack Is "Stuck Up" Near the Courthouse.

More Than Thousand Dollars Is Lost by Victim.

Strong-arm Men Busy in Other Parts of City.

Two daring masked highwaymen held up and robbed Charles Stack, a "tenderloin boss," at New High and Temple streets, rear the Courthouse, about 1 o'clock Saturday morning, and secured about $1200 in coin and jewelry. After the robbers had relieved Stack of his valuables they brutally beat him into insensibility. He was found half an hour later by a patrolman, and was sent to a hospital.

The audacity of the hold-up men has astounded the police. In the past year and a half the police records show no crime of highway robbery as bold as this. Despite the fact that several persons on the street saw the robbers stop Stack, he says no one noticed what was transpiring. There is absolutely no clew to the identity of the daring footpads.

During the evening Stack is said to have drifted from one end of the "tenderloin" to the other. He had drunk some liquor, but was not intoxicated. Several friends were with him most of the evening. The party broke up at a house on New High street.

Stack started south on that street, bound for home. As he neared Temple street he noticed two strangers, wearing plug hats and long black overcoats, approaching him. As he neared them they separated to permit him to pass between.

Suddenly an automatic pistol flashed in Stack's face, and there was a sharp command:

"Throw up your hands, damn you."

GET PLUNDER AND BEAT HIM.

Taken completely by surprise, Stack complied with alacrity. At that moment two drunken men approached. The highwaymen backed Stack against a brick wall, crowding close to him with their backs to the passing men. Stack felt the cold barrel of a revolver against the back of his head, and one of the highwaymen, with apparent familiarity, placed his hand on Stack's shoulder.

"Don't say a word or move or you will die," he threatened.

Then the robbers went through Stack's pockets. They took a diamond stud valued at $800, two smaller diamonds worth $200, a valuable gold watch, and more than $100 in coin.

Stack had been permitted to lower his hands. When his valuables had been taken he was told to raise them again. As he did so one of the highwaymen struck him a vicious blow on the back of the head, felling him to the walk. With blows and kicks the robbers then beat him into insensibility. His head was cut and lacerated and he sustained severe internal injuries.

Stack said the robbers wore black masks—neck mufflers pulled over the lower part of the face. Each appeared to be about 30 years old, about 5 feet 11 inches tall, and heavily built.

NO MONEY; IS SLUGGED.

Because M. Garcia of No. 729 Ducommun street had no money or valuables, a desperate highway robber beat and kicked him and left him in a serious condition on Ord, near San Fernando street, about 12 o'clock last night. The robber escaped.

Garcia was homeward bound from a store on Buena Vista street, when a tall man wearing overalls, a jumper and a black cap stopped him and demanded money. Garcia did not at first understand; then he held up his arms, indicating that he was willing to be searched.

The highwayman searched the pockets of the Mexican and then with an oath told him that he would teach him to go about "broke." With brass knuckles he struck Garcia a vicious blow over the right eye, cutting through the skin and fracturing his skull. The footpad then beat and kicked him, Garcia crying for help and fighting desperately.

At the loud outcry the robber gave Garcia a kick in the face and ran. Later a party of Mexicans and a policeman found Garcia in a pool of blood. He was sent to the Receiving Hospital. He will probably recover.

TAKE HIS PRIVATE PAPERS.

Masked with white pocket handkerchiefs, two footpads held up B. J. Studler of No. 1617 South Los Angeles street at the muzles of automatic pistols about 9 o'clock last night on East Washington street, between Trinity street and Maple avenue. One peculiarity of the holdup is that the robbers took only Studler's private papers from their victim. The police believe that they made a mistake.

Studler did not notice the highwaymen until one of them tapped him on the shoulder and told him to throw up his hands, saying that they would not hurt him if he kept "his mouth shut." He allowed them to search him. From inside pockets the robbers took several papers and letters.

The robbers spoke but little and after they had gained possession of the papers they told Studler to go east on Washington street and not turn around or they would kill him. Squads of patrolmen from the University Station searched the district for hours but found no clew to the highway men.

MEN LAID OFF.

Results of Harriman's Economy Orders on the Southern Pacific Railroad.

As a result of Mr. Harriman's economy order the Southern Pacific has laid off 300 men in Los Angeles and vicinity and the working day has been reduced from ten to nine hours. About $500,000 in construction work has been temporarily tied up. Some 4000 men in the Los Angeles shops are affected by the order, the wage reduced from $3.15 to $2.70 a day. Some hotheads are talking strike. The railroad managers say that the economy order was caused by hysterical legislation and agitation against the railroads, and the monetary stringency. The Southern Pacific must keep on expending to meet increasing business demands; but "make haste slowly and spend money less freely" is the order.

SELLING OUTSIDE STORES.

Newberry Company Will Dispose of Branches in Various Cities and Stick to Los Angeles Business.

An important departure has just been made by the John R. Newberry Company, grocers, through which it has arranged to dispose of its chain of six stores outside the city of Los Angeles. The decision was reached upon the recent return of Mr. Newberry from a long vacation in the East, and, as announced by him, is due in great part to his desire to centralize his activities in his five Los Angeles establishments. Mr. Newberry's health has been poor for the last year, and though in excellent condition now, he has decided that it is just as well to take life a little easier. To this end he has made this latest move.

These outside stores are at Pasadena, Pomona, Redlands, San Bernardino, Hollywood and Prado. One other, that at Riverside, already has been transferred to the Newberry-Parker Grocery Company.

SAME NAME, DIFFERENT MEN.

R. A. Murphy, of the Soldiers' Home, late locomotive engineer, and a veteran of the Second California Cavalry, is anxious that his friends shall know that he is not the Richard Murphy arrested a few days ago in this city. He happens to be well known, while the Murphy in trouble is not.

DETECTIVE STEELE HURT.

Detective Frank Steele was hurled from an electric car at First and Gless streets last night. His head was cut in a painful manner. Detective Ben McCann assisted Steele to his home.

CURE FOR ILLS.

AN INSISTENT AMERICANISM.

Dr. Jordan's Remedy for the Evils That Exist.

Tells Municipal Government Views to City Club.

Cowards and Shirks Real San Francisco Rascals.

Three hundred business and professional men of Los Angeles heard an address yesterday by Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford, Jr., University, at the weekly luncheon and meeting of the City Club. The company was so large that the main dining-room of the Westminster Hotel was pressed into service. There were special decorations, the Stanford pennant being used with good effect, while red streamers reached out from a central point in the large room.

Special guests were the members of the Stanford Alumni Association, and before Dr. Jordan began his address they gave the university yell with much spirit.

The speaker's theme was "Municipal Government." After speaking of abuses of municipal government in large cities of the East, Dr. Jordan said:

"In San Francisco, the real rascals are the small cowards and the small shirks, who have made the great thieves possible. At the last election of Mayor, the character of Schmitz and Ruef, their relation to the law and to morals, was just as well known to the people as it is today. Doubtless the Union Labor party, a minority of the whole voting population, was in some degree deceived or at least blinded by reckless partisanship. But the body of merchants and business men who consented to the election of Schmitz were not deceived.

THEY KNEW WHAT IT MEANT.

"They knew that the election of Schmitz meant a wide-open town. The town was already prosperous and wide open. Wide open means badly governed, corrupt and plundered. But they associated vice with prosperity, and a large proportion of them voted for it. To be sure, robbery was going on, but they are not stealing from me. They are blackmailing corporations and criminals, but criminals ought to pay for immunity and the corporations are growing rich in spite of blackmail. All this is a little price to pay for prosperity. If anybody wants good government, let them work for it. I know what is good for me.

"It was a favorite maxim attributed to Croker, 'that every city gets what is coming to it.' In other words, in the long run, every community has as good a government as it deserves. It is certain that it never gets any better than it deserves, and in that fact lies a great reason for opposing all needless extensions of collective ownership."

Dr. Jordan went on to discuss the principles of democracy, a form of government intended for the highest type of citizen—the man who can take care of himself, who looks down on no one as of a lower class, who looks up to no one as of a higher class, who has something to lose through bad administration and who has something to give to promote the common welfare.

THE UNDESIRABLE CITIZEN.

"The man with nothing to lose, the man who pays no taxes, in his political relations," he said, "is always an undesirable citizen. The unskilled laborer can never be a really good citizen, for good citizenship implies self-respect, and self-respect rests on the power to do some one thing fairly well.

"The economic need of this nation, East and West, is for more cheap labor, for more men without skill and without self-respect, who can be exploited even as our natural resources are exploited. But every one of this kind is a burden on our political institutions. These people stand for bad government, because as a class they have no interest in good government. They have not learned to govern themselves. Those from Europe we say soon become assimilated. Those from Asia do not.

DISTINCTION ONLY APPARENT.

"But this distinction is apparent only. The 'beaten men of the beaten races' of Europe do not become really assimilated in a dozen generations. To learn our language is not to acquire our self-respect. If we must have such people, those who frankly do not assimilate are best. They do not deceive us. They do not pervert or overturn our social and political structures. The Chinaman is a Chinaman to the last and we know it. The European slave remains a slave just as many generations but we don't know it, and we do strange things when we take him into equal partnership in our national business.

"Perhaps there is no remedy for this. There is no other form of government possible for us, and none other is possible for anybody on this continent. The needs of enterprise are insistent. The boundaries of nations are not waterproof and in time our citizenship may fall nearer the level of Europe or Asia. If so, there is all the more need for an insistent Americanism, for a more virile faith in the principles and purposes of Anglo-Saxon democracy. And the primal function of democracy is not good government but a training in civil affairs which will in the long run bring good government."

SOURCES OF TROUBLE.

Among the sources of confusion or corruption in municipal affairs, Dr. Jordan briefly discussed private control of public function, with the evils of grasping monopoly; public control of public functions, with the evils of irresponsible waste; Federal organization of cities, as though they were a confederation of wards; scattering of responsibility; influence of commercial trusts, manufacturing trusts and labor trusts—all of these tyrannizing over the individual man; lack of seriousness in our attitude toward public interests; overshadowing influence of national politics; neglect of the individual to make his ticket straight by scratching off the crooked names; substitution of attorneys of interests for representatives of the people; too much prosperity; too many people who lack the frugality and the industry which make continuous prosperity possible; lack of permanence in residence, because a man becomes a good citizen only after learning local conditions; evil influence of the spoils system; evil influence of imported discontent; evil influence of that part of foreign immigration which comes for better wages, for hopes of exploitation not for personal freedom; evil influence of the non-home-making population.

In closing, he said:

"How long will our republic last? So long as the spirit of the fathers is in the hearts of the people. How long will the spirit of the fathers be in our hearts? So long as the blood of the fathers runs in our veins. So long as the body of our people is descended from free-born men, whatever their nationality—men who above all other gifts of America, value freedom of thought and action, the rights of a free-born citizen in a land of freedom and order."

"DUTCH LUNCH" AS FAREWELL.

General Agent of Tonopah and Tidewater Road Honored on Eve of Departure.

F. M. Jenifer, general agent of the Tonopah and Tidewater Railroad, was tendered a "Dutch lunch" at the Hotel Hayward last evening by his friends of the railroad fraternity in Los Angeles. He is one of the most popular of the local railroad men, and his friends of the old Transportation Club were earnest in their expressions of regret that he is to leave Los Angeles and live in the mining districts.

Among those present at the luncheon were W. R. Alberger, traffic manager of the Tonopah and Tidewater; T. F. Fitzgerald, district passenger agent of the Texas and Pacific; M. F. Van Horne, traveling passenger agent of the Pennsylvania lines; Joe Stanton, district passenger agent of the Rock Island; E. G. Garrison, general agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; William Elier, city passenger agent of the Pennsylvania lines; J. T. Bate, commercial agent of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas; F. M. Saunders, city passenger agent of the Pennsylvania lines; Charles Phillips, city passenger agent of the El Paso and Southwestern; P. McGinnis, city passenger agent of the Southern Pacific; Allen M. Culver, agent of the Oceanic Steamship Company, who succeeded Mr. Jenifer in that position; Pearle Casey, city agent of the Chicago and Northwestern; Ed Halton, traveling passenger agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; N. R. Martin, district passenger agent of the Southern Pacific; H. E. Needham, general agent of the Tonopah and Tidewater; C. A. Thurston, general agent of the Chicago and Northwestern, and Morris Collins, traveling passenger agent of the Chicago and Great Western.

SEEING THINGS.

Delegation of Boys from the Orphans' Home Inspect the Plant of "The Times."

In charge of Mrs. Cross, their matron, about twenty-five boys from the Los Angeles Orphans' Home, at Alpine and Yale streets, were shown through The Times establishment last night. They are of the oldest grade of boys in the home, and, being readers of The Times, had often expressed a desire to be shown how the paper is made.

They were interested in everything they saw, but the natural bent of Young America was shown when they reached the door of the art department, and with one accord crowded around a photograph of the Burns-Gans fight. They discussed the merits of the fighters like real experts, and pointed out the different figures in the bunch of pugs in a way that showed their familiarity with the subject.

The next place of special interest to the boys was the pressroom. They have an inborn hankering after "something doing," and the roar of the presses, and the intricate combination of wheels and cylinders, led them to look on with open-mouthed wonder.

ALLEGED HOLD-UP CAUGHT.

Man Taken in San Diego Is Accused of Part in Robbery of Aged Los Angeles Resident.

Alexander Surberg, who was held up and robbed on Mission Road, near the Southern Pacific stockyards, Tuesday night, was found by the police last night at No. 215 Boyd street. Elmer Belk of No. 248 Richmond street, accused of robbing Surberg, was brought to Los Angeles from San Diego, where he was taken in custody yesterday afternoon.

Surberg, who is an aged man, was taken to the County Hospital in an unconscious condition Tuesday night by Belk and a companion. The latter pair said Surberg had been robbed. They left soon and were seen no more until Belk was arrested in San Diego, where an officer picked up Belk on suspicion.

Among Belk's effects was found a watch, valued at $250. He said he found it in Los Angeles. The San Diego officers notified the local police, and the crime was traced down. The police were unable to locate Surberg until he read in The Times that he was wanted as a witness against Belk.

"D.T's." ON CHAIN GANG.

Prisoner Arrested for Intoxication Suffers Tortures on Street—Barber Phelan Gets Down to Work.

Staggering as though stricken with palsy, Harry Bet, a member of the chain gang, had to be assisted into the Police Station last evening upon returning under guard from work with his fellow-prisoners.

An investigation showed that Bed, arrested on a charge of intoxication, had been sent to work while suffering from delirium tremens. The chain gang guards reported that he had been in a semi-conscious condition throughout the day and had to be carefully watched by other members of the gang to prevent him from injuring himself.

At the jail it was stated that Bet's condition had not been noticeable early in the morning when the gang went to work and that he will not be allowed to go out again until he is perfectly well.

E. H. Phelan, the barber convicted of brutally beating his wife, and who for three months had an easy time in jail, went to work for the first time yesterday on the chain gang. He was not compelled to wear a ball and chain. He spent the day guiding a big scraper used in grading Montana street.

DROPS DEAD IN HALLWAY.

While stooping over to tie his shoelaces, Charles H. White, 55 years of age, a laborer, dropped dead early yesterday morning in a lodging-house at Vernon and Boyle avenues. He had dressed hurriedly and had stepped into the hall, where in leaning over to tie his shoes, he pitched forward, dead. An inquest will be held Monday at the Pierce undertaking parlors.

RAMONA PARK ACTIVITY.

Althouse Bros., owners of Ramona Park, report brisk inquiry for lots in this subdivision during the past week. Three handsome bungalows are to be erected immediately and plans are under way for the construction of sixteen other substantial homes. The new car line has caused considerable activity in Ramona Park and vicinity.

PARTY AT THE MATINEE.

Mrs. Jefferson D. Gibbs chaperoned a party of young girls at the matinée yesterday, consisting of her daughter, Edith, and Lillian Rand, Frances Chandler, Mae Chandler and Constance Chandler.

FIRE IN BAMBOO STORE.

Bamboo furniture and ornaments went up in smoke yesterday afternoon when fire from an exploding gas meter swept the store of the Y. M. Bamboo Company at No. 520 Sixth street. The explosion and the spurt of flame sent occupants of the store scurrying to the street and before the fire department reached the place the flames had destroyed a large part of the stock. Water swelled the damage. The loss is covered by insurance.

DO YOUR MEALS FIT?

Do You Feel Snug and Comfortable Around Your Waist Line After a Hearty Meal?

Did your last meal taste deliciously good to you, and did you eat all you wanted? Could you have patted your rotundity in glee and felt proud of your appetite and of your good strong stomach? Do you feel rosy now because your last meal gave you no inconvenience whatever? If not, you have dyspepsia in some form, and probably never realized it.

If you have the least trouble in your stomach after eating, no matter how little or how much you eat, there is trouble brewing and you must correct it at once.

Most all stomach troubles come from poor, weak, scanty gastric juice that precious liquid which ought to turn your food into rich, red blood.

If you have nausea, your gastric juice is weak. If you have sour risings or belchings, your food is fermenting; your gastric juice is weak. If you have loss of appetite, your gastric juice is weak. If you have a bloaty feeling of aversion to food, your gastric juice is weak.

You need something in your stomach to supply the gastric juice which is scanty, and to give power to the weak gastric juice. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this very thing.

Now think; one grain of one of the ingredients of these wonderful little tablets digests 3000 grains of food. They are several times more powerful than the gastric juice in a good, strong, powerful stomach. They actually digest your food for you. Besides, they increase the flow of gastric juice, just what you need to get all the good possible out of every thing you eat. You will never have that "lump of lead" in your stomach nor any other stomach trouble after taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Then everything you eat will be digested, it will give you strength, vim energy and a rosy disposition. You'll feel good, all around your waist line after every meal and it will make you feel good all over.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you feel happy after eating a good, hearty meal. Take one or two after eating. You'll feel fine—then your meals will fit, no matter what or when you eat.

We want to send you a sample package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets free of charge, so you can test them yourself and be convinced. After you have tried the sample, you will be so satisfied that you will go to the nearest drug store and get a 50c box.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

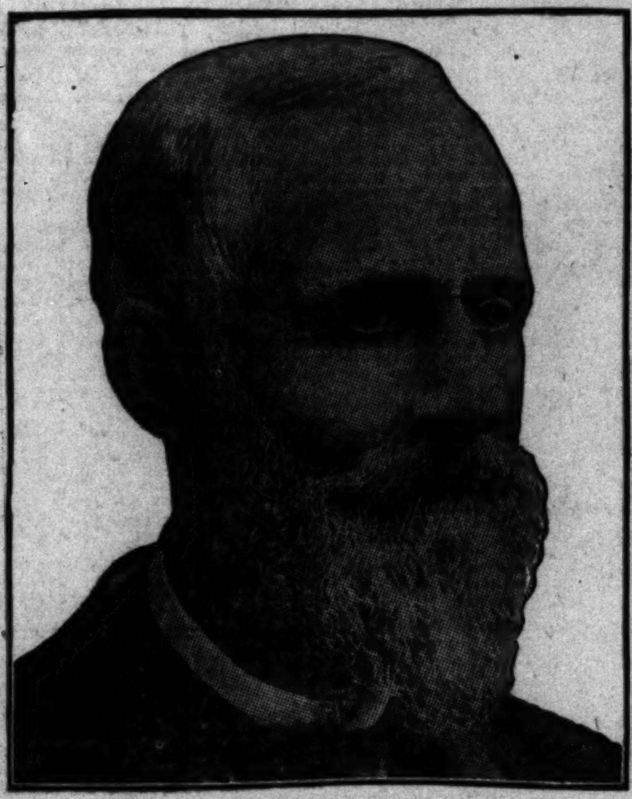
Prominent Temperance Advocate Indorses



MR. GEORGE FOSTER COLLINS.

Mr. George Foster Collins, of Lincoln, Neb., who is 73 years old, a member of the Presbyterian church, prominent in politics, a lifelong and strenuous advocate of temperance, has been greatly benefited by the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, and conscientiously recommends it as the best tonic stimulant for the old.

"I am 73 years old. Was born in Wayne County, N. Y., on March 21, 1834. Our family moved to Michigan shortly after this. I grew up on the farm, then studied law, was admitted to the bar, was County Clerk of St. Clair County, Mich., which office I held four years. Then was for a time Secretary of the Midland Railway of Michigan. I moved with my family to a farm in Gage County, Nebraska, in 1874; was a member of the County Board eight years. In 1890 was elected State Senator. Foster, my middle name, has been transmitted in the family for over 100 years from father to son. Mrs. Collins and myself are members of the Presbyterian Church of Lincoln, where we have lived for the last four years. We celebrated our fifty-third anniversary of our marriage on March 23d, 1907.

"From early youth have been a strenuous advocate of temperance principles and strongly opposed to the use of liquor in any form. Over a year ago I began to feel a gradual decline of the vital forces. I had read and heard much about the benefits to be derived from the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey by those in my condition, and was advised by an old friend and temperance worker who had received much benefit from its use to overcome my prejudice against liquor and try it. I took his advice and have been greatly benefited by it, and can conscientiously recommend all those passing into the "sear and yellow leaf" of life to take Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey."—GEORGE FOSTER COLLINS, 2509 P Street, Lincoln, Neb., May 15th, 1907.

is an absolutely pure distillation of malted grain; great care being used to have every kernel thoroughly malted, thus destroying the germ and producing a predigested liquid food in the form of a pale malt, which is the most effective tonic stimulant and invigorator known to science; softened by warmth and moisture its palatability and freedom from injurious substances renders it so that it can be retained by the most sensitive stomach.

It is an absolutely pure, gentle and invigorating stimulant and tonic, builds up the nerve tissues, tones up the heart, gives power to the brain, strength and elasticity to the muscles and richness to the blood. It brings into action all the vital forces; it makes digestion perfect and enables you to get from the food you eat all the nourishment it contains. It is invaluable for overworked men, delicate women and sickly children. It strengthens and sustains the system; is a promoter of health and longevity; makes the old young and keeps the young strong.

CAUTION—When you ask your druggist, grocer or dealer for Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey be sure you get the genuine. It is the only absolutely pure medicinal malt whiskey and is sold in sealed bottles only; never in bulk. Price $1.00. Look for the trade-mark the "Old Chemist," on the label, and make sure the seal over the cork is unbroken. Illustrated medical booklet and doctor's advice free. Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N. Y.

NDID "TOSCA" AT AUDITORIUM.

GREATEST OF LYRIC SCARPIAS.

[illegible] Ferrabini Scores Heavily [illegible] Title Role, While Tenor Pa[illegible] His Good Impression. [illegible] Generally an Unusual [illegible]

[illegible] lyric Scarpia that Los [illegible] has ever seen gave splendid [illegible] of his ability at the Audito[illegible] afternoon. In fact, no [illegible] or actor, save Melbourne [illegible] has ever depicted Scarpia [illegible] and completely as the [illegible] present consideration, [illegible] Arcangeli. [illegible] matter that the audience [illegible] most beautiful Tosca save [illegible] in local history, the [illegible] the performance may be ap[illegible] and her physical [illegible] and ravishingly [illegible] a large share of attention, but the surprising dramatic worth of Arcangeli's character is the loftiest feature of the entire production.

The expression of true dramatic sentiment by means of the voice alone is the property of very few singers, and of an infinitely small number of Italian vocalists, who content themselves, as a rule, with displays of beautiful tonal quality. This unusual faculty is one of Arcangeli's most reliable assets. Not in the heavier passages, where indeed dramatic accent is easily made, but in the quieter scenes, in which the villainous character of Scarpia is evidenced by various subtle means, did the astonishing shading of Arcangeli's voice show itself most completely. Hobart Bosworth, who sat near the writer, avers that Arcangeli is the most perfect actor that he has ever seen in "Tosca" save the great Victor Maurel—and Bosworth is the preëminent local authority on acting ability.

There is none of the familiar singer's posturing with Arcangeli, nor, when others are singing, does he stand uselessly by. His "business" is well nigh perfect. In that moment of ironic humor after Cavaradossi's torture, in which Scarpia, returning to the table, exclaims laughingly, "Ah, well, I have not dined enough!" Arcangeli's nonchalant, ironic deviltry was really the most intense moment of the entire scene.

Arcangeli does not possess a great voice. It is ample for the part, however, rather higher than the other baritones of the company, and is well used. He is next cast for Rigoletto, and should give a sensational performance.

Ferrabini is as classically beautiful as though she had just stepped from the frame of some master painter of her race. The heaviness of face and figure which appears to characterize most Italian women of the present day has not touched her in the least degree, for she is tall and slender, and of exquisitely refined features. Her voice possesses all the evanescent charm of youth, and if one may use the term in musical writing, it is absolutely fragrant in its freshness. It is perfect in quality, and of ample carrying power, though there were melodramatic moments in "Tosca" when she appeared to be covered up by the orchestra. She is to sing Margherita later in the season, and the part shrould be absolutely hers.

Ferrabini is also an actress of great force and vigor, and this side of her art is all the more preëminent when one remembers the placid ingenuousness of little Gonzales, stonily unemotional in even the most moving scenes of "Aida."

Ferrabini's stage business after her assassination of the tyrant was superb. The climax, in which she places the crucifix upon the dead Scarpia's bosom, was a bit of striking realism, for, too filled with horror to approach and lay it gently on his breast, she dropped it tremblingly, and, with staring eyes still fixed on the dead face, hastened from the room.

Parola deepened the good impression he made the other evening, and sang the tenor role with consummate finish.

One thing is still to be condemned in Parola—and in some others of the company; it is the habit of leaving a character to smile and fraternize with the applauding audience. This may be courtesy, but it is not acting.

The orchestra was well handled by Jacchia, and the settings were good, save that in the last act the arrangement of lights and certain accessories was slipshod and hurried.

Bergami, in the small role of the Sacristan, made his first appearance this year, and again proved himself a resourceful and thoroughly dependable buffo.

The patronage of the opera seems to be increasing, and it is to be earnestly hoped that during this week the really superlative organization will receive the attention it merits from all classes of society.

SELLS FARM TO SAVE BROTHER.

TEXAN TELLS STRANGE STORY OF STRONG DEVOTION.

Certain Youngster Had Got Into Trouble Here, He Auctions Property to Pay Expenses—Arrives Only to Find Youth Charged With Grand Larceny—May Gain Freedom.

Frank Sherman, a rancher, whose home is near San Antonio, Tex., was loser yesterday in a race from the Lone Star State to save his younger brother from arrest on a grand-larceny charge.

When the young man, Early Sherman, 19 years old, was arraigned before Justice Frederickson, in Police Court, the story of brotherly devotion came to light. It may result in dismissal of the charge.

Young Sherman ran away from home several weeks ago. He had suffered with a nervous disorder that had affected his brain. Before leaving Texas he had shown symptoms of kleptomania, it was said.

When Earl disappeared, his elder brother started a search for him, feeling that the boy might get into trouble. A little more than a week ago Frank Sherman found that Earl was in Los Angeles. With no money to pay his expenses, the elder brother put up his little ranch at auction, sold the place with the horses and cattle and hurried to Los Angeles.

Arriving here yesterday morning, he hurried to the lodging-house where his brother had been staying. But he was too late. The boy already had got into trouble, and in the afternoon detectives arrested him on a grand-larceny charge. It is alleged he stole an overcoat, a camera and other articles.

The elder brother told the story in Police Court, postponement of the case was quickly granted, and Justice Frederickson referred the young men to Sol. Thornton, the patron of Texans in California. The case will be investigated, and if it be established that the claim regarding the youth is correct, he probably will be released and allowed to return to Texas.

MACHINIST ACCUSED.

E. M. Holser, a machinist employed by the Los Angeles Interurban Railroad Company, was arrested last night, charged with grand larceny. The police say Holser stole a motorcycle belonging to G. W. Griffey of No. 1112 Georgia street. In his possession were found supplies for motorcycles and gas cars. The officers say more crimes may be charged against him.

LITTLE RUNAWAYS FOUND.

Vester and Lester McDermott, 11 and 10 years old, respectively, were taken into custody at No. 2505 South Grand avenue last night, on the charge of running away from home. They will be returned to their parents at Pomona. The lads say they told their mother they were going to Long Beach, and started out on foot. After walking to Los Angeles, they asked for lodging at the Grand-avenue address. They were taken in and the officers were notified. The boys say their home is at No. 714 Eleventh street, Pomona. Before they were sent to the Detention Home, they said they did not intend to run away; only wanted to go to the beach for a visit.

BURGLAR TAKES BOOTY.

Goes Through Rooming-house in Santa Monica, Carries Off Cash and Firearm.

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 12.—The gentleman burglar, who has been "doing" the beach at his pleasure and without molestation, leisurely went through the rooms of the Adelaide rooming-house this afternoon. He secured about $50 and one revolver and a few pieces of jewelry. Nobody saw the thief. He tossed things around quite lively in the several rooms visited, and departed as he had entered, unobserved.

VENICE, Oct. 12.—The seaside friends of Donald W. Wilkie are in receipt of the announcement of his engagement to Miss Katherine M. Einwechter of Philadelphia. The nuptials are to be celebrated on Christmas. Mr. Wilkie is one of the youngest men in Uncle Sam's Secret Service Department, being but 23 years of age. He is at present engaged in unearthing land frauds against the government. He made his home on this beach during a period of six months, when he was stationed in Los Angeles. He is now making his headquarters in Denver.

At Center street the pile-driver is hammering away at a lively rate, driving piles for the extension of the pier that carries the outfall pipe from the septic tank of the sewer system of Ocean Park. It is probable that the pier, when completed, will be at least 1200 feet in length. Expert engineers say this will result in a permanent correction of the sewer nuisance, which has troubled the beach for so many months.

CELERY MATURES WELL.

Tidings of the Crop in Orange County Show Good Prospects for the Year.

SANTA ANA, Oct. 12.—G. W. Moore, manager of the Celery Growers' Association, said today that the prospects for the year are brighter than they have been for several years. The crop has matured well. The growth has been healthy and reports from the eastern markets are encouraging.

The price set upon the first celery is 20 cents per dozen bunches. This same price was the starter last year and before the season was over the price went to 30 cents. The prospect is that 30 cents will be soon reached this year.

An estimate has been made of the acreage grown by the Celery Growers' Association and that estimate places the acreage at 5800 acres. Manager Moore, however, says he thinks the estimate is too high. Five thousand acres is the usual planting.

WALNUTS MOVE.

Walnuts are coming in faster than they did last year. The nuts are going out as fast as they can be loaded. The Santa Ana Valley Walnut Association has received word from eastern dealers to the effect that the walnuts received this year are the best in quality and pack that they have ever had. The association has shipped seventeen cars of nuts already this season, and the record for the first fifteen days of shipping was more than double last season's figure. The crop in quantity is falling a little short of expectation. The association expected 450 tons, but the indications are that the crop will be a little under that. Gowan & Willard find some estimates running short.

The price of 15 cents is holding up well; the Fay Fruit Company having orders ahead for five cars at that figure. The walnut men have no fear of a drop until the last of November, if even then. The foreign crop will not begin to have much influence until that time. The Thanksgiving trade is always good.

The association packing-house record for one load is held by R. J. Blee. He brought in one load that was worth $1000.

WHO?

BODY IS FOUND UNDER BLUFF.

TRAGEDY ON SHORE NEAR TO SAN PEDRO.

No Papers or Letters Are Left in the Pockets, but Name on Linen Indicates That Man May Have Been from Los Angeles—Apparently Dead Three Days.

SAN PEDRO, Oct. 12.—The body of a man, supposed to have been a suicide, was found this afternoon on the beach, about a half-mile north of the South Coast Yacht Club house. The only name found on the corpse was that of A. J. Jamieson in indelible ink on the linen.

There was a bullet-hole through the forehead. He had been dead probably three days. There was $8 in the pockets and a gold Elgin watch.

The man's height was 5 feet 6 inches and his weight was about 150 pounds. He had a good suit of clothes, and the undergarments were also of a character to indicate that he was a good dresser. The hat was of the size 6 7-8, and had been purchased from Hopkins at First street and Gladys avenue, Los Angeles. The laundry mark was "759." There were no papers or letters in the pockets.

The name A. J. Jamieson is given in the Los Angeles city directory as that of a metal worker, residing at No. 2714 Central avenue.

TOMATOES GO EAST.

First Shipments on the Way from the East Whittier Fields Profitable.

EAST WHITTIER, Oct. 12.—Shipments of East Whittier tomatoes to eastern markets have begun, seven carloads having already started on their way. These shipments mark the beginning of the real tomato season, growers having shipped their earlier fruit to the local canneries, where it brings but a third as much as that sent East. The price per ton on the carloads sent East was $25, ten tons being sent in each car. Shipments are expected to continue until the middle of the winter and, if the record of past seasons is any criterion, the price will be more than double that at the opening of the present season.

Mr. and Mrs. Abner Lambert of Brookfield, Mo., are guests of East Whittier relatives.

A. W. Swain, Dr. C. J. Cook, Fred Sargent, John Crook, Horace Baldwin, William Espolt and J. M. Randall have been elected directors of the Citrus Association.

The new church will cost more than $[illegible],000. The address will be delivered by Rev. Dr. Hugh K. Walker of Los Angeles.

FOOTHILL GAS PROSPECT.

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 12.—The Southern California Gas Circuit Company, which proposes to serve territory from Glendale to Sherman, inclusive, and thus cover Hollywood, Colegrove and Prospect Park, is meeting considerable encouragement and has secured several hundred contracts. Thursday evening a meeting was held at the justice's office at Santa Monica and Western avenue. Friday night another meeting of would-be consumers was held in Hoegee Hall, Vermont and Prospect avenues. The Hollywood Board of Trade will consider the matter at its meeting on the evening of October 21.

SOPHOMORES ELECT.

CLAREMONT, Oct. 12.—The sophomore class held its annual election of officers last night. The following were chosen: President, Ralph Lockwood of Los Angeles; vice-president, Miss Helen Armstrong of Phoenix, Ariz.; secretary, Helen McKeever of Santa Ana; treasurer, Paul Hardy of Redondo; sergeant-at-arms, Alex. Williamson of Pasadena, and for annalists, Harry Sloane of San Diego and Laura Rice of Los Angeles.

The class of 1911 held a jolly-up in the Renwick gymnasium tonight. About 100 freshmen were present.

The Imperial Ice Company is preparing to make improvements to the amount of $2000 to its plant on Main street.

FINE SPREAD.

EAT MEAT BY TON WEIGHT.

BIG BARBECUE FOR FORESTERS AT REDONDO.

Juicy Beef and Mutton Disappear With the Onslaught of Happy Appetites of the Visiting Members of the Fraternity — Programme of Sporting Events Is Carried Out.

REDONDO, Oct. 12.—High Court and Independent Foresters and their friends to the number of 10,000 today consumed 14,000 pounds of barbecued meat here. At least that is the estimate as to the crowd, while the bills for the beeves and mutton speak as to the quantity of the juicy meat provided by Redondons for the discussion of their guests. There was a joyous time for everybody, and again Redondo came in for a generous share of complimentary mention for the excellence of the appointments and the provender and entertainment. The free barbecue followed the last business session of the high court's second annual gathering—second since California Independent Forestry was divided into a northern and southern jurisdiction.

At the morning session the election of high officers was completed by the choosing of William Smith of Santa Barbara to serve in the capacity of High Auditor.

Appointive officers were named by High Chief Ranger Dickson thus: High Organist, Mrs. Ella Vaughn, Los Angeles; High Orator, George Coulsen, Los Angeles; High Journal Secretary, Mrs. L. Manchester, Santa Barbara; High Marshal, C. P. Humphries, Ontario; High Conductor, Mrs. M. A. Gould, Los Angeles.

The installation of the new high officers was conducted by Supreme Vice-Chief Ranger J. D. Clark of Ohio, who was in attendance throughout the three-day session and brought today's exercises and the annual assembly to a close this afternoon in a brief address on fraternity in general and the Independent Order of Foresters in particular.

In the competitive drill of the Guard of Honor the first prize of $50 was awarded to Companion Court of Los Angeles, and the second prize of $25 to Morris Vineyard Court, also of Los Angeles.

SPORT PROGRAMME.

An elaborate programme of sports occupied the forenoon intermissions and the afternoon hours, "sandwiching" the barbecue. This feature of the exercises was under the supervision of a General Committee, consisting of George W. Wood, chairman, and S. G. Dunkerly, secretary. The Committee on Sports comprised Fred H. Hughes, chairman; A. C. Gibbs and Thomas Vacher. The twenty-five events and the fifty-seven prizes were awarded thus:

The 50-yard dash for girls of 13 and under: Rose Franklin first, Jessie Welch second, Minnie Bowles third.

READING FOR VETERANS.

Bids Invited for the Latest in Fiction for Men at the Soldiers' Home.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Oct. 12.—A number of invitations were sent out recently to bidders for various requirements in the home. Among the most interesting of these, to reading members of the branch, is one for supplying the library with new books; bids on a list of nearly 500—principally the latest in fiction—will be opened on October 20. Other improvements to be bid upon are elevator in basement of main dining hall; the installation of hot-water-heating system in the treasurer's residence, and placing of metal ceilings in the general dining hall.

To John Nelson of Los Angeles has been awarded the contract for construction of a dining hall and kitchen as annex to Co. L (the old men's barracks), to cost $9600. Haas & Edinger of Sawtelle secured the award for erecting the morgue, at $4557.

Mrs. M. B. Fay, a graduate of St. Luke's Hospital, San Francisco, is appointed nurse, vice Miss Barry, resigned.

The Home Orchestra will give one of its concerts in Memorial Hall on the evening of Thursday of the coming week. Members from families of the neighborhood are to be found among the audience of these concerts, which are free.

Send For Free Sample Package Today.

Boils have been cured in 3 days, and some of the worst cases of skin diseases have been cured in a week, by the wonderful action of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. These wafers contain as their main ingredient, the most thorough, quick and effective blood-cleanser known, calcium sulphide.

Most treatments for the blood and for skin eruptions are miserably slow in their results, and besides, many of them are poisonous. Stuart's Calcium Wafers contain no poison or drug of any kind; they are absolutely harmless, and yet do work which cannot fail to surprise you. They are the most powerful blood purifier and skin clearer ever discovered, and they never derange the system.

No matter what you suffer from, pimples, blackheads, acne, red rash, spots, blotches, rash, tetter or any other skin eruption, you can get rid of them long before other treatments can even begin to show results.

Don't go around with a humiliating, disgusting mass of pimples and blackheads on your face. A face covered over with these disgusting things makes people turn away from you, and breeds failure in your life work. Stop it. Read what an Iowa man said when woke up one morning and found he had a new face:

"By George, I never saw anything like it. There I've been for three years trying to get rid of pimples and blackheads, and guess I used everything under the sun. I used your Calcium Wafers for just seven days. This morning every blessed pimple is gone and I can't find a blackhead. I could write you a volume of thanks, I am so grateful to you."

SEEK HIS REINSTATEMENT.

Friends of Suspended Ranger Ask That He Have Hearing—Monrovia Action.

MONROVIA, Oct. 12.—Business men and many of the larger property owners have petitioned that Forest Ranger Jesse Sevier be either reinstated in the service or accorded a hearing on the charges which caused his suspension a month ago by Forest Supervisor R. H. Charlton.

Sevier has been in the ranger service over four years and by his associates and immediate superiors is considered a good man. This year, in response to a petition by Monrovians, Supervisor Charlton transferred him from the West Fork station to the frontier extending from Santa Anita Cañon to Fish Cañon.

In the course of the season seven dangerous fires have started in this territory and on every occasion Sevier has been almost instantly at the scene and on at least two occasions has subdued conflagrations which threatened loss of life and immense private property interests besides the mountain watersheds.

His suspension four weeks ago was a surprise to his townsmen who appreciate his services. There is no desire to criticise Mr. Charlton nor to embarrass him in his work by the intrusion of local sentiment; but either reinstatement or a hearing for Sevier, is earnestly urged as a matter of justice to both principals in the matter.

WOODMEN'S FUNCTION.

Among notable local lodge functions was the rally of Modern Woodmen last night. It was in the nature of preliminary preparation for the arrival in November of A. R. Talbot, head counsel of the order, when it is hoped a class of 500 in this section will be adopted. An effective feature of the parade was the exhibition drill by the prize forester team of Los Angeles Woodmen.

BURGLAR BUSY.

The Gaylord residence on South California avenue was entered by sneak thieves yesterday afternoon in the absence of the family and robbed of a number of articles of jewelry. The rear screen door was cut and the doors throughout the house unlocked with a skeleton pass key. Contents of drawers and closets were strewn about the floors but no clothing was taken. A search of the premises revealed a plain trail of bare feet around the house and the authorities are of the opinion that a couple of boys were the miscreants.

FOOTHILL CITY BRIEFS.

Mayor J. B. Holloway will leave Monday for Hemet, where he will spend a week's vacation hunting quail. Mayor Holloway is also local justice of the peace and during his absence the office will be filled by Justice Glover of Azusa.

The Board of Trustees will hold a special session next Monday evening to hear the reasons why the property owners on J. I. C. avenue do not consider that the recent street improvements on that avenue were done according to city specifications. A protest against the acceptance of the work was received at a recent meeting of the board.

The Pacific Electric Company has a force of men at work double-tracking its line within the city limits. This is an extension of the work recently completed between Monrovia and Arcadia.

SAN PEDRO.

SAN PEDRO, Oct. 12.—The report of the customhouse here for the month of September shows the arrival at this port of 113 steamers, 24 schooners, 1 barkentine and 1 barge—a total of 142 vessels, having a net tonnage of 64,790 tons and carrying in crews 2618 sailors. These vessels brought 34,640,000 feet of lumber, 7,430,000 shingles, 400,000 shakes, 2,512,000 laths, 14,000 posts, 600 ties, 1260 poles, 75 piles, 84,481 barrels of oil, 1033 tons of grain, 610 tons of paper, 491 sheep, 4647 tons of merchandise and 10,468 passengers. During the month 1931 tons of merchandise were exported and 10,468 passengers departed. The receipt of 84,418 barrels of oil breaks all previous records at this port for that commodity.

Peter Durant, a local boatman, rescued two men shortly after midnight yesterday morning from death by drowning in the inner harbor. Durant was crossing over the inner bay in his launch when a skiff containing the men was capsized in launch and the men the water. Durant full speed ahead and men without serious Their names were not they were probably schooner in port.

IMPORTANT PROJECT.

AS FERTILE AS NILE VALLEYS.

TRACT OF FOURTEEN THOUSAND ACRES TO BE DIVIDED.

Former Blythe Estate Will Be Developed—Title Cleared After Twenty Years of Litigation—Suit for Divorce, Following Alleged Kidnaping of Child, Settled.

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 12.—A development project, involving the cutting up of the 14,000-acre tract, formerly known as the Blythe estate, along the Colorado River, and the selling of it in small farms to actual settlers.

This property is owned by the Palo Verde Land and Water Company, which, a year or more ago, purchased it from the heirs of the Blythe estate. The title had been cleared after litigation that had covered nearly twenty years. A. L. Hobson, W. A. Hobson and Frank Murphy of Ventura have the largest interests in the company.

The land is exceedingly fertile. In character it is similar to the valleys along the Nile. The Colorado River will furnish an ample supply of cheap water for irrigation.

The opening up of this large body of land will mean much to Riverside county. It will be subdivided into tracts of from five to forty acres, and the same methods of farming will be adopted that are proving successful in the Imperial Valley, which adjoins it on the south.

SENSATIONAL SUIT ENDED.

A final decree of divorce was entered today for Mrs. Elizabeth Swezea against Jay Swezea, well-known San Jacinto people. This ends a sensational suit, which was begun a little more than a year ago. Last September Mr. Swezea followed his wife and eleven-year-old child to Point Loma, where they had gone for a visit, and carried the child away with him. He found the boy at the wireless station, hurried him into a closed carriage and drove away, later holding him in concealment. Through her attorney, M. Estudillo, Mrs. Swezea brought suit to regain possession of the boy. She won, and also won her suit for divorce.

COMPROMISE EFFECTED.

Miss May Culbertson, a teacher who was discharged from the Auburndale school, and who, a short time ago, brought suit to collect the amount of her salary for the unexpired term, has agreed to compromise the matter by accepting $150, which is about half of the amount sued for. Miss Culbertson, it will be recalled, was brought into unpleasant notoriety a year ago through her connection with the Le Gaye divorce suit. Because of this, and because she had threatened a Corona man with a revolver for having made disparaging remarks about her, it is alleged, the school trustees dispensed with her services.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.

Marriage licenses were issued by the County Clerk today to Gilbert Scott Davis, aged 22, a native of California and resident of Murrieta, and Hazel Gertrude Warren, aged 22, a native of Massachusetts and resident of Riverside, and to Jacob S. Johnson, a native of New York, and E. S. Wilson, a native of New Jersey. Both are residents of Highgrove.

EXTEND PERRIS ALFALFA.

Many Fields in the Valley Seeded and Pumping Plants Installed—Vacant Houses Scarce.

PERRIS, Oct. 12.—Conditions about here today are declared to be better than they have been since the boom days of 1891. More sales of real estate in this vicinity have been made in the past ten months than in the ten years preceding, and old deserted ranches are again taking on the appearance of life and prosperity. Many fields have been seeded to alfalfa, and pumping plants have been installed. The present acreage in alfalfa will be doubled this fall. New settlers are steadily coming in, and the real estate agents are busy showing land to prospective buyers.

In the first nine months of the present year the cars of hay and grain shipped out from her show an increase of 23 per cent. over those of the same period last year. Last month the increase was 143 per cent. over that of September one year ago, while the cars of general merchandise shipped in September show an increase of 84 per cent. over the number for September, 1906.

For some time houses to rent in Perris have been almost impossible to find. Plans are now being made for several new homes. One six-room modern cottage is being built by Mrs. Anna Box on her twenty-acre ranch, recently purchased, two miles north of town.

VALLEY ITEMS.

Maloy Bros. have in their office a grapevine cutting 25 feet long, all of this season's growth. The vine is of the flaming Tokay variety, and bore luxuriantly with but little irrigation. For some time wealthy capitalists have been considering the proposition of starting extensive vineyards in this valley.

The question of incorporating the town is being discussed, and it is more than probable that such a step will be taken before another year passes.

Tom Scott, Santa Fé agent at Alessandro, who accidentally shot himself through the leg with a shotgun two weeks ago, is improving rapidly, and will soon be out of the hospital.

Miss Myrtle Marlar left Wednesday to spend the winter with relatives at Phoenix, Ariz.

J. F. Hook is spending some time in Imperial Valley.

CELERY SEASON OPENS.

First Carloads of the Fragrant Product Are Shipped from the Smeltzer Country.

SMELTZER, Oct. 12.—The celery season has begun with the shipment of two carloads to Los Angeles. The quality is excellent, and conditions are exceedingly favorable for a large crop and good price during the season just begun. B. R. Gerhart, who will act as agent for the association in Los Angeles, has moved to the city.

Residents of Ocean View school district have decided, after considering the matter in a public meeting, to hold an election soon to vote upon the question of building a new schoolhouse.

George Murdock, the onion grower, received an order this week from Dallas, Tex., for three tons of onions to be shipped to that city.

A decree of divorce has been granted in the Superior Court at Santa Ana to Mary A. Hoffman from Fred T. Hoffman, a rancher, residing near Bolsa.

BRIDE-TO-BE PAVES WAY.

Arrives from Chicago and at Once Gets License—He Arrives Later.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 12. [Exclusive Dispatch.] George William Vertreas, a young man of prosperous appearance, arrived from Denver tonight and met his bride-elect, Miss Iris E. Whitney, 22 years old, who reached here from Chicago this morning. When she arrived she hurried to the County Clerk's office and prepared for their nuptials by securing in advance of her lover's coming the necessary license, even arranging with the clergyman that no detail of the ceremonial would be lacking when he should set foot on this soil. Both are reticent, merely explaining that they preferred a California wedding, and tonight Rev. Mark B. Shaw of the First Baptist Church tied the knot in the parlors of the Roanoke Hotel.

SPICY.

TWO HUBBIES TO HER CREDIT.

THIS IS BASIS OF LAWSUIT IN SAN DIEGO.

Man Plaintiff Alleges That Woman Defendant Induced Him to Accompany Her Out to Sea and Marry Her When She Already Had Husband Who Was Methodist Preacher.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In his defense in a civil action in the Superior Court, in which Frank M. Barr and McTurner, his former partner in the real estate business, and Mrs. Barr are in litigation over property matters, Barr contends that Mrs. Barr cannot secure any of his property. He gives as the reason that at the time of their marriage she had not secured a divorce from Rev. E. H. Henry Byron, a Methodist minister.

Mrs. Barr holds deeds to $30,000 worth of real estate, which Barr has accumulated since their marriage. He asks that the form of marriage through which they went in April, 1896, be declared void. Barr alleges that he was induced by the defendant to go out upon the Pacific Ocean in a steamer, and at a point two miles off San Pedro Harbor to enter into this pretended marriage. He avers that the defendant did this in order to evade and violate the laws of the State of California.

Rev. Byron, who is said to be the husband of the defendant, was at one time pastor of the Methodist Church here. Mr. Barr's attorneys state that they are confident of carrying the case through to a conclusion successful to the plaintiff, as Mrs. Barr had not been granted a divorce from her first husband at the time of the second marriage, and that the law provides that such a marriage shall be void whether performed on land or upon the high seas.

START DIVISION ANEW.

In commenting on the recent action of the Supervisors in denying the petition for the formation of Palomar county, the people of Escondido, who have been most prominent in the movement, say that this means only a temporary setback. Another petition will be started at once, which they expect to file with the Supervisors within thirty days. Of the country sections Mesa Grande, Ramona and Oceanside had filed protests against being set off into the new county, and it was by these and other sections of the country that the fight against county division was made. The city took no part in it. Giving the petitioners the advantage in every method of figuring they were 61 signatures short in one case and 146 in the other. Under the showing made the taxpayers of the new county would have had to pay taxes at the rate of $9.80 per $100.

BUILDING AND REALTY.

In San Diego the number of building permits issued in the past six days shows a gain of $53,179 over the corresponding days in 1906, the aggregate for this year being $87,325 as against $34,146 last year. The aggregate of permits issued since January 1, 1907, is $1,719,300. Last year at this time the total for the year was $2,351,890. There has been a notable increase in the number of permits issued in the last two or three weeks, being for the most part for cottages, calling for expenditures of between $2000 and $2500.

In the line of residence permits the most important taken out for the past six days was that by William Clayton, managing director of the Spreckels corporations, indicating an expenditure for the residence alone of $15,000. The site is at the corner of Laurel and Park avenue, on Florence Heights, overlooking the bay and the park, and the mountains beyond.

The Casterline Cutler Company has bought a half block at Twenty-ninth and Colton streets, where it will erect a factory at a cost of $30,000. At an expense of $12,000 the Benson Lumber Company will build a wharf at the foot of Twenty-second street, extending 500 feet into the bay.

The San Diego Electric Railray Company, a Spreckels corporation has taken out a permit of $25,000 for the construction of buildings and equipment at its power plant at the foot of E street.

SAN DIEGO NOTES.

For the making of important extensions the Home Telephone company has decided to issue $1,500,000 worth of bonds. Cables are to replace single wires in many places, and the country service is to be enlarged.

The Chamber of Commerce, through its board of directors and committees, is preparing for an excursion from this city to Honolulu when it is expected that a special steamer load of 300 or 400 will leave on a three or four weeks pleasure trip. It is asserted that the fare can be made below $200, all things included.

The San Diego Consolidated Gas and Electric company has announced a reduction of from 6 to 27 per cent in rates for electric power, March 1. A new 520-horse-power boiler is to be installed.

The directors of the Chamber of Commerce have indorsed the movement suggested by President Roosevelt for the improvement of the great inland water ways of the country, particulary of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers.

The death of Col. G. C. Robbins, here Thursday, removes one of the pioneer residents of the city. He was the first man to establish a lead smelting plant in Nevada, Col. He also established the first gold pen factory west of New York, at Detroit, Mich. He came to California in 1849. He was one of the first Mayors of Portland, Or. While in Missouri he founded the town of Troy. By occupation he was a mining engineer, and was well known among mining men along the Coast. He leaves two sons, Frank Robbins of Los Angeles and Charles P. Robbins of Spokane, and one daughter, Miss Mary Robbins of this city.

GREAT DISCOVERY

The Medical Fraternity Puzzled Over the Wonderful Success of the New Treatment for Consumption.

Improvement and discovery is the order of the age, especially in the treatment of diseases formerly considered incurable.

The latest and most important discovery of the century is attracting wide-spread attention, and the medical profession is greatly puzzled over the marvelous results obtained through the agency of a new treatment for all diseases of the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes.

The new discovery is the culmination of long years of scientific study and investigation by eminent physicians of known ability and experience in the treatment of tubercular troubles. It has been used and tested in private practice by some of the most prominent physicians in this country for several years and the permanent results obtained have been of such a marvelous nature as to astonish the entire medical profession.

In all cases of consumption and chronic lung trouble, the new treatment causes immediate and decided improvement in weight and strength. It restores the appetite, allays fever and stops night sweats.

Some of the results already reported border on the miraculous. Mild, or incipient cases readily and quickly yield to the treatment. In severe cases marked improvement is soon noticed and even patients in the advanced stages of consumption have been restored to their former health and activity.

If anyone dear to the reader is afflicted with the dreaded destroyer, consumption, the sufferer should be told of the new discovery. The treatment is entrusted only to skilled physicians who have made tubercular and pulmonary diseases a specialty.

Further information regarding the new discovery, known as The Myers Treatment, can be obtained by calling at 529½ South Broadway, Los Angeles, where the physician in charge will carefully diagnose cases free of charge.

(This article discusses educational principles of far-reaching importance to all prospective business college students.)

Educational Logic

PROPOSITION 1. THE PRINCIPLE OF MATHEMATICS AS APPLIED TO ARITHMETIC IS THE SAME IN ALL TEXTS OR METHODS OR "SYSTEMS" OF ARITHMETIC.

Admitting that some texts or systems are better than others, or that "all are good," but that proficiency in arithmetic can be acquired through any one of the texts or systems, there can be no logical reason why a school should maintain several "departments" of arithmetic. Three arithmetic departments, for instance, each with its beginning, intermediate, and advanced sections, with probable subdivisions, making nine or more classes a day—surely this would be confusion and dissipation.

PROPOSITION 2. THE PRINCIPLE OF PHONETICS AS APPLIED TO SHORTHAND IS THE SAME IN ALL TEXTS OR SYSTEMS OF PHONETIC SHORTHAND.

Whether we assume, (a) that some systems are better than others, or (b) that "all are good," but (c) that proficiency in shorthand can be acquired through any one of the systems, there is no logical reason why a school should endeavor to maintain several "departments" of shorthand.

ILLUSTRATION 1. A shorthand school, or department proper, in which only one system is taught, must maintain at least (a) two beginning grades, (b) two intermediate grades, (c) two advanced grades, (d) three dictation grades. Assuming that each section has only three recitation periods a day, the nine sections mentioned would aggregate twenty-seven recitation periods requiring the teacher's services, besides the individual and incidental work necessary, such as starting beginners, giving tests, grading papers, correcting exercises, etc.

THIS SCHEDULE SUGGESTS THE MINIMUM OF WORK AND ATTENTION NECESSARY TO CONDUCT PROPERLY ONE COMPLETE DEPARTMNT OF SHORTHAND IN A SCHOOL CONCENTRATING ON ONE SYSTEM.

ILLUSTRATION 2. By way of contrast, let the reader or prospective student imagine the same school in the same a-partments trying to conduct two to five de-partments of shorthand, thus multiplying the work and attention required in proportion to the number of systems taught—in fact more—for the confusion resulting adds at least twenty-five per cent. to the teachers' task, even assuming that the teaching force has been multiplied by the number of systems or "departments"—WHICH NEVER IS THE CASE.

SOME FACTS WORTH CONSIDERING.

FACT 1. The Woodbury has demonstrated the merits of the GREGG shorthand—has made it popular in this city, and created a demand for it.

FACT 2. Old-line schools who have heretofore strenuously opposed the Gregg system are now advertising Gregg "departments."

FACT 3. These so-called "departments" in the old-line schools are at present mere SIDE ISSUES—to hold trade. The prospective GREGG student is unwise in TAKING or BEING taken as a side issue.

FACT 4. To conduct three to five "departments" in Arithmetic, or Grammar, or Penmanship, would be educationally inconsistent and unscientific. THE SUBJECT OF SHORTHAND IS NO EXCEPTION.

FACT 5. The Woodbury does not undertake to maintain THREE to FIVE confusing and conflicting "departments" in SHORTHAND to correspond with the various POLY-position systems published. It conducts ONE strong, up-to-date DEPARTMENT of shorthand, teaches ONE one-position SYSTEM of shorthand—the GREGG—thus concentrating the students' and teachers' efforts, preventing divergent activities, avoiding distracting influences, steering clear of petty jealousies and disputations among pupils and teachers, and, in every way, fostering conditions that make for "THE SUCCESS OF THE STUDENT" which is the school's motto.

Should the Woodbury ideas and methods appeal to you, we shall welcome you cordially. You will find our school vibrant with ENTHUSIASM and LIFE. Our teachers are strong, helpful, sympathetic, INSPIRING. You will receive an impetus successward that will last through life. Upon graduation some business office will want you at a good salary.

Do not hesitate to call, write or telephone for catalogue and information. We shall not annoy you with solicitor or "calls."

THE NEW WALL BED

Architects, builders and contractors are invited to call and examine the new wall bed, especially adapted to apartments, hotels and residences, which an inventor in Los Angeles has perfected. It is so complete in design and construction that it is at once a thing of wonder and admiration. Artistic, hygienic, easy to operate, and with-all a space saver, requiring only twelve inches of space in the closet; a condition of absolute necessity in all up-to-date buildings.

It stands as a masterpiece of mechanics. It is really the solution of a knotty problem in mechanics or statics, so accurate, that its adjustment is absolutely minute and correct. This wall bed will prove of deep interest to Architects, Contractors, Builders, and lessees of apartment hotels, also to builders of residences.

When the bed is in position in the wall no one would ever surmise there was such an article in the room. One sees in the wall a mirror, and on each side an ornamental electric bracket. Taking hold of the bracket, a very slight effort brings the bed down. At the top is now seen a chain; pulling this down, there comes to view the headboard with brass grills attached, the rear closure that is hidden in the auxiliary recess in the closet above the bed, which slides vertically downward into position, locking itself automatically when the bed is complete.

There is not an objection to be found in its construction. It is simple, durable and positively a bed, easy to operate, thoroughly safe, as well as entirely sanitary, and can be operated by a child.

Orders are now being taken for the new wall bed at the office of G. D. EDMONDS, Manager, 502-503 Security Building, Fifth and Spring. Home phone F1371.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Yesterday was a day of snap and vigor in the open market and among the large produce dealers. Things were all cleaned up. The week, as a whole, was a very good one. Some very large sales were made and high prices generally prevailed.

Eggs—Day's receipts were 54 cases. A smaller amount than was received on any other day during the entire week. Unless receipts are heavier Monday, an advance in prices is expected, notwithstanding the fact that eastern shipments are arriving in large quantities. Offerings on 'change were very light and none accepted.

Cheese—No receipts. The stock on hand is large an[illegible]

Butter—Day's receipts at 11,228 pounds. The butter situation is a very perplexing one. Dealers all made an advance in the selling price Saturday morning. Offerings were few and no sales were recorded.

Potatoes—Day's receipts 2063 sacks. As rapidly as they arrive they are placed in storage. The price remained the same yesterday with a slight indication of weakness.

Onions—Day's receipts, 40 sacks. A carload fancy Colorado was sold at 1.85, which is considered very low. No radical changes took place during the week in the onion market.

Beans—Day's receipts, 4 sacks. There is a much better outlook now than there was a week ago, and the harvests throughout the southern portion of the State are far exceeding expectations, although short as compared with those of last year.

Sweet potatoes—Day's receipts, 50 sacks. This variety of the potato, this year, is very large, sound and well colored. The prices continue the same. Offers were light.

Vegetables were very plentiful. Some perfect celery root sold at 65 cents a dozen. Eggplant was well cleaned up. A few oyster plants moved freely. Fresh onions and radishes sold well. Carrots and turnips were in demand. Some exceptionally fine celery from the Santa Ana district sold at 75 cents. Brussels sprouts went at 7 cents a pound. The cucumber glut continues, and tomatoes are in over-supply.

In fruits no changes were made in quotations. Very fine Permain apples, grown at Downey, are being brought in and packed for winter storage, as well as for immediate use. Bellefleurs were a trifle steadier. Colorado Jonathans were offered in large quantities, but found no buyers. Grapes were cleaned out by noon. Muscats, as usual, had the principal call with Tokays a very close second. There are more Mission grapes coming in daily. Concords are almost off the market.

For the first time in two weeks there was a glut of fish. They were so plentiful that very many had to be placed in storage. Several large Jewfish were brought from the Redondo fisheries. Halibut, smelt and yellowtail were in excess of the demand. Lobsters were so plentiful that they could not be disposed of.

Poultry quotations remain the same.

EAST IS TO BLAME.

Higher Quotations There Result in Advance in Price of Butter Here. Large Storage Supply.

Once again butter has been advanced 5 cents for a two-pound roll. This had been expected to happen for the past four or five days. It followed higher quotations in the East.

The grocer is now forced to pay 75 cents a pound and the retail consumer 90 cents. This is still 10 cents less than was paid last year when butter was hard to obtain at $1 a roll.

There are several very good reasons for the advance. In New York there was an advance of a cent a gallon on milk and of 10 cents on cream. This immediately boosted the butter prices here. In Chicago, the Elgin board advanced butter to 30½ cents a pound, or 62 cents a roll. When this butter is shipped to Los Angeles, it cannot profitably be sold for less than 75 cents.

Cream has gone up fractionally and the cheapest will be at least $1.10 a gallon. The demand has been very large. From now until the rains set in there is very little green fodder to be found for the cows, and farmers are obliged to buy feed, which makes milk production very much more expensive, of course, and the quality of the cream is not as good.

The butter in cold storage on the first day of this month was about 2,000,000 pounds. Last year at this time there was only two-thirds as much on hand.

SLEEPY.

NEITHER BULLS NOR BEARS ARE ACTIVE.

BUSINESS was very dull on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange yesterday. Light trading was carried on in Associated Oil, 60 shares selling at 27.25@27.37½. The close was at 27.25@27.50. Three thousand shares of Olinda Land were sold at 14, on buyer sixty contracts, the stock closing at 12½@14.

On the mining call a feature was the sale of two Mauna Loa "bonds," as a new stock is named, at $17. This stock was only listed recently. It closed with $16.00 bid, and none offered. One hundred shares of Goldfield Consolidated were sold at $5 flat. Johnnie Consolidated was traded in to the extent of 4000 shares at 9⅝@9¾, while 1000 shares additional sold at 10⅛ on a buyer sixty contract. The close was at 9⅝@10. Consolidated Mines sold at 3⅝, on a buyer thirty contract, 5000 shares being handled.

STILL ON DECLINE.

Mining Share Market Erratic on Los Angeles-Nevada Exchange, With Lower Prices Prevailing.

The local mining share market on the Los Angeles-Nevada Mining Exchange was erratic and continued dropping yesterday, several of the mining stocks showing even greater losses than on the previous day. A total of 19,900 shares of stock changed hands, mostly in the cheaper class of securities.

One hundred shares of Goldfield Consolidated were sold at 4.90, the lowest level this stock has reached thus far. No quotations were posted at the end of the call.

Florence broke badly, selling on seller ten contracts at 2.10@2.20; 300 shares changing hands. The close was at 2.20 bid, showing a loss of 80 points compared with the close Friday. The stock recovered slightly after the call, 2.30 being bid informally.

Johnnie Consolidated sold at 10@9⅝, and closed without a quotation. Daisy was handled to the extent of 1500 shares at 49@50, and the stock closed at 50@53, holding its position fairly well in the midst of the general slump.

Jumbo Extension was bid for at 97, which shows a decline of 15 points off the close of Friday morning. None was offered. Combination Fraction was quoted at 86 bid and none offered. This stock also showed no loss on Friday's quotations.

DUCKS IN DEMAND.

The wild duck season is now in full swing and poultry dealers of the city are getting their regular allowances of thirty-five every day. Most of them are of the canvasback variety, but there are a very few teal. The ducks bring from $5 to $12 a dozen and the downtown cafes are willing to take all they can obtain at that price. Imperial Valley is perhaps the heaviest shipper. Many ducks are snared there and sent in alive. Other game, and especially rabbits, has been fairly plentiful and sells well. A rabbit, when dressed, retails at 25 cents.

NEW YORK MARKET.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—The uneasy feeling which has been gathering in the stock market during the week eventuated in a sharp spasm of liquidation today, which gave a demoralized tone to trading. The publication of an alleged order issued by E. H. Harriman for cutting down expenses in all departments of the railroad systems under his control, owing to the stringency of the money market, was the sole factor. Mr. Harriman's denial of having issued this order and his assertion that sustained pressure of traffic on the railroad lines concerned would preclude the cutting down of operating forces had but little influence in correcting the demoralization of the market. The favorable bank statement had but a slight effect in the same direction and the closing tone was much unsettled and irregular at material declines from last night's figures and at low prices for the year in many instances.

Union Pacific touched 118⅝, compared with 122⅞ last night, and 120¼ at the low level in March last. Closing price today was 119⅝. Stocks were tumbled on the market indiscriminately in the condition of alarm existing, and the lack of any bid in the market in some instances necessitated heavy sacrifices and violent declines. It was believed that holdings of important stocks were being forced upon the market at a sacrifice and support was apparently withdrawn, until the wave of liquidation should have spent its force. The uncovered bears furnished the principal source of the demand and they bought freely to reap the large profits yielded by the extent of the declines. The small loss in cash by the statement was in accordance with expectations and the reduction of deposits.

Liabilities by the loan contracting was sufficient to yield a net increase in the surplus showing of comfortable proportions. With rates for time loans and for mercantile paper above 6 per cent., however, and with premiums in many cases which add substantially to the rate, the stringency of the money market continues a factor not to be avoided. Loan brokers report some offers by correspondents of foreign bankers, but there are practically no supplies from the local banks. Foreign exchange also continued to advance today. Bonds were weak. Total sales par value, $1,242,000. United States 2's registered have declined ⅛; coupons ⅛ and 4's ¼ per cent. on call during the week.

SAN FRANCISCO LIST.

[Exclusive service to The Times by the Los Angeles Stock Brokerage Company, members of the Los Angeles-Nevada Mining Exchange.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—There was heavy liquidation on the mining market this morning, large blocks of Florence being dumped on the market, hammered this favorite issue down to 1.90 bid, recovering on the close to 2.52½@2.55, which was 45 points below yesterday's quotation. Daisy and Combination Fraction held steady at former quotations, while Goldfield Consolidated showed a gain of ½ points. In the Tonopah camp, Montana and Belmont were the heaviest losers, dropping 22½ and 12 points respectively. The Bullfrogs and Manhattans were dull and heavy. Following are the closing quotations of the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board, together with the regular call sales:

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—A strong demand for cash wheat, which was reflected in the price of options, caused a strong wheat market here today. At the close December wheat was up 1⅝@2⅛c. Corn was 2⅛@2¼c higher. Oats were up ⅝c. Provisions were 2½@7½c higher. The wheat market opened somewhat easier because of increased receipts in the Northwest, but within a few minutes after the opening a strong buying demand sent up prices sharply, and the market continued to gain in strength, the December option touching 1.06⅝ and making a new high mark for the season. The demand for cash wheat was strong and higher, and the sales of two carloads of cash red winter wheat here put the shorts to flight, and they sought cover in feverish fashion. A report that Italy and Austria-Hungary were about to reduce the import duties also stiffened prices materially. The fact that rain was reported from Australasia, where it was badly needed, was comparatively ignored by the market. December wheat opened a shade to ⅛c lower at 1.04⅛@1.04⅜, sold between 1.04⅛ and 1.06⅝, and closed steady at 1.06¼@1.06⅜. Reports of a killing frost all over Iowa and a heavy frost in Kansas, Missouri, and the Ohio Valley, along with the bulge in wheat, caused a boom in the corn market, which closed strong. December corn opened unchanged to ⅛c higher at 61⅛ to 61¼c, sold between 61c and 63⅛@63¼c, and closed at the high price of the day. Local receipts were 214 cars, with 21 of contract grade. Oats participated in the advance of wheat and corn, but there was no increase in the volume of trade, which has been light for some days. The demand for cash oats was poor. December oats opened ⅛c higher, at 54⅝c, sold between that figure and 55¼c and closed at 55⅛@55¼c. The provisions market was active, there being large buying of the January products. At the close January pork was 7½c higher at 17.00; lard was up 2½c at 9.07½, and ribs were 7½c higher at 8.22½. Estimated receipts for Monday are: Wheat, 52 cars; corn, 514 cars; oats, 330 cars; hogs, 37,000 head.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour was firm; winter patents, 4.65@5.10; straights, 4.25@4.92½; spring patents, 5.40@5.75; straights, 4.60@4.75; bakers, 3.00@4.30; No. 2 spring wheat, 1.15@1.18; No. 3, 1.03@1.08; No. 2 red, 1.03@1.04¾; No. 2 corn, 63⅛@63¼; No. 2 yellow, 64½@64⅝; No. 2 oats, 54½; No. 2 white, 52@55; No. 3 white, 50; No. 2 rye, 85@86; good feeding barley, 1.02@1.06; No. 1 northwestern flaxseed, 1.20½; prime timothy seed, 4.30; clover, contract grades, 17.00; short ribs, sides (loose,) 7.75@7.80; mess pork, per bbl., 14.50@14.60; lard, per 100 lbs., 9.25; short clear sides (boxed,) 8.25@8.50.

Boston Copper Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

BOSTON, Oct. 12.—Liquidation in the copper market was renewed at the opening. The market declined sharply, particularly in specialties. Trading was active and orders were well distributed. Under the continuance of heavy liquidation, new low records were made. Stock was pressed for sale in considerable volume. Although there was no wholesale slaughtering of prices, the market closed weak. It is a liquidation market, and it must run its course before a sustained improvement can be expected, is the general comment. The closing quotations were as follows:

[illegible]ATION IN [illegible]AGILL CASE.

[illegible] Adduced by the State.

[illegible] Relations Before [illegible] Wife's Death.

[illegible] by Fay Paid [illegible] by Banker.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.] [illegible] Oct. 12.—[Exclusive [illegible] developments that [illegible] came today [illegible] of Fred and Fay E. Ma[illegible] with the killing of Ma[illegible].

[illegible] the State gave evidence [illegible] that improper relations [illegible] between the accused couple [illegible] Gandy Magill was yet [illegible].

[illegible] in whose dry [illegible] of Clinton, Fay Magill, [illegible] was employed as cashier, [illegible] visits of Fred Magill [illegible] to see Fay, these visits in[illegible] number during the latter [illegible] employment. Murderock in[illegible] in evidence to show [illegible] bought articles of [illegible] on credit, for which [illegible] paid. The sale was made [illegible] Fred Magill paid the [illegible] nearly a month after [illegible] Pet Gandy Magill. The [illegible] charged to Fred at Fay's [illegible].

[illegible] testified that he directed [illegible] to tell Fay that she [illegible] a stop to Fred's visits.

[illegible] TEMPORARILY STOP.

[illegible] the clerk who took the [illegible] corroborated the testimony [illegible].

[illegible] time after that Magill [illegible] at the store, then his [illegible] as frequent as ever," [illegible] "Once or twice I noticed [illegible] home together at night." [illegible] told of Magill's pur[illegible] and of his numerous [illegible].

[illegible] of Clinton, testi[illegible] Magill always wore [illegible] couldn't put on her [illegible] glasses," asserted the [illegible].

[illegible] is in line with the [illegible] circumstantial evidence that [illegible] has promised to pro[illegible] that it would [illegible] impossible for Pet [illegible] herself. On the morning [illegible] glasses were found in [illegible] room.

[illegible] related the details [illegible] the Magill home on the [illegible] tragedy.

[illegible] was there," said Mrs. [illegible] the understood peo[illegible] her for Pet's death [illegible] couldn't have come to the [illegible] known she would be [illegible] Fred was nervous. He [illegible] down the room, now [illegible] "Damn," [illegible].

[illegible] BLAME.

[illegible] people would be [illegible]. The body of his [illegible] room upstairs. [illegible] the State de[illegible] seen going to her [illegible] on the night be[illegible] death. Fay Graham [illegible] family. She was fre[illegible] Magill home; she went [illegible] Magills; she assisted [illegible] of meals. The [illegible] that Fay Graham [illegible] Pet Gandy Ma[illegible] of her husband. [illegible] remarks Fay is al[illegible] said. "There would [illegible] in June even if Pet [illegible]." Fay is alleged to [illegible] questioned as to her [illegible] replied succinctly. "Di[illegible]."

[illegible] the heart of the dead [illegible] daughter, Marguerite. On [illegible] death, Pet Magill folded [illegible] Fay Graham. [illegible] don't you, Fay?" she [illegible]. [illegible]" replied Fay. [illegible] take care of Marguerite [illegible] to me."

[illegible] YOUNG WOMAN.

[illegible] Magill is easily the most [illegible] most enigmatic figure [illegible] remarkable case. Men do [illegible] her. Apparently no one [illegible] Fay Graham Magill, her [illegible] slightly older than herself. That there is genuine affection between Fay Magill and her stepdaughter, no one who has seen the two together can doubt. The influence of the older woman on the girl appears at times almost uncanny.

The State probably will finish the introduction of its evidence by Monday night. Two days at least will be required by the defense, which has subpoenaed forty witnesses. Attorneys for the defense were jubilant last night, while the State's representatives plainly were disappointed at the testimony of several witnesses on whom they had relied.

Theories of the State that Pet Magill was poisoned by arsenic or strychnine in beer and that she was led into a suicide pact have been abandoned. The former gave way before the investigation of two Chicago chemists who made an anaylsis forty-five days after the body had been buried, and the latter, it is said, was unsupported by any evidence.

The trend of questions yesterday indicates the prosecution will revert to the theory that Pet Magill was "chloroformed with the knowledge and consent of Fay Graham."

It is admitted that Fay was not in the house at the time.

PROBLEM IN CRIME.

Sixteen-Year Old Slayer of Little Girl Seems to Be Devoid of Moral Perception.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CAMDEN (N. J.) Oct. 12.—Seemingly as devoid of moral perception as was Jesse Pomeroy when he murdered Katie Curran in 187 Joseph Wood, the 16-year-old slayer of Ethel Nevin, 9 years old, was made the subject of a quick indictment for murder by the grand jury today.

As the boy has confessed his guilt, the only question to be determined is what his punishment shall be. It is likely that an early date will be set for his trial.

Young Wood's confession marks him as one of those abnormalities that set the mile-stones in record of juvenile crime. Sixteen years old, with a mop of unkempt, tow-colored hair, a small face for his age and wisened in features, the boy has evinced not the slightest indication that he has any idea of the enormity of his deed. He confessed because he was sleepy and wanted to go to bed to get his feet warm. After telling a story that drove chills through the policemen, Wood slept like the child he is in stature.

To the authorities, the Wood boy presents a problem. It is generally conceded that morally he is too deficient to deserve death and too dangerous to be at large. He probably will be found guilty of murder and then imprisoned for a long term of years.

SWINDLER TELLS HOW HE WORKED.

WOULD HAVE BEEN RICH IF MARKET HAD NOT SLUMPED.

Manager for James H. Oliphant & Company, and Former Member of New York Stock Exchange, Discloses Details of Manner in Which He Lost His Firm's Money.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—George H. Brouwer, a former member of the New York Stock Exchange and who was arrested last night, disclosed the details today of the manner in which he used in speculating $100,000 or more of the funds of James H. Oliphant & Co.

Brouwer was manager of that firm's office. He said today that most of his losses were suffered in speculating in copper, smelters, Southern Pacific and Interborough Metropolitan stocks. He is now penniless. He said:

"Besides being the manager for Mr. Oliphant, I was carrying a separate account of my own. Jay of the Carlisle was carrying a large account with us, and when my account was squeezed I would transfer some of Mr. Carlisle's holdings from the Oliphant book or I would carry some of his accounts from my own books to my employer's account. It was very simple the way I worked it, and it might have been years before detection came. Had it not been for the demoralization of the stock market I should be a rich man."

CHATS ON TEETH

BY

The Rex Dental Co.

SOLID FIRM TEETH

If the Alveolar Teeth which we supply were not solid and firm they would be a failure. Artificial teeth that are put into the mouth simply to fill up a vacancy are a delusion and a snare and a fraud in the bargain.

It has always been more or less of a mystery to people who read about this work which we do, for the first time, to know how we can make teeth stick in the mouth without using the ordinary methods such as plates or bridge work. That, of course, is our secret, but the fact that we do restore teeth and make them firm and solid in the mouth where there are two or more teeth to work with and that we do not resort to plate or ordinary bridge work is evidence enough that the work is satisfactory.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 1, 1907.
Rex Dental Co., Los Angeles.

Gentlemen: I am glad to assure you that the work done for me by the Alveolar Method is perfectly satisfactory.

Having had two bridges that were uncomfortable, and in every way unsatisfactory, I am in a position to recognize and appreciate good work when I get it. Yours truly,

MRS. A. O. JOHNSON,
501 Euclid Ave., City.

Sometimes the impression obtains that we perform a surgical operation to put these teeth in the mouth. We want to deny this most emphatically. There is no boring into the gums, no cutting of the gums; no implantation, pain or discomfort of any kind is connected with the work. When the work is completed the patient can leave our offices and begin using these teeth with perfect comfort, and he will continue to use them with comfort from that time forth. This is a remarkable statement and is worthy of investigation.

If you are the victim of loose teeth, decayed teeth or missing teeth, we want you to come to our offices and allow us to make a careful examination of your case. This service is entirely free and carries with it no obligation to have any work done.

If it is not possible for you to come at the present time, send for our book, "Alveolar Dentistry," which goes into full particulars regarding this wonderful achievement in the science of dentistry. The reading of this book brings us patients from all over America and Canada. We send it free of any charge, together with a book of testimonials from people who have had the work done and who will be very glad to answer any questions you may wish to put to them in advance regarding the Alveolar Method.

Western Union Oil Stock

This stock at present liquidation prices is the great buy of the day, we believe. It is a security always salable, and, therefore, is the resource of weak holders who need money.

Permanent large dividends have been paid for a long time on low priced oil contracts now expiring. The future with recent great contracts at much higher prices means undoubtedly increased dividends and a higher range for the stock. Western Union is a great Company, with a great property, with able and wealthy Los Angeles bankers, capitalists and oil men as controlling owners. No finer backing for an investment in all the wide field of investment today.

This bank offers you every advantage of other banks, and much more. We not only pay the highest rate of interest, 4 per cent. on term savings accounts, but by our new copyrighted savings system, we can pay you even a higher rate on these special accounts.

THE PLAN IS THIS: You deposit any fixed sum each month, say from $4 to $25 for a certain period of time. You can then draw out the same amount each month for a longer period. The rate of interest earning is better than 4 per cent. It is better than insurance—the greatest protection against adversity. A splendid plan for children and working people to lay away something for the future. Should you fail to make your deposits for the full length of time intended, you will not lose anything. You will get back everything you have deposited with 4 per cent. Come to the bank and let us tell you more about it.

THE PRE-EMINENT STEINWAY PIANO

The position of the Steinway Piano in every other country is the same as its position in America. There is no other piano of comparative value or excellence. On this one thing the cultivated people of the world agree. It is because the Steinway has musical qualities found in no other piano, and that cannot be reproduced outside the Steinway factories, even by the closest possible imitation of the Steinway system of construction. These inimitable qualities have made the Steinway the welcome associate of royalty, the prime necessity of the artist-pianist, the chief ornament of the refined home, the standard piano of the world, the only piano for you, if you would have the best and most enduring of pianos. You are cordially invited to see and test the Steinway Pianos here. Steinway Vertegrand, $525 upward; Steinway Miniature Grand, $800—the perfection of upright pianos and the supreme small grand.

ZOO LIKE BRONX FOR LOS ANGELES OFFICIAL PLAN IN GRIFFITH PARK.

SEEKING to put a stop to the slow torture of animals in the cramped, unsanitary zoo at Eastlake Park, Mayor Harper and Park Commissioner Humphreys are taking the lead in a movement to set aside a part of Griffith Park for a zoological garden, and to construct there a zoo that shall rival in time the famed Bronx Park of New York City.

Los Angeles has spent thousands on the Eastlake Zoo; it has received donations of rare and magnificent specimens of wild animals, but the accommodations for them are so meager and unsanitary, and politics has interfered so often in their care, that all the finest animals have perished miserably in the cramped cages. Only a few remain, and half of these are not fit for exhibition.

Griffith Park is an ideal location for a zoological garden; there most of the animals can live under conditions similar to their native state. Hundreds of acres of rolling land with crags and dens already prepared by nature await the advent of the hapless creatures from the marshy, suffocating quarters at Eastlake.

Thursday the Park Commission issued instructions that all the deer shall be removed from Eastlake to Griffith Park. Soon it will recommend to the Council that a portion of the tax funds be set aside to make a beginning on the great Griffith Park zoological garden.

The Los Angeles-Pacific Railway and the Pacific Electric are considering routes for electric lines into the park. Surveyors are at work on a route for the automobile road passing through the park and connecting with Hollywood and the Cahuenga Pass.

Griffith Park is already the home of small herds of elk and deer. Cinnamon colored "black" bear, California bob cats and coyotes prowl in the brush thickets of the mountainside; it is a natural zoological garden.

In the Animals' Torture Chamber at Eastlake Park.

These poor brutes from the mountains and plains, confined in wretchedly small quarters, are doomed to slow, sure death, unless given more freedom. This they will get in the city's great hill pleasure grounds if they live until the proposed change can be made.

Park Superintendent Morley and H. Gerson, keeper at Eastlake, unite in condemning the present arrangement for the "preservation" of animals there. Death stalks boldly about those prison pens and few animals escape.

But the Zoo will not be removed from Eastlake without an effort, for the city maintains a political Zoo. There are a number of so-called influential citizens living on the East Side who insist that the animal cages shall remain in Eastlake because they bring sightseers to East Los Angeles. These are willing to take a silent part in the torture of the wild beasts so long as they imagine it is bringing money to their purse. At the inception of the movement for an adequate Zoo these are boasting that the administration doesn't dare to remove the animals from Eastlake. They say it would bring down the wrath of the East Side and would very likely result in the recall of the Mayor.

Park Superintendent Morley says he fears the people are not ready to consider a first-class zoological garden; he thinks they will be staggered by an estimate of the expense, and will forget all about the wild creatures in their chamber of horrors on the marshy lands of Eastlake.

"I have just come from a visit to the Bronx Park," said Morley yesterday.

RAILROAD PRESSURE.

MORE TRACKS UP MOUNTAINS.

Problem Facing Managers of Southern Pacific.

Lines Overcrowded and Not Enough Power.

Business Too Great for Even Colossal Resources.

The traffic managers of the Southern Pacific Railroad are in desperate straits over the shortage of locomotives and cars and the crowding of tracks by numerous and overworked trains. The situation is worse than ever. Another track over the mountains, to cost millions, is seriously considered. Engineers are figuring on it. Enormous sums are now being spent in strengthening roadbeds.

Owing to the tremendous increase in traffic and the rapid growth of Southern California, the superintendents of the eastern and northern divisions of the Southern Pacific leading out of Los Angeles and the superintendent of motive power find themselves facing the most serious problem in the history of the road. Over a thousand men are constantly employed in repairing the 180 engines used in hauling the traffic, and they are worked to the utmost. Every freight and passenger car on the system is in use, the lines over the coast route and Tehachepi are carrying every bit of traffic that can possibly be crowded over a single track, and yet the winter rush in freight and passenger traffic has hardly started.

"What are we going to do?" is the question asked on every side.

The same question is asked all along the line, from the engine wipers in the roundhouse up to the gray-haired man in the uptown offices. The men below ask it of the men higher up, and the men higher up ask it every time they meet one of the men below, in whose judgment they place confidence.

The fact is that the road is working at its highest notch with the present trackage and equipment, and more traffic is being added every day.

Railroad lines cannot be laid in a week, and equipment cannot be secured for the asking, but the people keep coming, and the freight traffic increasing faster than the road can grow. They will have to make some great strides to catch up, or the growth of Southern California will be greatly retarded.

The brunt of the work will fall on the superintendent of motive power and the superintendent of the northern division, for the line to Yuma can stand a considerable increase in travel if the cars and engines can be secured to carry it.

The modern high-power locomotive is a delicate piece of mechanism, despite the fact that it is of ponderous size, and the department of motive power has its hands full trying to keep them in service. Everything seems to work against this department; the water is bad, and the boilers are a constant source of trouble, most of the runs are through dusty places and the machinery wears rapidly; the temperature is never low, and as a result the bearings get hot.

There are 180 engines of all sizes in use by these two divisions, the smallest of which is No. 5, a little "teapot" weighing but 30,000 pounds complete, while the largest are several which weigh 440,000, with the tender loaded, or almost fifteen times as much as the little one.

THE MISCHIEF-MAKERS.

The "teapot" is no trouble at all. It was built by the Baldwin Locomotive Works in 1887, and all they have to do is to shovel in the coal and keep it full of water, and she does the work. This engine works twenty-four hours a day in the shops on the East Side.

The big ones are the trouble-makers. The boilers are so big that the water tubes, of which there are 440, vibrate to such an extent when the engine is at high speed that they soon shake loose. The water leaves a deposit inside the tubes, and as a result of this bad pair of evils, the engine has to be sent to the shop every few months to have the boiler repaired, and once a year entirely overhauled.

The man who can invent a way to doctor the water obtainable along the track of the Southern Pacific in Southern California, so that it will not leave alkaline deposits in the boiler, need never do anything else save ride around in a parlor car and spend money.

A horde of engine wipers and mechanics flock around these giants after every trip, as there are hundreds of little things to be looked after, each one of which might put the giant out of business on the very next run.

Among the engines still in use are two that were brought around the Horn before the first transcontinental railroad was built. They are working in Ventura county as switch engines, and are numbered 1170 and 1171. These and other old-timers run along without causing much worry, because they are put on runs where speed is not essential.

The day of twenty-car trains and an average speed of twenty miles an hour is past. Now, it is speed, speed, speed. Fast passenger trains, fast freights, and let the equipment take care of itself. As a result of this and the fact that the traffic has increased to its top notch, so that engines cannot be kept in reserve, but must be in constant use, the motive department has reached its limit, but it will have to do more this winter.

How it will do it, no one knows, but every one concedes that emergency must be met.

All of the trains that can possibly be crowded across the Tehachepi grade are in use at the present time, and the slightest accident ties everything up for hours. Extra side tracks have been put in, so that as many trains as possible can be sent each way. Yet there are more coming.

The roadbed over this mountain was

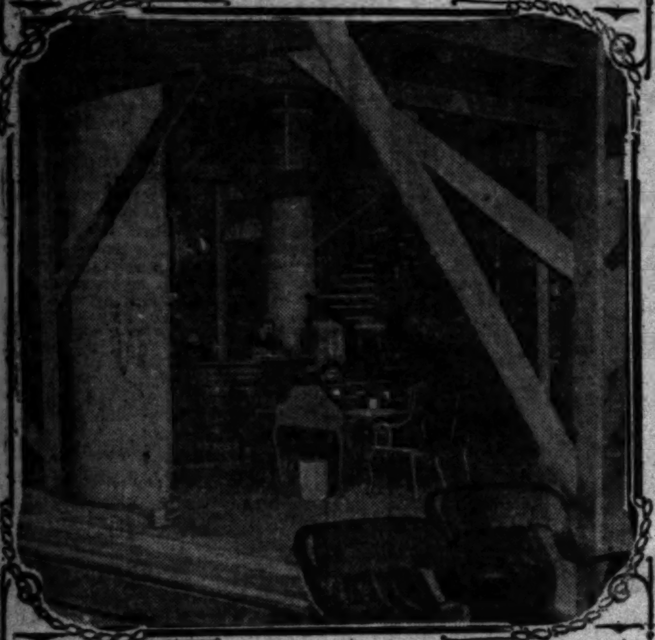
PROSPERITY.

QUARTER OF MILLION FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Large Hotels in City Being Reconstructed and Refurnished in Anticipation of Unusual Rush of Tourists. Bonifaces Not Pessimists.

Placing massive $20,000. pump in the Alexandria.



Reconstructing Van Nuys lobby.

Building twin elevators in the Hollenbeck.

Quarter Million For Hotel Improvements.

How the downtown hostelries are making preparations for the horde of winter tourists.

IN PREPARATION for the wild and untamed tourists who flock from the icy confines of the East to the sunny slopes of California, and also as a welcome to the meek western folk who come to the city as a matter of habit, the hotel men of Los Angeles have delved deep into their pockets, "pungled up" a little in excess of a quarter of a million dollars and used the same to furnish and remodel their hostelries.

Never before has there been such a general housecleaning and renovating as has been in progress during the last few weeks in the city's downtown hotels. Pessimists have growled about the winter outlook, but the hotel men have been enjoying perhaps the best fall business in the last ten years. There has been scarcely a day when the "house count" has not been anywhere from 5 to 25 per cent. higher than on the corresponding day last year. This, the sage hotel gentlemen say, argues for a very busy winter season. They are being deluged by letters and requests for reservations for the winter months. The "regulars," who come to Los Angeles every winter, have signified their intention of coming a little earlier than usual. The indications have spurred on the hotel proprietors to spend money lavishly to make their houses attractive.

These improvements range from the installing of a $20,000 elevator pump to putting forest leaves under the carpet of the bridal suite to give an "atmosphere of the open" to the apartments; or from making over a lobby, buffet, and entire first floor to putting in a "new-fangled" sanitary soap apparatus in the toilet rooms, or giving an order for $16,000 worth of linen.

Of all the hotel men not one of them is a pessimist. They promptly produce their ledgers if one expresses any doubt as to their present excellent business or the prospects for a record winter.

LOBBY NOT DIGNIFIED.

The usually dignified lobby of the Van Nuys is now a mass of scaffolding and busy artisans. The ladies' parlor, which formerly occupied the Fourth-and-Main-street corner, has entirely disappeared. The quartered-oak partition has been torn down, a new tile floor put in and it has become a part of the lobby. The clerk's desk has been moved to the right of the main stairway and the entire scheme of the ceiling decoration has been changed.

Colored art glass has been put in as a false window below all skylights and a new lighting scheme adopted. The buffet has been changed and enlarged to about twice its former size and has been finished in mahogany with art glass at the windows. In these improvements over $35,000 has been expended. Of course, the annual renovation of all the guest rooms has been under way and new carpets have been put in on a wholesale plan.

At the Alexandria there has been a perfect whirlwind of improvements. It began with the determination to install a $20,000 pump to help out the busy elevators, and ended with putting forest leaves under the carpet of the bridal suite. The management of the Alexandria will expend a small fortune in preparation for the tourist influx. The total will be between $55,000 and $60,000.

A few months ago a salesman for the largest linen house in the East wandered into the hotel, and later emerged with an order for $16,000 worth of linen. This is now being delivered, and is beautifully crested. A new china service for the Indinn-Mission grill was thought necessary, and $5000 took wings. A new vacuum-cleaning system was thought to be called for, and $4000 more ran away. Then a gold service for the private banquet-room was found absolutely indispensible, and $8000 vanished.

ON PROSPERITY'S CREST.

But then the Alexandria is doing fully 40 per cent. more business than this time last year, and looks forward to having all of its 400-odd rooms occupied continuously throughout the winter.

The Hollenbeck, for which there is no beginning or ending of seasons, has plunged into the improvement campaign, too, and will put $50,000 into circulation.

The Hollenbeck is equally crowded in the winter tourist season and in summer, when people flock to it. The management will install two "rapid-fire" elevators, put in fifty new sample rooms, fifty new baths, a vacuum system for cleaning the rooms, and will dynamite all old furnishings.

At the Angelus men have been working from the top to the bottom of the building for the last month or so. Every room has been turned upside down, received new carpets and furniture and been retinted. The grill is to be enlarged and redecorated, at a cost of thousands.

"The only guide to a winter's business, that can be accepted as fairly accurate, is the volume of summer and fall business," said Harry Loomis of the Angelus yesterday. "From twenty years' experience I can say that when we have a good summer and a good fall, the winter is always unusually good. The summer's business was the best the Angelus has enjoyed. This fall's business is almost phenomenal. We expect to have the best October business in our history."

"TUNING UP" EVERYWHERE.

The Lankershim, one of the newer hotels, has made few alterations, but has undergone a thorough overhauling, and, as the management says, "tuning up" in preparation for winter.

Last year the Westminster expended thousands of dollars in improvements, and this year has refurnished everything from the roof to the basement.

"I look forward to an unusually prosperous winter," said S. J. Whitmore, manager of the Alexandria, yesterday. "There is every indication that a larger number of easterners than usual will come to the city this winter. I think that the other hotel managers will agree with the prediction.

ANOTHER MOHAWK OPPORTUNITY

THE GREAT BONANZA MINE CONTINUE THE CENTER OF INTEREST

(Crackerjack News, Oct. 10, 1907.)

All eyes are now turned toward Bonanza Mountain, and the interest of the whole mining district centers around that rugged peak to the south of the town of Crackerjack. The main topic of conversation among mining men in the Crackerjack at the present time is the remarkable strikes that have been made and are being made daily on the Bonanza Company's ground and outside holdings. The prediction has been frequently made that almost the entire mining activity of the district within the coming winter months would center around the range on both sides of Red Pass. Such is the interest and enthusiasm displayed and the hurry of the prospectors and mining men in general to get to the ground that a good-sized camp has sprung up in Red Pass around the Bonanza well, and there is even talk of establishing business houses there, so as to be closer to the scene than Crackerjack. There are at present a large number camped in the wash at the foot of the mountain, the tents having been erected without semblance of order or regularity. At night the new camp assumes the appearance of a real live mining camp, with its numerous fires and lighted tents.

It is stated by the Bonanza Company management that a number of leases have been granted on the ground to the south of the main shaft of the company, where there seems a certainty that the great veins will be cut at a comparatively small depth. One leasing company is now being formed in Salt Lake to operate on this ground, and another is to be composed of Los Angeles mining men. It is understood that a Silver Lake party has also secured a promising block of ground and will soon begin operations.

The beginning of work by the leasing companies will be the signal that the era of real activity is at hand for Bonanza Mountain. Next week will probably see several of the leasers at work, as time will prove a valuable factor with them. The leases have been granted for periods of from six to ten months, and are said to be on liberal terms.

The new strike at the 100-foot level in the Bonanza Company's main shaft continues to hold the center of the stage, and is even greater than reported by the News last week. The drift has been extended in some twenty feet, and the ledge shows an average of six feet all the distance. This ore is said to average better than $100 per ton clear across the vein. There is an eighteen-inch seam on the foot wall that runs into the sensational values, and glistens with the yellow stuff in the free state. This latter material is being carefully sacked and stored away for future shipment. The strike is undoubtedly one of the greatest ever made in the desert region, and outvies most of the northern bonanzas.

Sinking is going steadily on in the big two-compartment shaft and the bore will be sent down rapidly to the second level, where another crosscut will be run.

However, with all the bustle and activity around Bonanza, the best evidence of the richness of the section, and by far the best advertisement that the Crackerjack district could have, is furnished by the regular consignments of high-grade ore that are leaving the Bonanza dumps daily. ore is sacked in heavy canvas sacks, ing to its free nature, and these are labeled with the name of the Bonanza pany. It is expected that the shipments from the company ground will continue some time, as there are over 500 tons ore on the dump now, and this will re considerable time to move with the ent hauling facilities.

Considering everything, it seems that the Bonanza Mountain section is to experience its great boom this as it undoubtedly deserves, for it is if there is another area of equal ext the Southwest where such remarkable ore in such quantities has been brou light. The showing in the great B mine alone is sufficient to create all the citement that has occurred, and in ad to this numerous finds are being ma both slopes of the mountain, and do many others will be made. Gene pression is that the Bonanza is one greatest mines of the country, and Bonanza Mountain will prove a w the way through.

We have for sale, under an option secured before developments revealed the richness of the Bonanza mine, a limited amount of Crackerjack Bonanza stock. This stock we can sell, while our option lasts, at 75 cents per share, a price that is merely nominal when the character of the Bonanza property is considered. The foregoing article from the Crackerjack News, the "home paper," is but one of many recent newspaper publications describing the splendid results at ing the work on the Bonanza—results indicating unerringly that fore long the mine will enter the Mohawk class and that the p who buy Bonanza stock at the insignificant price of the present reap profit as the early investors in Mohawk did. This is the o tunity of the prompt investor to multiply his dollars, and to d quickly, and only to the PROMPT investor will it be available.

TOO MUCH SILLABUB.

Vice-President Fairbanks with his cocktails is of the type of the "mobled Queen" in "Hamlet." He protests too much. His friends protest too much. They all explain too much, and their explanations fail to explain. They do not hang together. Each explanation has to be explained.

The French have a proverb, cold and cruel, and although unjust in its application often, very useful to follow, especially for politicians. It runs to the effect that "he who excuses himself accuses himself."

The best thing for the Vice-President, for his ambition, his reputation, for his friends and for his church, is to drop the whole subject. The world does not care a tenth part as much about the incident as the hysteria to explain suggests. Go dry on the cocktail subject, Mr. Fairbanks, and let us forget it and show "newness of life" by sticking to buttermilk, with or without cucumbers. Drink sillabubs; but do not talk them, nor let your friends slop over with them.

EVERY INCH A KING.

The civilized world stands to lose much in the passing of the good Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria. He is an old man and has sat on the dual throne of Austria-Hungary for nearly sixty years. He came to that throne young and will leave it full of years, having passed the general limit, three score years and ten, and approached closely to four score.

These sixty years of kingship have been unusually full of great effort and of stormy events. They have seen greater changes than any other two generations in the history of the world. As this aged monarch with his head crowned with the frosts of many winters looks back over the trying periods of his reign, he can lay down the burden with the comfort that comes from work well done, and on the whole wisely done.

Francis Joseph I came to the throne of Austria in the last dying days of the year 1848. It was a year when revolution was rife in Europe and when outbreaks were shaking almost every throne in Europe. Prague and Vienna suffered siege and the Emperor Ferdinand felt constrained to abdicate. Immediately afterward Lombardy and the province of Venice revolted. War with Sardinia followed. It was a stirring time for a young head wearing a crown. Ten years later war broke out again between Italy and Austria with France on the side of Italy. This action of France was the return Napoleon III made for Italy's aid in the recent war of the allied forces of Western Europe against Russia in the Crimea to check the threatened advance of the Muscovite empire on Turkey.

A few years later on, the Prussian annexation of the Schleswig-Holstein territory brought Austria into collision with awakening Germany. In 1866 Italy made war again and redeemed Venice from Austrian rule. Hungary was all the time in a state of unrest. In 1865 the agreement for the dual government now existing was reached.

Francis Joseph has been in his life and rule an honor to Kings. Ten years before he became Emperor of Austria a young girl of 19 ascended the throne of England. In 1861 the weak King of Prussia, Frederick William, died and was succeeded by his brother as William I, who later became Kaiser William I of Germany. The German Kaiser's reign was long, and Victoria's was the longest in the long annals of England.

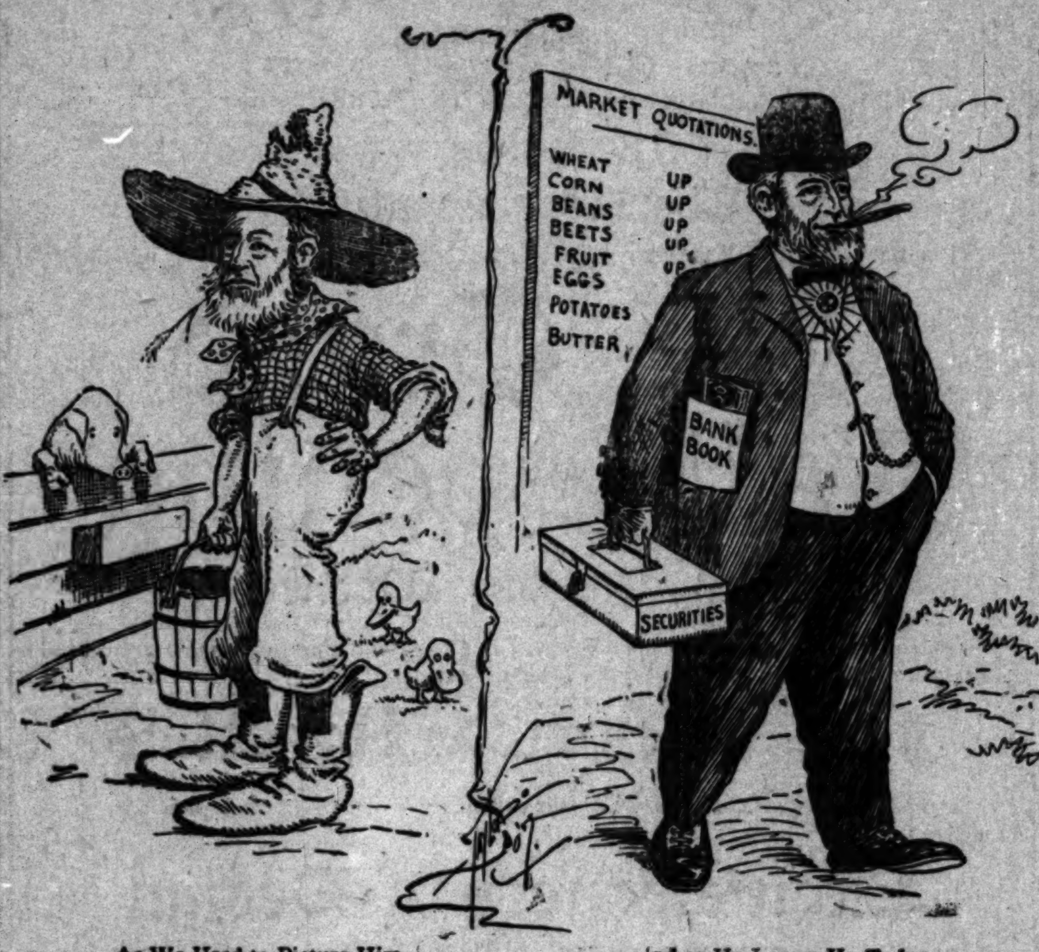
It may be said that these three sovereigns set the example of decent living to all monarchs, limited and absolute. William I of Germany and Francis Joseph I of Austria married women who were models of all that is "lovely and of good repute" among women whether they dwell in a palace or a cottage. The homes and private lives of these three rulers over great peoples were as pure and clean as it is given to human nature to know. On the whole they were just in their rule as Kings as they were clean in their private lives.

What a revolution the reign of Victoria was, in her life as a woman, wife and mother, as well as in her capacity as a Queen—compared with the preceding reigns back through the Brunswicks, the Stuarts, the Tudors and on through Plantagenets to the Norman conquest. How like a beacon light of virtue the life of Francis Joseph shines when compared to that of the average Austrian grand duke, and how the justice of his reign on the whole compared with that of his predecessors! The first German Emperor was like his two contemporaries in Austria and England, a man pure of heart as a man and clean of hands as a King.

Few things in the history of the last half of the past century show more clearly and emphatically the progress the world has made in righteousness and decency than a study of the rulers of the world since William, Victoria and Francis Joseph ascended these three great thrones.

It would be impossible to overstate the beneficial influence of their example upon the manners and morals of their times. In none of these kingdoms has Heaven come down to dwell with men. There is plenty of reform work to do in them all. But the life of the average German, Austrian or English man is purer, cleaner, happier, better, from the example of these great rulers, than was the average life of these people under Charles II, Ferdinand, or the Prussian Kings prior to the days of Frederick the Great. This last was a great King, but his heart was not filled with the spirit of justice as was that of William. Maria Theresa of Austria was a great sovereign, but she never felt the just impulses that inspired the acts of Francis Joseph. Charles I was a conscientious King, but his reign was a tyranny compared to that of Victoria.

THE FARMER—TWO IDEALS.



As We Used to Picture Him, And as He Looms Up Today.

THE BATTLE OF A SOUL.

The world has ever been painstaking in recording acts of physical bravery performed by men and women. Particularly has this been the case in preserving the records of wars. In the life of Gen. Washington no incident is brought out quite so fully or with such accuracy of detail as his actions at the Monmouth fight, when he rode up and down in front of the contending columns, braving a leaden hail of bullets, from which it seemed impossible that a bird could escape. Our children in the schools are taught to dwell with enthusiasm on Molly Pitcher, who manned the gun when her soldier husband fell dead under the British fire. In short, every hero and heroine who became such as a result of physical prowess and daring is held up to our admiration, from David, with his sling, down to Hobson on the sinking Merrimac in the flame-swept harbor of Santiago.

All this is doubtless as it should be; but greater battles than have ever been fought in the face of blazing guns and amid the ring of clashing swords are being fought every day on the fields of peace, and we hear little of them, and heed them less. And yet, too, these battles that the soul fights are immeasureably more heroic than are the battles fought with flesh and blood, either on land or sea, from parapets and in reeling valleys or out on the wide seas, where the tides run red.

Here is an instance of one battle of the soul, taken from the ordinary newspaper dispatches of last week. We feel it our duty to recall it. We think it ought to be read in every household in the land. The scene is in the great, sin-cursed city of Chicago, and the story runneth thus:

John Gertz, habitual drunkard, but under parole to Judge McKenzie Cleland on a promise not to touch liquor again, failed to answer the roll call in Cleland's court last night. Instead, Parole Officer Joseph Smijkal handed to the judge a typewritten report of Gertz's battle to keep his pledge—a promise that it cost him his life to keep. Gertz's record in court showed three arrests for drunkenness, when, on April 30, he gave the judge his word for the last time to never touch another drop. He went home to keep it. In August he became ill, conscious of but two things—that he wanted whisky and that he had promised not to touch it. Finally his agony became so intense that his wife brought in some whisky. He raised himself in bed, but just as he put it to his lips he remembered his pledge and dashed the glass across the room. Then he lapsed into a semi-delirium, and Mrs. Gertz offered more whisky, but again he threw the glass across the room. The last act of his life, according to the report, was to cast a glass of liquor from him, just as he was seized by the final stroke of heart disease.

Here, indeed, was a battle upon which gods and men might well look in awe—a battle of the soul. Only those who have endured the tortures that this man endured can understand the indescribable and awful suffering that he went through. There is no torment in hell greater than that which seizes the drunkard when the fearful craving for drink is upon him. He dies a thousand deaths. Demons tear at his vitals. Horror heaped upon horror drives him to despair. Yet John Gertz won against these tremendous odds. Sooner than go back to what he had been, sooner than break his word of honor, he gave up his life and embarked on the unknown sea. Horatius at the bridge, Crockett at the Alamo, Custer at the Little Big Horn, Hector, Ulysses—what were they all, compared to this one poor, unknown demi-god who conquered hell itself in that mighty battle of the soul?

Why is there no Hall of Fame wherein this man's statue may be reared? Why is there no chronicle kept, that his name, and the names of such as he, may be written therein?

It will also be written of Theodore Roosevelt, in the days to be, that he made America the friend of all the world.

OCTOBER.

[From "California: Where Sets The Sun."]

With velvet-footed tread October came,
Gold in her hair and roses on her cheek;
Fair as sweet May, her fingers not yet weak
With age, but dimpled still the same
As when the glad year, calling her by name,
Kissed her till crimson dyed her virgin cheek,
And the soft breezes, wandering, sought to speak

Of her rich beauty. Now, in mellow tides
The sun, as through the cloudless skies he rides,
Pours out his light, and, tenderly I wist,
Drapes all the hills in gold and amethyst,
And, as the sunset passes, wraps a mist
Of royal purple round them, wherein sleeps
The souls of sunbeams passing daylight keeps.

ELIZA A. OTIS.

DICKENS'S WEST AND ROOSEVELT'S WEST.

It is sixty-five years since Charles Dickens visited the United States. This was in 1842, and in 1844 he published "American Notes," in which were contained portions of what was afterward developed into "Martin Chuzzlewit." Dickens's journey from New York to St. Louis throws some light, although highly colored, upon the conditions of society in what was then the western frontier of the United States.

When Dickens visited the country St. Louis was the principal city in the Valley of the Mississippi, and, indeed, it might be said to have been the principal one in the United States, with the exception of a few seaports on the Atlantic Coast.

Dickens's St. Louis was a mere trading post. The business interests of the settlement and the condition of society were somewhat analogous to those of Cheyenne or Julesberg some twenty years later, when the Union Pacific Railroad was being pushed westward from the Missouri River toward the Pacific Coast.

There was scarcely a trading post in 1842 between St. Louis and St. Paul. There was no settlement of any importance south of St. Louis until New Orleans was reached. West of the Mississippi River, the whole continent was practically a wilderness, little known and less thought of. The larger portions of it on maps of the United States long ulterior to this date were marked as "The Great American Desert." Dickens probably heard nothing of Chicago on his journey westward. It was nothing more than a little hamlet in the swamps at the head of Lake Michigan, which the Indians knew as "Skunk's Nest," from which the name Chicago is derived.

Such was the Valley of the Great Lakes and rivers in the days of Charles Dickens, two generations ago. This great fertile basin we have called "Roosevelt's West," in view of the President's trip down the Father of Waters, with St. Louis in the center of the stretches of the river which he has covered in his journey in the interest of the great waterway.

It needs but the bare calling of attention to this subject to bring to the minds of readers of The Times a picture of the West of today to hang by the side of Charles Dickens's ancient masterpiece.

St. Louis, the leading trading post in the great basin at that time, is today secondary to her rival, then just born, and scarcely known outside of the immediate vicinity of Chicago. St. Paul (in Dickens's day, a trading post of less importance by far than St. Louis,) is today an immense city, full of wealth, industries, intellectual and social cultivation, and everything that marks a very high degree of civilization. Of Minneapolis, Dickens never heard. Only a few miles above St. Paul on the river, it outclasses its rival in wealth, industries and population. Between these twin cities and St. Louis the river is dotted every mile with towns and villages, some of them cities of great importance. Below St. Louis a similar development has taken place, with Memphis and other great cities lining the river all the way down to New Orleans, which, a village in Dickens's day, has become a great commercial city in ours.

Dickens's journey was made in stage coaches, slow of movement and dangerous to patronize. The rivers were unbridged. The roads were the merest makeshifts. The whole great stretch of country, 1200 miles in extent, between the Atlantic sea border and the great stream which cuts the continent in two, is in our time a gridiron of railroads, whose passenger trains outclass in sumptuousness and comfort those of any other country in the world, and whose speed leaves incomparably far behind the achievements of any other railroads of the world. The wilderness which Dickens traversed in his slow progress across half the continent is today one of the most populous, most highly cultivated and wealthiest districts upon the face of the earth.

When the writer of "Martin Chuzzlewit" was penning his very exaggerated word pictures of American society and character, the Mississippi River was to the world the utmost boundary of the United States. Beyond was nowhere. A day or two ago the President could very truly say, in his speech at Cairo, that here is the heart of the United States. The country which stretches west of St. Louis, St. Paul and New Orleans is better known today than the State of New York as a whole was in 1842. There is more population west of the river in Roosevelt's day than there was in the whole country in Dickens's day. To compare the wealth of the two periods is beyond the power of human imagination. The distance is too great to span by the human mind. By the census of 1840 the population of the United States barely exceeded 17,000,000. Compared with Dickens's United States, what a leap to Roosevelt's, with its 90,000,000 souls. "The Great American Desert" is now one of the most productive regions, all things considered, in the world. The stock ranges of the great Rocky Mountains are the reliance of half the world for meat products. In the center of this so-called desert, Salt Lake is one of the most picturesque and progressive cities in America. The mineral wealth of the basin, unknown in Dickens's time, lying between the Rocky Mountain range and that of the Sierra Nevada, is pouring into the world streams of the precious and of the useful metals today in a volume never dreamed of in other days.

It needs no more than these few hints for our readers to paint for themselves a picture which shall contrast the West, and, indeed, the whole of the United States, of the days of Charles Dickens with what exists in the days of Theodore Roosevelt. The contrast will be impressive beyond anything human history has heretofore afforded.

THE WEST WANTS IMMIGRANTS.

The Southern Pacific Railroad seems to have wisely opposed the scheme outlined by its rival, the Santa Fé, as to cutting out low colonist rates from the Central West to the Pacific Coast next spring. The declaration that the West has more population and is producing more in the way of crops, ores and mill products than the railroads are able to haul, and that railroad extensions are impossible under present financial conditions, is a view not founded on fact. The railroads may find it difficult to do the hauling of crops and merchandise in the great valley of the lakes and rivers, but there is no overproduction of anything in the country west of the Rocky Mountains. There is a great deal of development going on and a great deal still to be done. The riches beneath the soil of the desert are vastly greater than the riches in the surface soil of the garden spots of the world. There are vast tracts of land still to settle in these regions, and there is a market at no great distance for increased products. California is still depending upon Kansas City for supplies of butter, eggs and frozen poultry. There is plenty of land of the most suitable kind for the production of these things and of meat animals, right here at home. All we want is population with capital to enter into the possession of this land and supply these food products for a market right at the doors, which will not tax the railroads in the way of hauling.

There is no propriety nor reason in the railroads indulging resentment because they are being compelled to live within the law. There is probably a good deal of pretense in the cry that some of them are raising. Mr. Harriman is at the present time expending over $20,000,000 in expansions between Portland and Seattle. The Rockefeller syndicate has the money in hand for extending the St. Paul to the northwestern coast, and this will cost $100,000,000 [illegible]

The people [illegible] tains will be [illegible] learn that the [illegible] nental railroads [illegible] business in the [illegible] State of California [illegible] better understanding [illegible] and each other [illegible] standing of the [illegible] which will result [illegible] colonist rates [illegible] as they have [illegible] few months, and [illegible] several years past. [illegible] dant population [illegible] East. There is [illegible] all to apply their [illegible] capital in developing [illegible] the Pacific Coast.

The following recently appeared in a New Y newspaper:

No stranger commentary on the silent growth of tremendous fortunes can be found than in the recent discovery of a man worth $40,000,000 of whom the public had never heard. The man is Charles Edgar Appleby of Glencove, Long Island, a lawyer whose entire fortune was made from small investments in New York real estate, and amazement was great that a man wholly unknown could accumulate such vast wealth and remain in practical seclusion. Mr. Appleby is more than eighty years of age, and began investing in New York real estate fifty years ago and has constantly added to his holdings. Mr. Appleby's rule of investment, in his own language, is:
"I never buy stocks or bonds; I never have anything to do with corporate securities. They are too ticklish. But I am always ready to buy income producing real estate."

¶ Of all real estate, centrally located business property is the best, because its income and value least effected by adverse business conditions, and therefore safer for the investor.

AT EVENING.

"Evening, thou that bringest all that bright morning scattered; thou bringest the sheep, the goat, the child back to her mother."
—[Sappho.

Now homeward wend the cows on the hillside trail,
And birds are winging purposeful and low.
The sea mist wanders musing through the vale,
While happy workmen to their dear ones go.

It is the hour of peace for all who turn
From labor to the joys of home and rest;
But ah—it is the hour when those who yearn
Feel great and lonely need of waiting nest;

When lights through windows speak of things too sweet—
The soft mirage of some far paradise—
To those whose coming none will run to meet,
And no love-lights the burning in glad eyes.

The foxes and the squirrels have their holes;
The Son of Man—not where to lay His head;
And they who have no shepherds and no folds,
May walk with Him, and still be comforted.

Out in the wilderness of darkling night,
The bourneless feet find homes ye know not of;
And to those eyes come revelations' light,
And breathing of the universal love.

About "Mad Dog" Fleet.

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 11.—[To the Editor of The Times:] If there be truth in the report that the transfer of our entire war fleet to the Pacific Coast is the result of a suggestion from the Emperor of Germany, it will relieve the administration from much of the criticism which brands the project as incendiary and inspired by political buncombe.

Japan and her ally could easily destroy the Yankee armada and doubtless would do so if our nation should make the mistake of trying alone to fight the battles of the Caucasian race.

The recent race riots in British America, and the stand taken by Rudyard Kipling and other prominent Englishmen, indicates that treason to their race will now be as earnestly opposed in England as was the attempt of their governing class to establish a slave-holding republic upon the North American continent.

The tendency of the times is toward the creation of a few governments of continental proportions. That means infrequent wars and perhaps the total abolition of war. The policies of Japan and of England are opposed to this. Theirs is piratical and intended to hold the islands of the world in vassalage by the instrumentality of warships and to render impotent the governments of the mainland by fomenting dissensions among them. This old game is drawing near its end.

On its part, Japan would risk everything to carry into full effect its alliance with England, but the Britons are prudent, as well as haughty. The fate of ancient Tyre is known to them. A few hundred years before the birth of Christ, Alexander the Great, with a large army, set about besieging the despotic mistress of the Old World. The Tyrean war fleet was then comparatively as formidable as is now that of Great Britain, and it successfully defended the island fastness upon which the city was located until the Alexandrine army had built a mole, connecting it with the mainland.

United Continental Europe could penetrate England in the same way, but could accomplish the desired result as effectually, and more easily, by a revival of the Napoleonic scheme of isolation. A country which has a population four times greater than its soil can support dares not engage in war with formidable powers like Germany and the United States. So the probabilities are that our "mad-dog" fleet will not be molested on its long voyage.

If Congress responds to the demands of the Californians for money for defensive purposes, it is to be hoped that the greater part of it will be spent in creating a great naval station, as far inland as possible, where it cannot be attacked until after a march, when a hostile army has forced a landing. Some such place as "Nigger Slough."

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The Mayor yesterday vetoed an ordinance lopping off seven inspectors of the health department, and asked the City Council to consider a new plan of inspection proposed by the city physicians.

The Council committee of the whole yesterday postponed for one month action on the prize-fight ordinance.

The Board of Public Works yesterday awarded contracts amounting to over $90,000 for machinery and equipment for the cement plant for the Los Angeles aqueduct.

The Mayor gave notice that he will go into retirement for the whole of the ensuing week, and will see no place-hunters or politicians.

M. W. Davis, a member of the Pasadena School Board, began an action in the Superior Court yesterday for $125,000 damages against William Randolph Hearst, Henry Lowenthal and James T. Belcher for the publication in the Los Angeles Examiner of attacks on the board. Davis charges libel.

Referees in the suit by the city against the Southern Pacific for condemnation of a strip of land for the opening of San Pablo street, filed their report yesterday.

The will of the late P. F. Dooner was filed in court for probate yesterday. A considerable fortune is left to be divided among members of his family.

Asst. Dist.-Atty. McComas is preparing for the hearing in the case of Freemont Older before Justice Summerfield on October 17 and interesting developments are promised.

"Blind-pigger" Flynn plays his last trump and petitions for a writ of habeas corpus to escape from a jail sentence pending appeal.

Certain his younger brother was in trouble, Frank Sherman, Texas rancher, sold his farm and hurried to Los Angeles, only to find the youth charged with grand larceny. His sacrifice may save the youngster from punishment.

AT THE CITY HALL.

CITY YET MAY BE SMOKELESS.

WITH FEW CHANGES ORDINANCE WILL BE SUBMITTED.

Engines to Have Permission to Fume Up for Ten Minutes, and Citizens May Build Bonfires—Final Consideration Next Week—New Plan for City Inspector.

A smokeless city yet may be realized in Los Angeles. Yesterday the City Council in committee of the whole went over the proposed anti-smoke ordinance again, and listened to the arguments of the supporters of the measure and to representatives of the gas and railway companies. Minor amendments were suggested, and the draft of the proposed ordinance is to go before the Council one week from tomorrow for final consideration.

The most important change is the extension of the limit during which engines may discharge dense smoke. Originally this was limited to five consecutive minutes. It is changed to ten minutes in any one hour. Another change will permit residents to burn rubbish in their yards.

Boyle Heights citizens were present to urge immediate action, and Dr. George Kress urged favorable consideration on behalf of the medical associations, the Pure-Food Commission, and the Anti-Tuberculosis Society. Attorney Herbert Goudge appeared for the gas company. He intimated that the ordinance would not stand the test of the courts, even if it is modeled on the Philadelphia ordinance.

"PUGS" GET DELAY.
"ANTI" LAW GOES OVER.

Final consideration of the proposed prize-fight ordinance has been postponed until November 18, at 2 o'clock p.m. It has been before the Council committee of the whole since April 8. Now it proposes to await the return of Councilman Yonkin from the East. Councilman Healy ran amuck yesterday when he heard the call of the subject and the reading of a petition from the Church Federation for adoption of the ordinance.

"Seems to me this Church Federation is interfering too much with the business of this Council," he said. "We were elected by the people, but the church wants to dictate to us just what we shall do. It is trying to act the part of a political boss, and I think in all decency it should keeps hands off."

"The reason these people keep sending in their petitions is that this Council procrastinates, and on the slimmest of pretexts puts off disagreeable duties," replied Councilman Wallace. "These people have a right to be heard, and their patience is about worn out through coming here so often."

Nathan Newby, attorney for the Federation, tried to make his statement of the case, but was choked off, and the committee of the whole finally voted to refer the matter back to the Council to act upon directly; but it was insisted that no action be taken until Councilman Yonkin returns.

MAYOR'S VETO.
STANDS BY INSPECTORS.

Mayor Harper sent to the City Clerk, yesterday, for presentation to the Council, his veto of the ordinance lopping off seven Health Department inspectors. In the forenoon a delegation from the Los Angeles County Medical Society met with the Mayor, Health Officer Powers, Dr. N. K. Foster, secretary of the State Board of Health, and Councilmen Pease, Blanchard, Wallace, Dromgold, Healy, Lyon and Clampitt to discuss the general situation and to urge that the working force of the Health Department be increased rather than decreased in view of the Coast fight against the introduction of the bubonic plague.

The physicians suggest that the city be redistricted, with the volunteer help of at least one physician in each district to assist the Health Officer in his work. This plan will be presented to the Council tomorrow, and probably will be approved by that body.

Mayor Seeks Rest.

Mayor Harper is going into retreat for a week, beginning tomorrow. With a few close friends he plans to go where there are no telephones or telegraphs. The Mayor's secretary asserts that even he does not know the Mayor's destination. He is sure it is not San Francisco.

Spiritualists Object.

Spiritualist ministers of Los Angeles have petitioned the City Council for an amendment in the license ordinance which will exempt them from payment of fees to the city. They ask an amendment as follows: "Provided that the provisions of this section shall not apply to spiritual mediums who are indorsed and ordained ministers of the California State Spiritualists' Association."

Warrants Held Up.

The Health Department is in trouble with the Finance Committee of the Council. A batch of bills was held up yesterday for investigation. It is asserted the Health Department does not appear able to make proper estimates. In one case an estimate of $50 had been made on the requisition, but the actual cost was $129. An estimate of $30 is said to have climbed in reality to over $300.

Big Contracts Let.

Contracts which amount to more than $90,000 were awarded by the Board of Public Works yesterday. They pertain to the installation of cement-making machinery and plant for the Los Angeles Aqueduct. The Power and Mining Machinery Company is to furnish a roch crusher, rock chute and feeding device and a clay chute and feeding device, for $2963.60; the Vulcan Iron Works gets a $36,385 contract for kilns, dryers, feeders and coolers, and Thomas Prosser & Son, New York agents for the Krupp works of Germany, are given contracts amounting to $47,212 for cement mills and shafting. The Allis-Chalmers Company gets a $2853 contract.

Inspector Wants Pay.

A city ordinance may have to be repealed or amended in order that one of Mayor Harper's numerous inspectors may receive his pay. Billboard Inspector E. R. Allen has salary due for August and September, but he has not collected fees sufficient to meet this amount. Collection of billboard taxes is held up by suit filed against the city by Varney & Green. The Council Finance Committee discussed plans to secure the repeal or amendment of the ordinance.

Protest Against Tannery.

A protest has been filed with the City Clerk by property owners in the vicinity of the tannery of the Los Angeles Hide and Tallow Company, on Edwin street, east of Santa Fé avenue. It is declared that the place is run without a permit from the Board of Health.

For Forty-ninth Street.

Property owners on West Forty-ninth street have filed a petition to the City Council, asking permission to improve the street from Moneta avenue to Figueroa street.

Meetings Postponed.

The regular meeting of the Police Commission has been postponed from October 15 to October 22, at 2 o'clock p.m. The Fire Commissioners' meeting has been postponed from October 17 to the 18th, at 10:30 a.m.

ASKS BIG SUM FOR DAMAGES.

PASADENA SCHOOL BOARD MAN SUES "EXAMINER."

Proprietor Hearst, Uncle Heine Lowenthal and a Correspondent Held Responsible for Attacks in "Examiner" Charging Many Things, Including Dishonesty.

Upon four counts, M. W. Davis, a member of the Board of Education of Pasadena, brings suit for $125,000 damages on the ground of libel against William Randolph Hearst, as proprietor; Henry Lowenthal, as editor-in-chief, and James T. Belcher, as Pasadena correspondent of the Los Angeles Examiner. The papers were filed in the Superior Court yesterday at noon by Attorney J. H. Merriam of Pasadena.

Each of the counts alleged by the plaintiff to constitute a separate case of libel are represented in the complaint by a copy of certain stories printed in the Examiner on September 13, 14, 15, and October 7. The gist of the stories are that the paper attacks the Board of Education of Pasadena in regard to the Garfield kindergarten school at the corner of South Pasadena avenue and West California street.

The plaintiff claims that the articles charge him with negligence, extravagance, favoritism and dishonesty in his official duties, and have exposed him to hatred, contempt and obloquy.

For three of the articles Mr. Davis asks for $25,000 damages, while for another article, entitled the "Third Cause of Action," he asks for $50,000 damages. This article is headed, "School Graft Would Make a Ruef Blush."

The fourth cause of action was the story printed in the Examiner October 7, in which the paper pats itself upon the back for "exposing" the actions of the school board.

The complaint is an excedingly voluminous one and goes into each detail of the alleged libel.

GETTING READY.
TRIAL OF THE "KIDNAPED."

Asst. Dist.-Atty. C. C. McComas has been busy making preparations for the preliminary examination of Editor Freemont Older and R. A. Crothers of San Francisco, before Justice J. W. Summerfield in the Township Court, on October 17, on a charge of criminal libel, preferred by Luther Brown, an attorney of this city.

At the same time Asst. Dist.-Atty. Heney of San Francisco county is reported to be preparing to try Luther Brown on a charge of kidnaping, preferred by Freemont Older. Attorneys in this city are watching with interest this neck-and-neck race of indictments, and where bets are made the odds are even.

Private counsel will be employed to conduct affairs by both sides in the Township Court, and the District Attorney's office will be represented by Deputy Dist.-Atty. Ray Horton. It is stated by the local attorneys that there will be some interesting developments.

LEAVES FORTUNE.
WILL FILED FOR PROBATE.

The will of the late Attorney P. F. Dooner, who died October 6 at the age of 63 years, was filed in the Probate Court yesterday for probate. The entire estate is valued at $70,000, and the widow, Mrs. Cynthia Dooner, Miss Clara Dooner and Arthur G. Stepper, son-in-law of the deceased, are nominated as executors.

The fortune, which is really much greater than the amount set forth in the petition owing to the recent great advance in the value of business property near Ninth street and Broadway, is divided among the members of Mr. Dooner's family. Besides those named Mrs. Mabel D. Stepper, Arthur W. Stepper, a grandson, and Miss Effie J. Alger, are beneficiaries under the will.

FIND FOR CITY.
RAILROAD LOSES A STRIP.

The report of the referees appointed by the Superior Court in the suit of the City of Los Angeles against the Southern Pacific and D. O. Mills and Homer S. King as trustees for that road and the Central Trust Company of New York, in condemnation proceedings to acquire a strip of land sixty feet wide and 100 feet long for the opening of San Pablo street, filed their report in the Superior Court yesterday.

The referees were Fred L. Sexton, James F. Thompson and Thomas A. Lewis. They find that the land required for the extension of San Pablo street is worth $480, the improvements are valued at $320, but deny any sum for damages. The expenses of the commission amounted to $60, making a total for this strip of $860.

The new road crosses a right of way for the Espee near Alhambra avenue, though San Pablo street is to be opened from Lamble street.

HIS LAST CHANCE.
PETITION FOR HABEAS CORPUS.

P. J. Flynn, the Sawtelle "blind pigger," who was sentenced to a fine of $100 and sixty days in the County Jail by Justice Stephens on Friday, played his last trumps yesterday when his attorneys, Paul Schenck and Chester Smith, filed a petition in the Superior Court for a writ of habeas corpus.

Deputy Dist.-Atty. Paul McCormick, who successfully conducted the prosecution against Flynn, who had openly boasted his contempt for law, was indignant because the return of the writ was made for Monday morning at 10 o'clock, which is the time set for the trial of Flynn on a second charge of selling liquor within a mile and a half of a soldiers' home. The trial was to have been before Justice Klamroth in Pasadena, but now this will have to wait.

Flynn was before Justice Stephens yesterday in an application for bail pending his appeal to a higher court from his conviction by a jury, but this was refused. The habeas corpus is based upon this refusal of the justice to grant the prisoner bail.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.
BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

OFFICES MOVED. Tomorrow will see the opening in their new quarters at the corner of Spring and Franklin streets of the headquarters of the County Surveyor, Tax Collector and Assessor. The rooms formerly occupied by the County Surveyor will be turned into a trial room and chambers for Department No. 8 of the Superior Court, while the old headquarters of the Tax Collector and Assessor will be occupied by County Recorder Logan and his big staff. This will give room for the crowded records of the county.

PLEADS GUILTY. A. H. Ames was arraigned before Judge Smith in the Superior Court yesterday on a charge of burglary and pleaded guilty. On September 26 he burglarized the room of P. Daniels, and he was practically caught red-handed. He will be sentenced next Wednesday.

BADLY SCARED. Young John Wyat of Sawtelle, 17 years old, was a badly-scared boy when arraigned before Judge Wilbur in the Superior Court yesterday on a charge of rape. The judge conducted a rigid examination, and found extenuating circumstances, which prevented Wyat being sent to State's prison. He was released on probation for five years.

MORE WATER. Articles of incorporation were filed yesterday by the West Chino Water Company, with a capital stock of $20,000, of which $300 has been subscribed. The trustees are Ralph Bandini, Joseph P. Loeb and William S. White.

SUES RAILWAY. M. S. Crank began suit in the Superior Court yesterday against the Los Angeles Railway Company for $20,000 damages for injuries received on October 18, 1906. Crank in his complaint complains that on that date as he was stepping from the car it was suddenly started, and he was thrown to the pavement and seriously injured.

LAND SPECULATION. The Homeacres Company filed papers of incorporation yesterday with a capital stock of $200,000, of which $2100 is subscribed. The trustees are F. E. Schaad, Marion Cheek and Bertha Barnes.

Gold Teeth or Bridge Work

I have always heretofore shared with most people the dread of a dentist's chair. But now am sure I shall not dread the ordeal again, for at your office I can truthfully say "I was not hurt at all." Even the Bridge Work, which I had dreaded, was painless and most satisfactory.
MRS. EARL ROGERS.

I have been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all his different methods, and I can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. In extracting my teeth he did it without any pain to me. It is a great pleasure to me to recommend him and his method of treatment.
MILO M. POTTER,
Prop. Van Nuys Hotel and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

It is with pleasure that I state that I have had several teeth filled by Dr. Schiffman, and that he removed the nerve and filled the root of one of my teeth, and put on a porcelain crown which cannot be distinguished from a natural tooth, all of which was done without pain. JUDSON R. RUSH, of Davis & Rush, Attorneys, Bryson Block.

Dr. Schiffman has done bridge work and made crowns and extracted teeth for me and without any pain, and in the very best manner. I am pleased to recommend him.
C. H. PENROSE,
125 South Main St.

Dr. Schiffman has done a large amount of bridge and plate work for me, which was done in a very satisfactory manner.
A. J. BRADISH,
Chief of L. A. Detectives.

I had thirteen sore teeth extracted by Dr. Schiffman. I dreaded before he began, but it didn't hurt me one bit.
A. Y. ROBINSON, "Sandab Jack."
Avalon, Catalina.

Dr. Schiffman has extracted ten teeth for me, and I never felt the least annoyance. The operation was absolutely painless. He has made me a set of teeth that are highly satisfactory. They fit perfectly and feel fine.

I cheerfully recommend the doctor as a conscientious, efficient, painstaking dentist to any and all that require his services.
MRS. W. L. EWING,
1143 East 38th St.

Dr. Schiffman extracted eight teeth for me without a particle of pain, and afterwards made me a full upper flexible plate, which fits me perfectly.

I have given them a good test, as it has been a year and a half since they were made. I gladly recommend the doctor to all who are in need of dental services.
MRS. EMMA BIRKLE,
450 South Moline Ave.

We refer you to the Merchants' National Bank as to our reliability and responsibility.

No boys or students to experiment on you. With us you are not experimenting. We have stood a 15 years' test in Los Angeles.

I am pleased to state that Dr. Schiffman fitted me with both upper and lower bridge work, which I have worn for over a year with perfect ease and satisfaction.
MRS. CHAS. E. PACKMAN,
1216 Berendo Street.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth, I became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain.
D. K. TRASK,
Judge of Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Ten years ago a reputable dentist of Va. told me that a certain molar tooth could not be satisfactorily saved, and that it would probably not be of service for one year. It has not only served me for ten years, as Dr. Schiffman saved and crowned it, and comparatively speaking, without pain. I sing his praise.
OWEN M. ANDREWS,
Pastor M.E. Church, South, Cor 6th and Mateo Sts.

Several years ago Dr. Schiffman did some crown work for me which has proved entirely satisfactory. The work was done painlessly and with great skill. It gives me great pleasure to recommend him.
IRVING M. SMITH,

EL MONTE TOMATO CROP BIG AND PRICES HIGH; PICKERS SWARM FIELDS.

Pickers in the Record-Breaking Tomato Fields at El Monte.

The harvest of a remarkably fine crop of tomatoes near Los Angeles is nearing an end. The crop is absorbed to a large degree by Los Angeles and Pasadena canneries, which will ship the canned product afar. The quaint old town of El Monte has developed in three years into a wonderful tomato-raising center. William Pierson and Frank Reposa were the first in that section to go extensively into the raising of this crop, but they now have many followers.

More than 300 acres in large fields have been devoted to tomatoes this year, while nearly every small holder has a profitable "patch."

The "show-place" for El Monte tomatoes is the ranch of R. F. DeGarmo, just outside the townsite. He has a field of twenty-five acres of the Stone tomatoes, and the field is dotted with men, women and children, gathering them for shipment to the canneries. He estimates that his crop will total more than 300 tons and that growers in the El Monte region will net an average of $90 an acre.

Tomato pickers are paid 5 cents a box of an average weight of fifty-five pounds. Many Mexican women, who are the most expert pickers, earn from $2 to $2.50 a day.

Rowland & Hudson, near Puente, have over 100 acres in their various tomato fields, and other large growers are Frank Reposa and Jesse Bryant. Most of them grow the Stone variety, which, it is claimed, is always firm and smooth, with foliage so thick that there is no danger from sunburn or scalding of the fruit. It also is a prolific bearer, lasting well through the season.

Because of the unusually cool summer, the tomato season this year is almost a month late. Usually the first picking begins for packers in the middle of August, but it was not until the middle of September that the present crop was sufficiently matured to begin the filling of contracts.

The crops are all contracted to the various canneries and packers before the seed is planted. Growers, however, always plant several acres more than the amount called for in the contracts, disposing of the surplus otherwise if the demand proves good, while they can get them in on their regular contracts should the general market be poor.

This year's success is likely to result in a much larger acreage next season. For several years, it is said, the Pasadena canners have urged upon the El Monte ranchers to engage extensively in tomato raising, but they hesitated.

El Monte orchardists are also benefiting this season by high apple prices. There is a shortage in the northern crop, and comparatively few carloads will find their way here from that section. As a result, the best local apples command $40 a ton, at the canneries, and windfalls bring $25 a ton. Pasadena canneries take the bulk of the crop.

Condensed Charity.

An enthusiastic meeting of members of the Needlework Guild was held in the parlors of Hotel Ingraham. It was presided over by the president, Mrs. S. S. Salisbury. There were present twenty-six section presidents, and plans were laid for the work of the coming year. Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock an open meeting will be held at Hotel Ingraham, to which the general public and especially newcomers are cordially invited. Representatives of the various charitable organizations which have benefited by this very practical benevolence will speak and it is hoped that many new members will be enrolled in the guild. There are no dues or fees of any sort exacted, the simple contribution of two new garments during the year constituting the sole condition of membership. The splendid work of the guild has won the hearty appreciation and coöperation of the charitable organizations of the city and its members hope for a grand rally at the meeting on Thursday.

On October 17 a social celebration will be held at the clubhouse, corner of Twenty-second and Figueroa streets. Several musical numbers and some of the old Spanish dances will be introduced in the programme. Refreshments will be served in the dining hall, and the evening will be concluded with dancing.

The Drama—Players, Playhouses, Gossip of the Stage.

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

Sig. Lambardi's opera is to be heartily recommended to all who admire good music, capably rendered.

It is perhaps the first time in the history of Los Angeles that worthy music-drama productions have been made at such prices. Henry Russell, who came last year, offered three great stars—Constantino, Nordica and Neilsen—for a slightly higher fare and with immeasurably inferior supporting casts.

The success of such a company as this means much for the musical prestige of the city. Los Angeles is beginning to have a wide reputation as an amusement center. Big managers call it the new center of the Coast for things of the stage, and a bad season for the opera would mean a serious hindrance to advancement in the immediate future. Success, on the other hand, will go far toward providing the city with better attractions for longer periods, and toward establishing a permanent record for the town as a field of culture.

There is a sterling reason why the best in opera, concert and drama should receive merited patronage.

It is this: when the larger and more costly things find living business here, other things of merit, and probably more of them, come out the next year, thus displacing a certain percentage of poor and mediocre "attractions." When the big thing cannot find patronage, managers and promoters withdraw the best from the market and substitute second and third grades, which can do a successful season, either short or long.

Thus one season makes another, and inattention to good things one year almost irrevocably kills the artistic prospects of the year following.

Stage and music art is always upon a pedestal of business, and supply is infallibly ruled by demand.

Poor patronage for good opera, high-grade concert artists and the intelligent drama this year means, in all probability, no opera, cheap concert performers and few good plays next year.

Lambardi has already demonstrated a group of stars of surprising merit, and there is practically an entire cast not yet heard.

THE DRAMATIC WEEK.

"Salomy Jane," Paul Armstrong's dramatization of a well-remembered Bret Harte story, will hold the Mason stage this week, with Jessie Izette in the principal part.

The plot turns upon the sudden awakening of the emotional nature of Salomy Jane, daughter of a Kentuckian resident of California in the golden days of '55. The period is the romantic one of the Vigilantes. Salomy Jane appears in a background of redwood trees, and asks one of her numerous lovers to kill a man who had insulted her. Then a man—his only title in the play is "The Man"—appears and asks Salomy Jane's aid in escaping, he having shot her insulter the night before, and, being in danger from Vigilant vengeance. It transpires that the shooting was done to avenge another woman's insult, and Salomy Jane gives him directions to escape.

He is caught, however, with Red Pete, a stage robber, and the Committee decides to hang him on general principles. The head of the Vigilantes turns to Salomy, and suggests that, as the man has no other friends, she say good-by to him. She does, kissing him. He breaks away before they succeed in hanging him, and returns to Salomy. They are interrupted by Rufe Waters and another of Salomy's lovers, Jack Marbury, a gambler. One of the most effective moments of the drama occurs when Marbury discovers the disguise, and Salomy pleads for the man's life. Marbury is a highly ideal and chivalrous gambler—and lets the man go in peace. They—Salomy and The Man—eventually escape, and imagination pictures them as living happily ever after.

Liebler & Co. staged the piece, and it was first put on with Eleanor Robson in the title part.

Smith and DeKoven's "The Highwayman," going on today at the Los Angeles Theater, will be the last bill for the present from Healy's Opera Company, which will leave for Portland at the end of this week.

This opera was given its premier at the Broadway Theater of New York in December, 1897. When the company went on tour Arthur Cunningham was engaged to alternate with Joseph O'Meara in the title role, and it was while singing the part at the Columbia Theater, in San Francisco, that the Tivoli management heard Cunningham and engaged him, when there ensued a term of service in the West which is not yet broken. Cunningham will sing the part again tonight.

The Belasco company will play Eugene Presby's comedy, Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary," this week. The piece was used in the East two seasons ago by Henrietta Crossman. It is practically the good old "A Scrap of Paper," brought up to date, with the chief thread of the story retained, but with a number of new ideas. Miss Stoddard will play the principal role.

Following this, Willie Collier's farce, "On the Quiet," will be played, with Stone in the Collier part.

Harry D. Cottrell's rural comedy, "In Arkansaw," will hold the Burbank boards for a week of laughter while the company finishes its preparations for the Shakespearean revival.

The cast will call for the complete strength of the company, and old-fashioned, outdoor hilarity is the ruling note in the comedy.

Minnie Seligman will come to the Orpheum tomorrow evening with William Bramwell and a good-sized supporting company in the comedy sketch, "A Dakota Widow."

Mason and Bart are gmynasts of varied accomplishments, and are said to offer a sensational act. Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Barry are a pair of Los Angeles favorites, and should repeat their former local success in Mr. Barry's new sketch, "At Henfoot Corners." Lucy and Lucier offer a sketch entitled "A Fool's Errand." The four Arconis, a French quartette from the Folies Bergere, have a new European aerial act.

Holdovers from this week's programme will be "The Sunny South," Berry and Berry, and "A Night With the Poets."

"King and Queen of Gamblers" will be the final bill of the Ulrich melodrama stock, at the Grand Operahouse, commencing this afternoon.

A reception will be given on the stage after the matinée next Saturday, and friends of players will have an opportunity to bid them good-by and wish them good luck in new ventures.

Zeb's new burlesque, "The Idol's Other Eye," will be the chief bill at Fischer's this week. The leading part will be played by Eugene Wiener, recently at the Los Angeles Theater. Nellie Montgomery will return to the company in a characte role well suited to her talents.

Dramagraphs.

Neil Burgess has started his time-honored tour with "The County Fair," playing some of the smaller towns in New Jersey.

Percy Haswell will be Otis Skinner's leading woman in "The Honor of the Family."

Ruggiero Leoncavallo's new opera "Maja" will have its first performance in Mexico this season. It will be sung in Spanish, and the composer will superintend the production.

Mrs. Leslie Carter has as yet made no announcement of her new play with which she will open her season. Frank Wilstack will be her business manager this season.

Paul Armstrong is writing a play for William Farnum, who has been starring in "Ben Hur" and "The Prince of India." The play will give Mr. Farnum a chance to appear in a modern role.

James J. Corbett lost his temper during a performance in New Haven the other night, stepped out of the picture, shook his finger at the audience and complained of his treatment. Then the curtain was run down and Mr. Corbett refused to continue "The Lady and the Burglar."—[Dramatic News.

Martin Beck of the Orpheum vaudeville circuit has engaged Edward Connelly, who will appear in George Ade's serious playlet, "Marse Covington," as the headline feature of the "Orpheum Show" for the coming season. Those who will assist Mr. Connelly are Gerald McDougal Dallzell, Ernest Carr and Arthur Ebbetts.

Mrs. Richard Mansfield and son have left Seven Acres, New London, Ct., and gone to Maine for the benefit of Mrs Mansfield's health, which was broken by her devoted attendance upon her husband in his last illness, as well as by the shock of his death, which, to her, did not seem imminent.

Ezra Kendall will produce within a few weeks his new play by George Ade, tentatively called "The Land of Dollars." The comedy is based on the difficulties experienced by a rich old "good fellow," in disposing of his wealth. The description sounds like "The Bad Samaritan."

Mabel Taliaferro has sailed for England to look up some material in connection with her forthcoming starring tour in "Polly of the Circus," which Margaret Mayo is to write for her. Frederick Thompson, husband of the pretty actress, is said to be at work upon a sensational effect to be used in the play and which will outdo his remarkable storm scene in "Brewster's Millions."

It is said that Julia Marlowe will not undertake any new parts this season, and will postpone for the present the production of "St. Theresa," in which Bernhardt acted and which Miss Marlowe bought for America. She will not begin her stage work until the beginning of the new year, which will give her a short season.

The Shuberts announce that Frank Gilmore has been engaged as leading man with Mary Mannering for this season in "Glorious Betsy." Gilmore will play "Jerome Bonaparte," which was played last season by Robert Warwick, now playing Vronsky, in "Anna Karenina," with Virginia Harned.

A former member of Sarah Bernhardt's company is this season one of the additions to Mrs. Fiske's supporting force. This newcomer is Laura Donalde, born in Paris of French-English parents, and a pupil of Paul Mounet of the conservatoire and Mme. Emilie Broisat of the Comedie Francaise. She made her stage début with Mme. Bernhardt's company and acted in it for two seasons, leaving when Bernhardt made her last American tour, to play leading roles in various Paris productions.

Emma Calvé, who arrived in New York last week, passed the time away on the trip over from Naples by making and dressing rag dolls for the children among the steerage passengers, and finally concentrated all her skill upon one to be put up at auction for the benefit of the Seamen's Fund. For hair for the inanimate infant she drew upon her own abundant supply. The bidding began at $100 and stopped at $265, which Mrs. C. D. Phillips of Philadelphia paid for this unusual memento of a great artist.

The dramatic tastes of the King of England may be judged from the following list of plays, performances of which he attended during the late London season. They were: "His House in Order," "The Bondman," "Les Merveilleuses," "Peter's Mother," "The Dairymaids," "The Man From Blankley's," "The Morals of Marcus," "Toddles," "Le Voyage de M. Perrichon," "Education de Prince," "The Stronger Sex," "When Knights Were Bold," "Les Affaires Sont les Affaires," "L'Age Difficile," "Sixes and Sevens," "The Impudence of the Creature," "The Merry Widows," "The Corsican Brothers," "Mrs. Ponderbury's Past," "My Wife," and "Le Maitre de Forges." It will be noted that the King gave no encouragement to the "American invasion" of London theaters.

What more logical outcome to the matrimonial disturbances of the George Bronson Howards could there be than Mrs. Howard's surrender to the footlights. Conjugal fiascos ever were promising candidates for stage honors. George Bronson Howard, as the reading public must now be aware, is a literary young man of Baltimore. His domestic tribulations have received due attention from the newspapers. Mrs. Howard, under the name of Dos Howard, is already in rehearsal. Alfred E. Aarons pointed the way. He chanced to gaze upon her one day, and the following morning she was playing right end in the line-up of "Yama." Mrs. Howard is possessed of a voice, has a southern accent that is a match for Maclyn Arbuckle's, and is comfortable to look upon. Should she gain her divorce, the formula will be complete.

Two more years will elapse before the outlying cities will be honored with a visit from Alla Nazimova. If this Russian actress in "The Master Builder" can draw crowded houses—as she positively is doing—there is every reason to believe that she can remain indefinitely on Broadway, for, blindfolded, her managers cannot select a less comprehensible play than Ibsen's paretic masterpiece. She already has one season's engagement on Broadway to her credit. With the prestige gained by three consecutive seasons on the Street of Streets, her managers believe that the outlying communities will be feverish for a glimpse of her. At the psychological moment she will go on tour, not as your ordinary successful star, but as an artist par excellence, worth increased prices. About $2.50 is deemed the proper tariff.

It is fitting that American composers should occupy a prominent position in the programme scheme for the Worcester Festival golden jubilee celebration. Frederick S. Converse's new dramatic cantata, "Job," composed especially for this occasion, will be coupled with the first part of the most eminent contemporary English composer's "Dream of Gerontius." On the following evening Horatio W. Parker's familiar "Hora Novissima" will be sung. Patriotism has been a pronounced trait of the policy governing the choice of works for the Worcester Festivals of recent years, as is revealed by a survey of the programme since 1900. Beginning with that year American composers have been represented almost uninterruptedly, in the following order: In 1900, Edward MacDowell; 1901, George W. Chadwick; 1902, Chadwick and Converse; 1903 and 1905, Chadwick; 1906, MacDowell.

Mrs. Anna Yeamans, America's oldest actress, it was made known recently, will retire from the stage with the celebration of her seventy-second birthday on November 19 next. The honor of being the "grand old lady of the native theater" fell to Mrs. Yeamans with the death of Mrs. Gilbert and the retirement of Mrs. Sol Smith. Mrs. Yeamans has been before the public sixty-two years. It is in the roles she created while a members of the famous Harrigan and Hart Company in the '70's and thereafter that she is best remembered. Born in the Isle of Man of professional parents, the actress as a child was apprenticed to a circus. She married Edward Yeamans, a circus clown, in the '50's, and with him went to San Francisco in 1865, joining Charles Wheatley's Eureka Theater Company there. In 1868 her husband died. She was then a member of Mrs. F. B. Conway's Stock Company in Brooklyn. It was there Augustin Daly saw her and engaged her for his Grand Operahouse Company in New York City. Mrs. Yeaman's first role was as Little Julia in "A Farmer's Daughter," at New South Wales. Her present role, an Irish character part in the "Hurdy-Gurdy Girls," now at Wallick's New York, she says, will be her last. Following her retirement she will open a school for dramatic instruction in New York City.

A plea for a hearing on the New York stage no longer is listened to with ears cocked favorably because it is made with a foreign accent. It used to seem to some of us that Modjeska appealed all the more potently on account of the Polish flaws in her English; they seemed to impart a charm of enchanting distance, as if she had come from far away and in some way or other was the better for it. But when Salvini was urged to play here in bad English—"the worse the better," his manager declared, as there was "a fad for foreign guff"—the great tragedian did not reprove his sordid adviser with lofty disdain. For Salvini was something of a commercialist himself. The story is true of him that the provision in his Italian contract for four candles per night having been copied into his American contract, he insisted on getting the twenty-eight tallows at the end of every week, although candle light was unknown in our hotels, and carried a trunkful of the accumulation to his home across the Atlantic. So it isn't likely that he let his art sway his judgment as to acting in English. The proposal was that, as he was playing Othello in Italian to Booth's Iago in English, it would arouse extra interest if he spoke English—"the worse the better."

"What you call an Italian here—a dago?" he said. "Well, New York would not pay for an Othello in dago english."

Likely, though, the liking of foreign things was sufficient here to render Salvini's fear unfounded.

Friendship has accomplished much in the theater. It was the friendship of Arnold Daly and Winchell Smith that suggested to those players the idea of producing in this country the plays of Bernard Shaw. Their joint experiment was successful. Had it not been for the loyal friends that surrounded Wright Lorimer he would not have found it possible to produce the now successful "The Shepherd King," which no manager would touch at first. It was one of these friends, Roland Burke Hennessey, that helped Lorimer a great deal. Now Lorimer has engaged Hennessey to write a new play for him, and Hennessey has become associated also with the actor's business department. Some of the bitterest pictures on the other side of the shield were those that were supplied by the enmities of Macready and Forrest. These enmities gave occasion, among other disasters, to the Astor Place riots in New York, in which many were killed and more wounded. They were carried to England, also, where there were rival parties—one in favor of Macready and a smaller, but no less determined body of partisans, that held out for Forrest. An attempt to kill Edwin Booth was once made at McVicker's Theater in Chicago, but neither the madman that attempted that deed nor the other madman who later did kill William Terriss was impelled by enmity as much as by an unbalanced mind. Few actors had as many friends and enemies as Dion Boucicault, who enjoyed a peculiar facility of turning his friends into enemies upon slight provocation. He became estranged from John Brougham upon the same ground that caused coolness between Richard Mansfield and Clyde Fitch—the authorship of a play. This same cause had led to countless enmities in the playhouse, although there are plenty of other reasons that actors have for disagreeing with each other. "Punch has no feelings," old Dr. Johnson sneered at Garrick once, but the whole history of the people of the stage seems to show that instead of having no feelings Punch is likely to have too many and to have them too highly sensitized. Curiously enough, some of the best things that have come to the stage have come as the result of enmities that have existed among the people of the stage. That great charity, the Theatrical Fund in England, became established because of a quarrel between the two old funds, those of Covent Garden and Drury Lane. Some actors have produced plays that have been refused by other actors, and have produced them simply because they have been refused, and sometimes these plays have developed into successes.

Ester Ferrabini,

the beauty of the grand opera. She is of statuesque figure, and the merit of her fine voice and personal graces are enhanced by an unusually striking face and discriminative taste in costuming.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

If there could be but one distinguished concert visitor to Los Angeles this season, and the people of the city could choose that visitor, it is to be believed that the vote would be almost unanimous for Johanna Gadski.

Mme. Gadski, who is now at the very apex of her career, has proven herself the foremost soprano upon the concert stage. She holds a place in her class comparable only to the high station of her countrywoman, Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

And she is all this because she is more than a mere vocalist. Providence bestowed upon Gadski a great voice and a fine physique, but, even more fortunately, it gave her an admirable mind. Sopranos such as she could almost sing without voice.

She has been so many times in Los Angeles that scores of our people know her personally, while she, in turn, cherishes a warm affection for Southern California in general and this city in particular, and frequently writes concerning her liking for the great Southwest.

To know her personally is even a greater blessing than to sit at her concerts. She is first of all an admirable woman, an ideal mother and a devoted wife. She has not that incumbrance generally known as "the prima-donna's husband." Herr Tauscher—she is Frau Tauscher—is the American representative of the great Krupp gun works, and has carried through some very large deals with the United States government. He is very wealthy, and the owner of a magnificent home in Berlin, where all the vacation-time of his celebrated wife is spent. Herr Tauscher has been several times in Los Angeles, and has been frequently entertained.

Newcomers to the city may not know it, but six years ago Mme. Gadski had a principal part in the greatest presentation of "Les Huguenots" which the West has ever seen. The flimsy and much-worn boards of old Hazard's supported an all-star cast, and the old house rang that night with the great voices of Mme. Gadski, Suzanne Adams, Louise Homer, Eduard De Reszke, Antonio Scotti, and the extraordinarily brilliant French tenor, De Marchi, who was a meteoric feature of the final Grau seasons at the Metropolitan Operahouse, and who has been but seldom heard from since his return to Europe.

The women of the Dominant Club are issuing invitations for a noon luncheon, to be accorded Mme. Gadski, and the Gamut Club, not to be outdone, will tender her a supper, which will be given immediately after her concert, on Tuesday night, October 22.

Week at the Opera.

The second week of the opera will commence tomorrow night, with a revival of the ever-popular "La Boheme." The cast will include Mmes. Bertozzi and Ferrabini, and Signori Parola, Pacini, Lombardi and Bergami.

On Tuesday night "Il Trovatore" will be given, with Mmes. Gonzales and Pezzati, and Signori Signorini, Pimazzoni and Mauceri.

Wednesday evening will see a performance of "Rigoletto," with Mme. Padovani, and Signori Parola, Arcangeli and Wulman.

These operas will be repeated in the usual manner.

Local Concert Interest.

While foreign artists are being talked of for numerous local appearances, there is no less an interest in the concert enterprises of local people, a number of whom—and especially the women—are already shaping prospective musical affairs.

Mrs. Thilo Becker, nee Otie Chew, will be the first soloist with the Symphony Orchestra, and will probably be heard alone in concert later in the season.

Estelle Catherine Heartt has been making unusual preparation for the season, and will be heard in three song cycles, and in several "purpose programmes"—a novelty of her own.

Miss Bessie Bartlett, Mrs. Edmond S. Shank, Miss Blanche Ruby, Miss Elizabeth Jordan and Mrs. Nuncia Bittman are all to figure largely in the winter's public work here.

Symphony Seat Sale.

The sale of seats for the concerts of the Symphony Orchestra is now on at the Bartlett music store. The first concert will take place at the Auditorium, Friday afternoon, November 15.

Inaugural Recital.

The inaugural piano recital for the season at the Los Angeles Conservatory, by Miss Matilda Minkin, assisted by Miss Bessie Gardner, reader.

This little lady is the youngest of the aspirants for the Conservatory's silver medal, and was most successful in her numbers.

Studying in Berlin.

Musical Leader has a very good resumé of facts and figures on European study. Some pertinent paragraphs follow:

"To study in Berlin" is the day dream which occupies the mind of every music student. Fancy and fantasy color this picture with glowing tints, and it is only when the dream becomes reality that the colors fade from the canvas, leaving dreary sketches of drabs and grays. For it is not as easy nor fascinating as it sounds, and Berlin is filled each year with scores of disappointed students, made so by a failure to carry to a successful issue all the artistic dreams they have dreamed for themselves, and by the inevitable discrepancy between the cost of living and their slender stock of pennies. The theory of cheap living in Berlin is another of those bubbles, which, in bursting, scatter into thin air some of our cherished delusions. There was a time when a mark meant a dollar, but, alack, today for the music student who fondly imagines that such conditions exist at the present time! As a matter of fact, Berlin, in its change from a big village to one of the world's greatest cities, has taken on metropolitan airs, and underground railways, motor cabs, lifts and pneumatic post are all luxuries that have to be paid for in the current coin of the realm.

"Cheap living" is, of course, a relative term; but this article is written in the interest of those students who have not at their disposal an unlimited bank account, but who are either drawing heavily upon the family coffers or who have earned the precious dollars which they are to exchange for the artistic investment of European study.

A student with a big letter of credit is not concerned with conditions. In the first place—and it is at once granted that the many conspicuous exceptions prove the rule to be true—she is not so apt to take her work as seriously as those who have the spur which adversity gives to ambition.

And should she have a real love for and devotion to her work, she only has to settle down into luxurious quarters, look about for a high-priced teacher, take the best seats at the opera and concerts, and look frankly surprised when any one complains of the cost of living.

Unluckily, the rank and file of students who come to Europe are not of this favored minority, and it is upon them that the "soul-wasting struggle with worldly annoyances" falls most heavily.

One of Berlin's best-known teachers has lately announced her intention of refusing a pupil who has not an assured allowance of at least $75 a month. She argues, and quite rightly, that no one can live comfortably on less and that either the pupil would be reduced to such painful economy as materially to influence or handicap her in her work, or that the teacher would have the uncomfortable feeling that in demanding her standard of prices, she was depriving the pupil of some of the necessities of life.

To take, then, a $75 standard. Board and lodging in a pension, where a young girl away from home alone would be perfectly safe in staying, could not be looked for under 120 marks or $30 a month. This is a low estimate, and in many pensions does not include light and heat, and in any case means a small room and a back room. The next item is lessons. Most pupils come to Berlin with the expectation of studying with a teacher of international reputation, preferably with a teacher who is himself a virtuoso. These come high. From $5 to $10 an hour is the pritce they ask for lessons. If we average these two extremes and count on $7.50 an hour and one lesson a week, we shall have to subtract another $30 from our allowance. These prices only refer to piano lessons. Voice students do not get off so easily, as singing teachers not only estimate their time as more valuable than that of instrumentalists, but also require more frequent lessons.

Living and lessons are the two chief depleters of a modest allowance, but there are still a harrowing number of "little things" which assume startling proportions when added to the expense account. The biggest "little thing" is a piano; for an upright one pays $3 to $4 a month and for a grand from $6 to $10.

Most piano teachers require their pupils to use a grand piano for practice. With these three items provided for, there remains but the meager sum of $15 to cover all contingencies in the shape of concert and opera tickets, sheet music, tram fare and laundry.

Opera is not cheap in Berlin and seats are extremely hard to get. The demand is so far in excess of the supply that unless one is particularly enterprising a seat in the fourth balcony is absolutely out of the question.

Concerts are comparatively cheap if—and the "if" is a big one—you are early at the box office and get one of the limited number of inexpensive seats.

Autumn Song.

No clouds are in the morning sky,
The vapors hug the stream,—
Who says that life and love can die
In all this northen gleam?
At every turn the maples burn,
The quail is whistling free,
The partridge whirs, and the frosted burrs
Are dropping for you and me.
Ho! hilly ho! heigh O!
Hilly ho!
In the clear October morning.
Along our path the woods are bold,
And glow with ripe desire;
The yellow chestnut showers its gold,
The sumach spread their fire;
The breezes feel as crisp as steel,
The buckwheat tops are red:
Then down the lane, love, scurry again,
And over the stubble tread!
Ho! hilly ho! heigh O!
Hilly ho!
In the clear October morning.

The Blanchard Exhibition.

Perhaps no better criterion of our attainment in arts and crafts can be imagined than the present exhibition in Blanchard Hall. All the tenants of the building who work with the graphic artist's brush and pencil or with the craftsman's magic tools, are represented. Everybody, it seems, was invited to contribute to the pleasant and subdued gayety of the occasion, and apparently everybody responded with helpful alacrity.

In an exhibition like the present one, gathered together without preparation and without forethought, and also without any judicial scrutiny, one dare not look for many happy surprises. On the other hand, the frank absence of any standard of achievement eases the shock of disappointment. The good things and the bad things jostle one another in the happy-go-lucky fashion of exhibits at a country fair.

Yet, on the whole, the good things predominate to such an extent as to almost submerge and hide the bad ones. But unfortunatly most of the creditable things are not new. They are old friends whose fine faces have grown very familiar. We have seen some of them in public places more than once, and others more than twice.

I shall endeavor to briefly review the pictures on the walls in the present Art and Artists. The work of the craftsmen, arranged on tables and in glass cases, will receive attention next week. The painters who have hung canvases that have already grown familiar to the public, must rest content with a cursory notice—a glance or a word—for these pictures have already been spoken of in my column, generally with favor.

Among the painters of new things is Lillian Drain, a young woman of temperament, originality and daring. Miss Drain paints with a frank directness, and with a somewhat heavy hand. Her talent, which is great, does not, as yet, always please, but it never fails to interest. She is still compelled to a losing struggle with her materials. When she has at last mastered these, we may confidently expect beautiful and striking things from her brush.

Her "Dancer Resting" is striking enough, to be sure, but it is utterly lacking in beauty or repose. Its clashing riot of colors irritates and confuses us. The figure is wooden, the pose painfully self-conscious. On the other hand, some of the still-life accessories of the picture, when studied separately, are found to be charmingly painted—but they, unfortunately, are not the resting dancer. The artist's little character study in profile, "Miss Manners," is much better in every way than the "Dancer Resting." It realizes a quaint, old-fashioned type with much sympathy. The coils of the girl's hair are very well painted. Yet "Miss Manners," like "Dancer Resting," is rather heavy in color.

The twenty or thirty monotypes that Miss Drain shows, many of them in several colors, are admirable in every way, but, of course, all of them have been exhibited before.

Lida Price has a few new water colors, done at Santa Monica, "The Cliffs" and "A Gray Morning," which are delightful in sentiment and exceedingly good in tone.

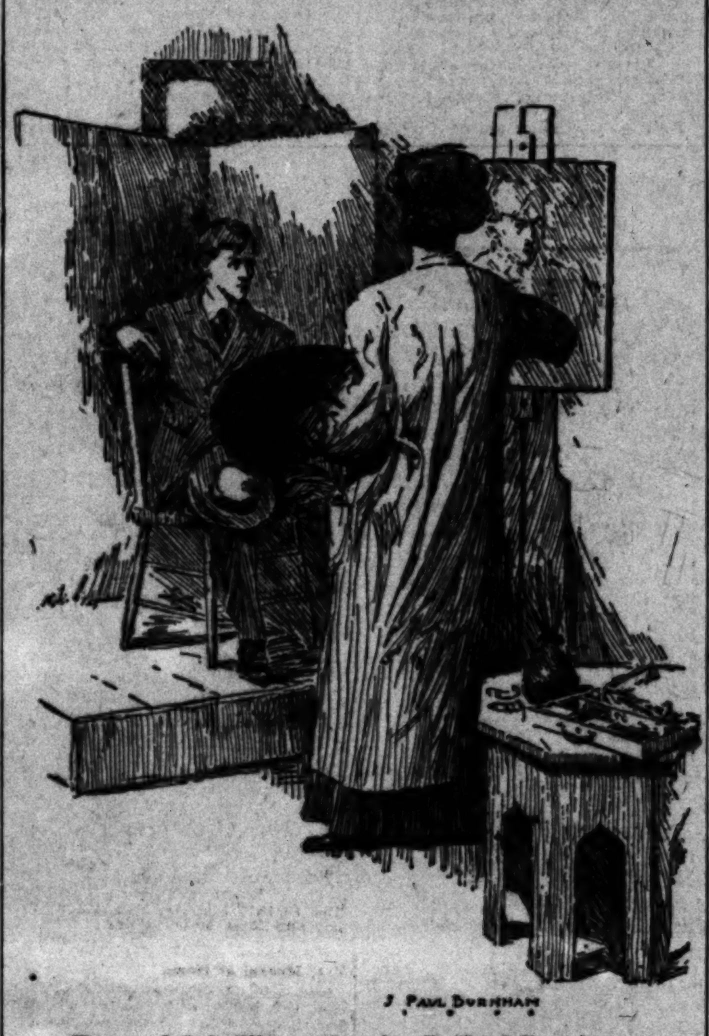
Mary Harland shows a few water color still-life studies and some small sketches done along the beach at Santa Monica. "Beach Shells" is very clever technically, done with admirable simplicity and sureness of touch; "Melons" has also the same quality of good craftsmanship. The beautiful miniatures that Miss Harland shows have been seen before.

Joseph Greenbaum is represented by three small canvases and one chalk drawing, all but one of which, "Gray Day on the Lake," have been in other exhibitions. Mrs. Borglum has several new pictures, "Ragged Robin Roses," "Wisteria" and "Sunset." Her large canvas, "Breaking Up of the Storm," was exhibited some months ago.

Nona White is represented by a number of good flower studies, a vivid sketch of "Tulips" being exceptionally striking in color and noteworthy in execution. J. Bond Francisco shows some California landscapes, and Miss Horlocker contributes the "White Chrysanthemums," with which we are already familiar. Mrs. A. B. McClosky shows an over-pretty "Portrait of a Gentleman," and several large studies of grapes and melons that aim too conscientiously at imitation, and so miss their mark as works of art. Helma Heynsen Jahn shows her well-known and beautiful "Child's Head" in pastels, and her "Automnia," also in pastels.

Some of the pupils of the Art Students' League are represented by excellent portrait studies in pastels and oils, and by several good drawings from life. The illustrative work of Harry Barndollar and J. Paul Burnham, in pen and in wash, occupies a goodly portion of one wall. It shows technical facility and excellent training. Both are young, and I understand they have gone into partnership and have taken a studio in the Blanchard building.

This exhibition remains open till the twenty-sixth of the month.



Pen and Ink Illustration, by J. Paul Burnham.

Mr. St. Clair's Water Colors.

Norman St. Clair, twenty-two of whose beautiful water colors were shown at his home last week, has returned to Laguna Beach, where he will remain, sketching, for about a month.

Some half-dozen of the pictures recently shown are new, and they prove conclusively that Mr. St. Clair is a painter who is not standing still, and who already ranks among the very best of the artists of our city. As a technician, he has no superior, and the poetry he infuses into his pictures is of that large, simple, genuine sort—never degenerating into mere sentimentality—which belongs to the sincere lover of nature.

"The Cañon" shows hills, heavy and massive, that are covered with verdure; it is beautiful in drawing and color. "The Cliffs," strongly handled, shows us a whirl of sea below high bluffs; the huge rocks in the foreground are painted with a sort of simple mastery. "The Passing of Summer" also gives us big, scoriated hills, covered with the yellows, browns and purples of autumn.

The aërial perspective of "Overlooking San Fernando Valley" is indicated with great skill. There are hills in the foreground, and the sky is a delicate yellow, luminous and elusive. "Montecito Oaks," one of the best of a collection which is all of a high order of merit, gives us a sinuous line of trees over well-modeled hills. There are blue mountains in the background. The values of the receding trees are beautifully rendered. But the most charming of these pictures, to my mind, is "Eucalyptus Trees," a decorative row of them dancing and shimmering in a brisk breeze. Technically this water color is impeccable, and it is full of a quiet sentiment.

Studio for October.

The International Studio for October opens with an appreciation, by Charles M. Skinner, of "The Domestic Pictures of Frank D. Millet," with ten illustrations from Mr. Millet's distinguished genres. A most illuminative and instructive article, the first of a series, by Morris Lee King, on "Practical Bookbinding," follows the Millet paper. Another article of instruction is "The Designer's Approach to His Problem," by James Parton Haney.

W. K. West writes of "The Landscape Paintings of Grosvenor Thomas," with many illustrations. Maude I. G. Oliver gives a critical estimate of "An American Portrait Painter, Wilton Lockwood." Some of Mr. Lockwood's most famous portraits are reproduced—those of A. J. Cassatt, Frank Seabury, Mrs. Sweetser, Otto Roth ("The Violinist,") John La Farge and Grover Cleveland.

Albert Sterner.

Although a typical graphic artist, and one who has for years drawn for publication, it is in his lithographs and his crayon and chalk portraits that Albert Sterner displays the fullest measure of his ability. That which is produced more or less to order is sometimes lacking in spontaneous grace or mystery; those trifles which he dashes off through impulse rarely or never fail to translate the particular mood or impression.

His vision of the outward world is not rigid and specific; it is vague and indefinite. At bottom his art is not an affirmation but a suggestion. He is no painstaking copyist of nature. He takes from nature only what is sufficient to clothe his ideas in appropriate and moving symbols. Subjective and sensitive to a singular degree, he is consequently often overwhelmed by unpropitious conditions.

A vapid or banal theme he will sometimes find it impossible to illuminate or to uplift, whereas to the most exalted conceptions he will often succeed in adding a further touch of beauty or imagination. He tells, for example, with amusing deprecation of an instance when he made three complete and wholly different sets of drawings for a certain story, each of which, he avers, seemed to him equally abominable.

ART NOTES.

Tomorrow some of the recent work of Marion Lehmann in artistic photography will be shown at Blanchard Hall. The exhibition, which will continue for two weeks, will comprise about one hundred specimens from this artist's beautiful plates.

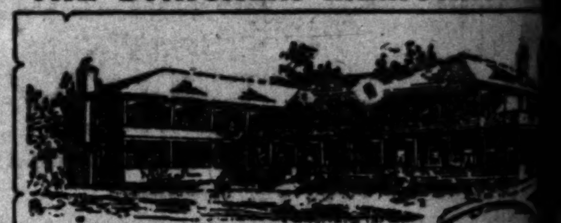
THE STRICKLIN MEMORIAL



Stricklin Memorial Home as it will be when completed. Business and City Officials contributing very liberally.

Hilliard Stricklin, an enterprising colored business man, has again launched his plan for the building of a home for aged colored people and colored orphans.

A few years ago Stricklin built such a home on Pico Heights, in a neighborhood where no colored people were living, but having done so thoughtlessly, he asserted, he quickly deferred to public opinion and sold the house to white people to be used as a private hotel. It was thought by some persons that the house had been built with a dishonest motive on the part of Stricklin, in order that he might sell it at a greatly inflated price, but he declares he lost money on it. Mayor Harper said that he had carefully investigated, and that in selling the place for $15,000 Stricklin didn't more than come out even. The Mayor is so thoroughly convinced that the project is worthy that he subscribed $500 toward it and has permitted his name to be used as a member of the advisory board.

The new home will be built over the same plans, and located at the corner of Alamo street and Santa Fe avenue, where Mr. Stricklin owns an entire city block, and where there is no objection to its location. The home is incorporated, with the following board of directors: J. E. As-

Society Vaudeville.

Nowadays one hears nothing at the club, at the theater, at the afternoon tea and even at bridge whist meetings but "society vaudeville," which is to be given under the direction of the Assistance League. The modistes seem to be all "fussed up" over the marvelous creations they are getting up for the various "artists." The "dreams" of costumes are taxing them all to their wits' end.

Mrs. Cosmo Morgan, one of the best dressed of the younger matrons, has already driven two dressmakers to distraction and they say Mrs. Connell and her double quartette of young men and misses have caused two tailor factories to put crepe on the door for several of their best "artists" have thrown up their jobs in despair.

Teddy Roosevelt has gone on a bear hunt, but the "real thing" is not down in a Louisiana canebrake. At the "society vaudeville," on October 18, there will be bears that would put our great President into a trance of delight.

Society vaudeville is "the thing." Rehearsals are on and the success of the amateurs is amazing. And such jolly times they are having getting ready for the "big show." Twice a week mysterious sounds emanate from the Connell barn and the creak of swings and the melody of songs indicate that there's something better than filling gasoline tanks or dusting off carriages.

There are so many features to be presented that the management is on the verge of asking for a revolving stage.

A few words concerning the exchange tickets should be said. They are now on sale at the Bartlett Music Company. Persons not holding exchange tickets will not be allowed to participate in the first selection of seats when the reservations begin on November 7.

The Hancock Banning Orchestra, under the direction of Edward Kammermeyer and Hancock Banning, has assumed such proportions that they are arranging to enlarge the orchestra pit.

And that "wonder-picture tree!" Well, the committee in charge of it has out-wizarded Burbank and everybody present will be wanting one in the front yard.

Edgar Temple, who has been secured as director-general of stage equipment, is considered one of the most

OUT-OF-TOWN SOCIETY

Pasadena.

THE past one has been a week of weddings in Pasadena. One of the most notable was that of Dr. Eugene Mattison, the youngest of the three Drs. Mattison, and Miss Laura Munn, daughter of Mrs. Alice F. Munn of North Raymond avenue, which took place Tuesday morning at the home of the bride's mother. Rev. M. J. McLeod of the First Presbyterian Church performed the ceremony. Dr. F. C. E. Mattison, senior brother of the groom, acted as best man, while the matron of honor was Mrs. L. D. Houghton of San Bernardino, formerly Miss Elsie Munn of Pasadena, and a sister of the bride. The bride wore brown broadcloth. Very elaborate were the floral decorations. A visit to Coronado, an automobile trip into Mexico and a visit to La Jolla will comprise their wedding trip. Dr. Mattison was a graduate from the Los Angeles Medical College in the class of '05.

Another wedding which was of much interest was that of Miss Ethelwyn Foote, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Foote of South Pasadena avenue, and James Stark Bennett, a young lawyer, which took place Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's parents. President George A. Gates of Pomona College, where the bride formerly taught biology, and of which the groom is a graduate, performed the ceremony. There were no attendants. Mrs. Herbert Smith, formerly Miss Alice Eaton, sang "The Four Leaf Clover" before the entrance of the bride. The bride wore a pearl-white crepe de chine en princesse with tulle veil and carried lilies of the valley and the same flowers caught her veil to her hair. The decorations of the house were arranged by Miss Tileston and were exceptionally beautiful. It was distinctly a chrysanthemum wedding and there was a great profusion of these fall blossoms. An informal reception followed the ceremony to which a number of additional friends were bidden. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett will live at No. 646 St. John avenue.

The marriage of Miss Clara Palmer, formerly of Kansas, and Charles Platt, which took place Tuesday in Los Angeles, came as a great surprise to the friends of the young people in Pasadena. Mr. and Mrs. Platt have left for Arizona, where they will spend a few months.

Miss Hazel Dole, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Dole, was married Monday evening to Roy Bradley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Watson Bradley, the Rev. V. Hunter Brink, pastor of Lake Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Bradley, will, upon their return from the bridal journey, reside on South Euclid avenue.

Mrs. Newell M. Hayden of Altadena left Monday for an eastern recital trip which will include recitals in several towns of the Middle West, and East.

Miss Dolly Short and James A. Quinn were married in Los Angeles at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Hawks, in the past week.

Mrs. D. W. Anderson of Waverley Drive entertained a few friends at dinner Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapman Smith, formerly of Washington, D. C., now of Pasadena, have issued invitations for an elaborate dinner dance to be given at the Pasadena Country Club next Thursday in honor of their wedding anniversary.

Miss Nellie Munson of North Raymond avenue, who left the past week for Madison, New Jersey, where she will be married to Rev. Leon Moore, was the recipient of a miscellaneous shower Tuesday afternoon arranged by her young friends of the North Pasadena Methodist Episcopal Church.

Perhaps the most unique affair of the week was the juvenile party given Friday afternoon by Miss Louise Crawford of North Euclid avenue when she entertained the ladies who took part in "The Romance of Phillipse Manor," a colonial play presented last winter by the dramatic section of the Shakespeare Club. Several luncheons and all-day house parties have been given by the various members of the cast. On this occasion the guests came dressed as children under 10 years of age. Mrs. Turner, the former president of the Shakespeare and Monday Afternoon Clubs, frisked about with a Teddy Bear as gayly as any child of 6. Mrs. W. H. Ballard, with her bewitching curls and blue ribbons, was a fascinating little maid. French sashes, baby caps, dolls and toys played a large part in the afternoon's enjoyment and later refreshments appropriate for little children were served. The guests included Mrs. W. D. Turner, Mrs. A. G. Merriam, Mrs. Sara Strieff, Mrs. Hegeman, Mrs. W. H. Ballard, Mrs. B. O. Kendall, Miss Louise Barber, Miss Grace Tower, Miss Anna Machin and Miss Pauline Lutz.

Long Beach.

ONE hundred and twenty-five members of the Ebell were present at the opening session of its twelfth year of existence on Monday afternoon. The cosy clubhouse was prettily decorated and seemed so "comfy" that the social hour was stretched to double its allotted sixty minutes. The session opened with the introduction of Mrs. J. J. Penny, the new president, by the retiring head, Mrs. Harry Barndollar, and in a fifteen-minute talk the new presiding officer told of the accomplishments of the past year, and outlined the work for the coming year. Chairmen of various sections followed in short talks, and then came the reading of the new constitution, which is to be adopted next Monday. It was decided to incorporate the Ebell Club, and as a preliminary, seven directors were elected: Mmes. J. J. Penny, J. M. Edgar, Jennie Reeves, George Barndollar, Hattie Young, E. C. Denio and Miss Jessie Benton.

Mrs. Ida Wheaton Riddle, State regent of the California Chapter of the Colorado Cliff Dwellers' Association, entertained the chapter Tuesday afternoon at her home on East Ocean avenue. The meeting was the first of the new year, and unique year books were given out. They are of brown wrapping paper, tied with raffia, while on the cover is the society emblem, the swastika cross. At the close of a business session, a social hour followed. Among the Los Angeles members present were Mmes. C. N. Green, A. J. Eaton, M. D. Gilman, and Nellie A. Geodan.

BY THEIR FRUITS —A TERCENTENNIAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America is assembled in triennial convention at the city of Richmond, Va., and incidentally is celebrating the tercentennial of the founding of that church in America, which took place at Jamestown three centuries ago. This Christian body has a solid membership of actual communicants numbering nearly 500,000 men and women. That is the numerical measure of the growth of the denomination during the 300 years. It brought over from the mother church in England a liturgy rich with the best thought of the Christian world in all countries from the first foundation of Christianity. The ritual is elegant in its dignity and full of poetic inspiration in its forms and phraseology. It has been during all these years an object of profound admiration freely offered to it by the cultivated minds outside of the denomination as well as inside. Its stately services, beautiful music and orderly rites are admired, whether performed at the altar of the church on Sunday mornings or by the side of an open grave, at the uniting of two persons in holy wedlock, in the administration of the sacrament of baptism, or the rite of confirmation.

The denomination has drawn to the fold this very respectable number of the highly-educated and cultured Christians of our land. It has built some of the most stately frames known in America. It has maintained schools of high grade during all these centuries, and has established colleges where sound learning has been acquired by many of our great Statesmen, professional men and business men of the several generations since the first colonies were founded.

The Episcopal Church undertook, in connection with this tercentennial celebration, to raise a large sum of money in the way of a men's thank offering for the preservation and spread of the church under divine Providence during these 300 years. Out of the membership of somewhat short of half a million, it must be recognized that more than one-half of the communicants of the church are women. Probably 200,000 would count the male communicants of the denomination. Many persons who attend the Episcopal Church, but are not communicants, contributed toward this fund. The offering was made of a recent day during the past week at one of the churches in Richmond. The result has been announced at about $750,000. Assuming that the male communicants number, say 200,000, it gives an average of $3.75 for individual offerings. It may seem at first glance a very small sum. But really it is quite respectable, gauging it by similar efforts made by this denomination and by some of the sister churches. What use this money is to be put to has not only not been announced, but has not been determined.

The Episcopal Church now in this triennial convention has undertaken another financial effort of vastly greater proportions and importance. The effort is to be to raise a sum of $5,000,000, the interest on which, properly invested, is to be devoted to pensioning the superannuated and otherwise disabled clergy of the church. This matter has a certain local interest about it in that a member of the committee charged with carrying out this purpose of the convention is Dr. J. J. Wilkins, the rector of one of the Episcopal churches in this city.

The pledging of this sum of money, six times larger than the men's thank offering, is not to be confined to any one class of communicants, nor even to the professed members of the church. Its scope is to be broader and he who will may give. Also she who will. With a membership of 500,000 persons the production of $5,000,000 will call for an average offering of $10 per capita. Of course in this list of membership there are a number of young people to whom the bearing of this tax would be impossible. There are families in the church numbering perhaps as many as five members and at the average rate such a family would be called upon to contribute $50, a thing out of the question with many of these families.

But the membership of this denomination, while it includes no person with the wealth of John D. Rockefeller, or with the liberality which has given $100,000,000 to education alone, yet does contain a number of men of exceedingly great wealth. In this men's thank offering, made the other day at Richmond, John P. Morgan contributed $100,000. This staunch and liberal churchman would undoubtedly be prompt to give at least an equal sum for the larger amount to be raised for endowment for the support of disabled clergymen. If the membership of this church is imbued with the spirit of true religion in proportion to its boast of high cultivation and good taste, the raising of the money should not prove insurmountable or even difficult. It is not in evidence here whether or not E. H. Harriman is a member of the church, but he is the son of one of its former clergy and knows by actual experience the difficult problem the clergy often have to solve in finding ways and means to bring up a family in decency and educate them properly on a salary of as little as $300 a year. Mr. Harriman has been wonderfully prosperous in his business career and if properly presented to him the cause for which this sum of money is to be raised could hardly fail to appeal to him and result in obtaining an exceedingly substantial amount for the cause.

The nation has from the beginning found it incumbent upon it to provide for its soldiers, both the rank and the file, when the time of retirement, supposed to be coincident with the time when active service becomes impossible, arrives. The clergy of the Episcopal Church, like those of other churches, are hardly so well provided for during the days of their active service in the church militant as are the officers of the United States army, and they are not overpaid. In many cases the meager pay of common soldiers in our army, when you consider that in addition to their pay, food, lodging and clothing are provided by the government, is really more nearly adequate to meet the demands of living and more nearly just, service and ability considered, than the salaries of many of these clergy. Few of them are paid more than barely enough to live on during the time of employment, and when old age, sickness or too strenuous devotion to duty render them no longer serviceable, they become objects of charity. It is not to the honor of their church, nor is it calculated to further the cause of religion in the minds of the un-church-going multitude, to have a condition like this exist.

The Episcopal Church has never undertaken a work of greater importance, which ought to appeal more strongly to the heart and conscience of its people, or to draw more help from non-church-going people than this of raising this endowment for the decent support of the disabled clergy.

Chatty Lady Susan Townley to Visit Capital.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—With the advent of the school year and the opening days of "bright blue October weather" came also the avants-coureur of Congress, parents in the Congressional set with children of school age, or sons ready for college. Mrs. Thomas H. Carter, wife of the senior Senator from Montana, has been here for a month, having come East with her youngest son, who is at Georgetown, and as is her custom, remained to make home an agreeable rendezvous for the "boys," as well as for her friends in general, who rejoice to find so hospitable a hostess "at home."

Mrs. Carter made her début as an official hostess here nearly twenty years ago, when her husband was serving as Montana's first Representative in Congress. She has since been sometimes in, and sometimes out of the national circle, but whether the Senator was on the winning or losing side of the political game, she remained the leading social representative of the "Mountain Land" State at the capital. Mr. Carter's successor in the Senate having been a widower during more than half of his term, and was then only accompanied here by his young wife for a brief season near the close of his service in the upper house of Congress. Mrs. Clark came to Washington straight from Paris, where she had lived long enough to become very "Frenchy" in her manner and more "Frenchy" in her choice of wearing apparel. She came, she saw and was seen, but her stay in the Clark mansion on aristocratic Massachusetts avenue was too short for her to conquer.

To be sure, Society (with a big S.) turned out quite en masse on her days at home, and after duly admiring their hostess's girlishly unconscious way of wearing the most exclusive imported toilettes, reveled in the opportunity to enjoy the pictures by old masters belonging to the superb collection that will one day adorn the owner's $12,000,000 residence now building in New York. They partook of dainty refreshments from a silver and gold service, that is rarely equaled for beauty, and departed with a place warming in their heart for the frail little woman who thus essayed a leading part in the social life at the capital of her native land, after nearly a lifetime spent in foreign places.

Mrs. Joseph M. Dixon, whose husband succeeds one of the world's richest men in the Senate, is no stranger in Washington, having been a Congressional hostess for four years. With an attractive personality, youth and looks on her side, it is easy to foretell a successful first season for her as a member of the Senatorial set.

The family circle at the White House is smaller than it has been at any previous time since the Roosevelts came to live in the historic mansion. The President, after cruising down the Mississippi River, is presumably in the canebrakes of Louisiana. Theodore, Jr., is a student at Harvard. The other two boys, Kermit and Archibald, are in preparatory schools in the North. This leaves only Miss Ethel and the baby, Quentin, at the White House with their mother. Miss Roosevelt, as the former will soon be known, is making sketches of attractive autumn scenes around Washington. She has already done some clever work in water color, and it is to enable her to give more time to her painting and the study of the languages, that she was allowed to give up school this year.

With the President on the wing in this country, his traveling Secretary of War on a mission of peace in the Orient, and the Secretary of State winning his way into the confidential regard of the people of Mexico, who have placed at the disposal of himself and wife during their stay in the South the palace at Chapultepec, which Americans on a less peaceful tour took by force some sixty years ago, Washington society will continue its air of anticipation, and at the same time enjoy to the fullest extent a "domestic and neighborly season." Morning calls are in order and the early guest may even be invited to eat bread and honey in the pantry with the queen of the house, or to sample the preserves and conserves which will later be set before the representatives of kings.

The work of putting establishments in order, and making other arrangements for the season's hospitalities, goes forward to the music of wedding bells, or the sound of the huntsman's horn. Then there is the Richmond horse show next week, which will be sure to draw many Washingtonians to the Capital of the Old Dominion; the New York horse show to be planned for early in November, and a round of visits between times to the country clubs of Maryland and Virginia, whose very names are suggestive of merry-making and feasting. There will be dashes through the crisp fall air to stir the blood, and delectable menus at each rendezvous to satisfy the inner man. Altogether, Washington is on the threshold of its happiest and best season, and the horse is king.

George Fawcett brought a touch of the "Golden West" to the Capital when he came here with the "Silver Girl," his new play by the author of "Prince Chap." The "Silver Girl" is, of course, no girl at all, only a mine in Western Nevada, where from his cabin door the hero declares he can look "for a hundred miles over God's country," and where neither people nor flowers grow so fast that they lose their natural characteristics. Everybody loves a lover, and so the playgoing public heartily indorsed "The Silver Girl" with its three delightful and fascinating love stories, its clever thread of comedy and wonderful scenic effects.

The Supreme Court circle is again complete and by the middle of October the diplomatic corps will also be in winter quarters. The British Embassy which for nearly a fortnight has been in the hands of profession cleaners, is again presided over by Ambassador and Mrs. Bryce, who returned this week from Intervale, N. H., where they spent the summer. As a souvenir of their sojourn in the White Mountains, they brought a landscape painted by Benjamin Champney and presented to them by the cottage colony of North Conway.

According to Dame Rumor, the Bryces are soon to have a visit from Lady Susan Townley, the chatty person whom the unofficial world held responsible for the sudden recall of the Mortimer Durands last winter. Furthermore, it is said that Lady Susan is coming here expressly to vindicate herself from the suspicion of being a gossip in diplomatic affairs. During her residence in Washngton as the wife of one of Sir Mortimer's secretaries, she added to the gayety of the nations here represented so frequently that few of her set were given a chance to con the pages of her "Chinese Note Book," which appeared in London shortly before her husband, who, by the way, is plain Mr. Townley, was accredited to this capital. But since she stirred up such a hornet's nest for the Durands, who were more popular on this side of the water than Lady Susan would like the British Foreign Office to believe, her book has proved entertaining reading for a large circle. Of special interest to Americans are the chapters which tell of the beginning of China's reform movement and the experience shared by the ladies of the various legations during the siege of Peking. The story is related in the same sprightly manner in which Lady Susan converses, and this is not the least of its charms.

The Swedish Minister, Mr. Lagercrantz, who returned to Washington with his wife and family this week, has an individuality all his own. He has never been in the diplomatic service before and never before held public office. He is conspicuous among his countrymen for broad humanitarianism and a keen interest in international affairs. He has no title, but he comes of a distinguished family, owns a large estate and employs hundreds of workmen in his iron works at Weisbo. After serving fourteen years in his country's army, he resigned at the age of 28, with the rank of lieutenant. He then spent three years in the service of the Salvation Army—one year in England, one in India, and another in Italy. Since coming to America in April, he has traveled over more territory than any one in official life, except, of course, Secretary Taft, and possibly, Ambassador Bryce, who like himself, is anxious to see all there is to be seen in the busy States.

The Russian Ambassador, who spent the summer at Collidge Point, near Magnolia, Mass., returned to Washington on Wednesday, accompanied by his wife and daughter. During her stay on the North Shore, Baroness Elizabeth, though frequently challenged by Miss Searle of Boston, maintained the swimming record she made the first summer she spent in America. She is easily the best swimmer in the younger set here, and besides, enjoys other sport with the best of them.

The dean of the diplomatic corps, Ambassador des Planches, of Italy, is now en route to this country, accompanied by the Baroness, who has been away from Washington for nearly eighteen months, and who will be welcomed back by many friends in the fashionable world. Her return, after so long an absence, and many reports concerning the probable resignation of her distinguished husband, is regarded here as an indication that Italy will not willingly relinquish first place for her Ambassador here. The position is a social distinction that comes to a diplomat only as a recognition of his priority of service at this capital, makes him the social arbiter on all matters of international etiquette here, and gives him le pas over his colleagues on all state occasions.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Orr and E. G. Ekstrom of Los Angeles, Mr. and Mrs. Knox Beans of San José, Kenyon Warren of Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Johnston of National City, Miss Marguerite Shelley and W. H. Holcomb of San Diego, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Schwerin, Miss Minnie Moosar, Mrs. M. E. Baxter, Mrs. Francis A. Martin and H. D. Martin of San Francisco, and Mrs. Henri Rerviers of Oakland are the Californians who were in Washington during the week.

GRACE PORTER HOPKINS.

Julia Ward Howe's New Hymn.

(Sung at the National Liberal Congress at Boston.)

Hail, Mount of God! whereon with reverent feet
The messengers of many nations meet;
Diverse in feature, argument and creed,
One in their errand, brothers in their need.

Not in unwisdom are the limits drawn
That give far lands opposing dusk and dawn;
One sun makes bright the all-pervading air,
One fostering spirit hovers everywhere.

So with one breath may fervent souls aspire,
With one high purpose wait the answering fire!
Be this the prayer that other prayer controls,
That light divine may visit human souls.

The worm that clothes the monarch spins no flaw,
The coral builder works by heavenly law;
Who would to conscience rear a temple pure
Must prove each stone and seal it sound and sure.

Upon one steadfast base of truth we stand—
Love lifts her sheltering walls on either hand;
Arched o'er our head is Hope's transcendent dome,
And in the Father's heart of hearts our home.

Brave Men Wept.

WHEN THE NEWS OF M'KINLEY'S DEATH REACHED PHILIPPINES.

BY LIEUT.-COL. J. A. WATROUS, U.S.A.

There have been Americans of whom civilized peoples will never cease to speak in terms of endearment and designate as having been in the front line of the world's great and useful men.

Among them will ever be found the name of William McKinley.

Last Monday, at his home town, Canton, O., where he located soon after his soldier uniform was put away in 1865, they dedicated a half million dollar monument.

Many other McKinley monuments have been builded.

But none of them was needed to keep him firmly fixed in the minds of those who lived when he lived and wrought. But they may lend inspiration to far in the future generations.

A President, judges and others, on the dedication occasion, spoke of the dead leader as soldier, citizen, statesman, President, husband and friend.

It quite likely is presumptuous, but I am tempted to add something.

I was in a little village at the north end of the Island of Panay, Philippine Islands, September 6, 1901.

It was pay day for a company of the regular army. The company was in line, the right of it close to the pay table at which sat the young lieutenant in command of the post and the company. Opposite was the paymaster, a major who had come down from Civil War days. On the table were piles of bills and silver.

"First Sergeant Williams."

"Sixty-one seventy-five paid. Count it, sergeant, and pass the word down the line directing the men to count their money."

So the ever interesting ceremony began. Without looking up, the major said, "I am ready for the next, lieutenant."

But the lieutenant did not answer or call another name.

Then the major looked at the young officer. His head was resting on the table. A telegram, which he had received just as he called the first sergeant's name, was in his left hand.

"Bad news from home, lieutenant?" asked the major.

Without speaking or raising his head, the telegram was passed to the major who read, re-read, breathed hard, gazed with wide-open eyes for a few seconds, bowed his frosted head and a moment later, when he started to read the dispatch was not ashamed of his tear-stained cheeks and broken voice as he handed it to the sergeant and asked him to read it to the company.

Hastily glancing at it the sergeant read, with trembling voice:

"Washington, Sept. 6.—President McKinley shot, twice, through the body, while speaking at Buffalo. Wounds not necessarily fatal.

"CORBIN, Adjt.-Gen."

To those officers and soldiers the closing sentence gave no comfort. With them those two shots in the body read death to the President—that, like Lincoln and Garfield, their great commander-in-chief had fallen by the hand of an assassin.

I shall not try to describe the pathos of that scene on far away Panay.

Not knowing just what to do the first sergeant felt that he must do something, and he acted.

He gave two commands: "Attention!" "Left face!"

At the execution of the orders he assumed the proper position, placed his campaign hat on his broad left shoulder and fixed his damp blue eyes upon the gently waving flag of the sorrowing nation, and, as if by magic, without a word of command, every campaign hat sought a left shoulder, and every eye, many of them swimming in tears, reverently looked at Old Glory.

In all the world, I am sure, there were no sincerer mourners on that sorrowful September day in 1901.

One week from then the dreaded but expected message, "McKinley is dead," came, and every flag in the Philippines, and there were thousands besides those with the army and navy, quickly was carried to half-mast. Every American soldier's and sailor's face in the Philippines was a badge of mourning.

Two non-commissioned officers had an exciting race at Antietam while the great battle was in progress, forty-five years ago the 17th of last month.

One was commissary sergeant of an Ohio regiment, the other ordnance sergeant of a western brigade.

As was his custom when a battle began, the ordnance sergeant, soon after Gen. Hooker's corps responded to the Confederate attack early in the morning, selected three of the spryest teams and the safest, most fearless drivers, and started for the battlefield. He was met by a division staff officer and directed to halt and wait until orders came to move.

At about the same time the commissary sergeant began to cook pork, beef and vegetables in large quantities.

Between 10 and 11 o'clock the staff officer dashed up and ordered the ordnance sergeant to rush the ammunition to the line and distribute it to any regiments of the division that needed it.

The three four-mule teams were urged to a rapid trot, and whipped from that to a fast running pace.

Suddenly a sergeant, followed by two army teams on a dead run, through a field, cut in ahead of the ammunition. The ordnance sergeant rode to his side and told the interloping sergeant that ammunition always had the right of way on such occasions. The rosy-cheeked young fellow grinned as he said, "All right, take it if you can," and then order his drivers to increase the speed.

Twenty rods ahead the road widened. The ordnance sergeant directed his drivers to pass the interloper and his wagons at that point. They did it. I'm sure that mules never came nearer to flying.

"I'll report you," yelled the Ohio commissary sergeant, as the last load of ammunition cut in ahead of his train.

"Report, and to hell with you," yelled back the ordnance sergeant.

A few minutes later both sergeants were up to the line, the one dealing out most welcome cooked rations to an Ohio regiment that had gone into the fight without breakfast, and the other in issuing needed ammunition to a division.

The end of the war found the two sergeants commissioned officers, serving on brigade commanders' staffs—the commissary as a captain and a brevet major, and the other as first lieutenant and brevet captain.

In the next war the enterprising commissary at Antietam was commander-in-chief of the army and navy—President of the United States—and the most prized document the ordnance sergeant has stored in a tin box, with various other commissions, is signed by William McKinley, President.

ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN.

A Trust Buster.

Mrs. Mary Quackenbos, who is going to help the United States fight the trusts in her capacity of Attorney-General's assistant, is said to be a very pretty, girlish-looking woman, who always dresses in black with touches of white. She comes of an old New York family and is a grand-niece of Admiral Hull, who was a partner of William Lloyd Garrison.

Helped Mark the Trail.

The Daughters of the American Revolution in Kansas have finished the marking of the route of the historic Santa Fé trail. Women of Missouri, Colorado and New Mexico have assisted and Utah societies have been formed suitably to mark the Great Salt Lake trail. The States through which the Lewis and Clark trail passed are also considering the subject of marking historic spots.

A Helpful Princess.

Princess Pauline von Wied, the daughter of the King of Wurtemberg, last week assisted a railway porter to wheel a truck at Rorschbach, on Lake Constance. The Princess, accompanied by her suite, had arrived from Friedrichshafen, when she saw an old porter struggling with a truck piled up with trunks. The man, who had to drag the truck uphill for a couple of hundred yards to the railway station, was in difficulties, when the Princess, seeing that no one took any notice of him, rope, and not only form useful commodities there, but supply to a considerable extent the demands of the foreign lands. Hence it appears probable that while weeds can hardly be made desirable, still, in his fight to exterminate them, the farmer may be able to turn some of them to account.

Some of the plants coming within this class are, in many States, subject to anti-weed laws, and farmers are required to take measures toward their extermination. It seems, therefore, desirable to make these pests sources of profit where possible. In many cases, when weeds have been dug, the work of handling and curing them is not excessive, and can readily be done by women and children. As a general rule, the prices paid for crude drugs from these sources are not great, and would rarely tempt any one to pursue this line of work as a business; yet, if in ridding the farm of weeds, and thus raising the value of the land, the farmer can at the same time make these pests the source of a small income, instead of a dead loss, something is gained.

Caution is given to the collector to be sure that the plant he is collecting is the right one. There are many plants that closely resemble one another, yet one may possess medicinal properties and the other be absolutely useless. Again, a plant may contain poisonous principles, and if represented to be something else, it might of course do untold injury. It is suggested that it would, therefore, be best, where any doubt exists, to send a specimen of the entire plant, including leaves, flowers and fruits, to a drug dealer or to the nearest State experiment station for identification.

In giving instructions concerning the gathering and marketing of the drug weeds, the bulletin says roots should never be collected during the growing season, as at that time they are deficient in medicinal properties. The roots of annual plants should be dug just before the flowering period, and those of biennial or perennial plants after the tops have dried, the former in the autumn of the first year and the latter in the fall of the second or third year. All dirt and foreign substances should be removed from the roots, as it is the clean, bright-looking root that will bring a good price.

The roots should be carefully dried by exposing them to light and air, on racks or shelves, or on clean, well-ventilated barn floors or lofts. They should be spread out thinly, and turned occasionally from day to day, until completely cured. When this point is reached, in perhaps three to six weeks, the roots will snap readily when bent. Large roots should always be split or sliced when green, in order to facilitate drying.

Leaves and herbs should be collected when the plants are in full flower. It is desirable that they retain their bright green color after curing, and this can be done by carefully drying in the shade. In the collection of leaves the whole plant may be cut and the leaves may be stripped from it, rejecting the stems as much as possible. In the case of herbs, the coarse and large stems should be rejected and only the flowering tops and more tender stems and leaves included. Both leaves and herbs should be spread out in thin layers in the shade, where there is free circulation of air, and turned frequently until thoroughly dry. Moisture will darken them. They should be placed under cover to avoid dew or rain.

Flowers are collected when they first open, or immediately after. It is not proper to pick them when they are beginning to fade. To preserve the bright natural color as nearly as possible they should be carefully dried in the shade.

Seeds should be gathered just as they are ripening, before the seed pods open, and should be winnowed in order to remove fragments of stems, leaves and shriveled specimens.

The plants included in this bulletin are burdock, dandelion, the docks, couch grass, pokeweed, foxglove, mullein, lobelia, tansy, gum plant, scaly grindelia, boneset, catnip, hoarhound, yarrow, fleabane, blessed thistle, jimson weed, poison hemlock, wormseed and black and white mustard.

Of the most common of the Southern California noxious weeds, hoarhound (also known as houndsbene, marvel and marrube,) occupies a prominent place. This weed has been naturalized from Europe, and escaping from gardens in this country, is now found rather abundantly in dry, sandy or stony soil in waste places, pastures, fields, along roadsides and near dwellings. It is abundant throughout Southern California, where it has proven a most troublesome weed, occurring almost everywhere and growing in such dense masses as to crowd out all other vegetation. It has spread rapidly over thousands of acres, taking complete possession of the land and destroying pastures. The leaves and tops of this bushy plant are used in medicine. These should be gathered just before the herb is in flower, rejecting the coarse stalks, and should be dried in the shade. The annual importation of this herb amounts to about 125,000 pounds. Three to 8 cents per pound is the price paid.

Dandelion is distributed as a weed in all civilized parts of the world, being especially troublesome in lawns and meadows, and flourishing in fields and waste places. It is the root of the dandelion that is used medicinally. The best time for digging dandelion root is from July to September, during which time the milky juice becomes thicker and the bitterness increases. The price ranges from 4 to 6 cents per pound. The annual importation exceeds 100,000 pounds.

Another common nuisance is catnip, the flowering tops and leaves of which are collected when the plant is in flower. When thoroughly dried these bring from 2 to 3 cents per pound.

Scaly grindelia, a kind of gum plant, and American wormseed are found to a limited extent in California, the former being quite common on the plains and prairies, and the latter occurring in streets and waste places.

Black mustard, introduced from Europe, is a troublesome weed, being common along roadsides, in cultivated ground, and especially obnoxious in grain fields and pastures. In Southern California it is a great pest, covering thousands of acres and forming dense, impenetrable thickets over six feet in height, in which birds have their nesting places, and by eating and excreting the seeds, help to spread the pernicious weed. The flowers appear from June to September, and as the plant is an annual, if care is taken to prevent the distribution of the seeds, it is not difficult to exterminate. The seeds possess great vitality, and may remain in the ground years before germinating. The tops may be pulled when most of the pods are nearly mature, but before they are ready to spring open. They should be placed on a clean, dry floor or shelf, allowing the pods to ripen and dry, when they will burst open, and the seeds can be readily shaken out. The price per pound ranges from 3 to 6 cents per pound.

PRESS BUREAU MISTAKES.

Enterprising Concern Tries to Make a Contract With Long Dead Author.

Not many weeks ago the newspapers were making merry over an enterprising press clipping bureau which sent a card to "Mr. F. Petrarch," in care of his publisher, inviting him to subscribe to their clipping service. Now the publishers of a recent edition of "Lithgow's Travels," a famous seventeenth century book, have received a similar card addressed to William Lithgow. According to the encyclopedias, Lithgow died about the middle of the seventeenth century, and as his book shows him to have been a gentleman of adventurous disposition, the publishers are holding his mail because of some uncertainty as to his present address.

Incidentally, the clerk whose duty it is to make out these cards must be thankful that the prodigality in the matter of titles indulged in by the writers of Shakespeare's time is no longer fashionable. The complete title of Lithgow's book is "Lithgow's Travels: Being the Totall Discourse of the Rare Adventures, and painefull Peregrinations of long nineteene Yeers Travayles, from Scotland, to the most Famous Kingdomes in Europe, Asia and Africa." But the person who made out the card of the clipping bureau gave up in despair on arriving at "Plainfield (sic) Peregrinations," and allowed a convenient "etc." to stand for the remainder of the title.

How Senator Crane Did It.

Senator Crane of Massachusetts probably is the most popular man in Congress. He has an extraordinary ability to make friends, which has put him among the half dozen men who manage affairs in the Senate. He is an adept compromiser, going from one man to another until he has ascertained what all can agree upon. He is most successful in securing the views of public men of especially secretive disposition.

When Senator Lodge had charge of the Philippines bill last winter he was worried over the attitude of various Senators.

"I wish I knew how Nixon of Nevada stands," he said one day to Crane.

"That's easy," responded his junior colleague. "Wait a minute." In a few minutes he was sitting besides Nixon. After a brief conversation he arose and beckoned Lodge to come to the cloakroom. When the two had reached a quiet corner he described Nixon's position.

"Well, you are a wonder," exclaimed Lodge. "How in the world did you do it?"

"Easily enough," was Crane's response. "I just went over to Nixon and said to him confidentially: 'Look here, Nixon, tell me how you stand on the Philippine Tariff Bill. Lodge wants to know, and I promised to find out for him.' Then he told me."—[Chicago Tribune.

CHAPTER VI—(Contiued.)

"The necklace was stolen from Raoul by a thief, who must have been one of the most expert in the world. Can you imagine Raoul's feelings? He came to me in despair, asking my advice. What was he to do? He dared not appeal to the police, or the Duchess's secret would come out. And he couldn't bear to tell her of the loss, not only because it would be such a blow to her, as she was depending on the money from the sale of the jewels, but because she knew that he was in some difficulties, and might be tempted to believe that he'd only pretended the diamonds were stolen—while really he'd sold them for his own use."

"As she's fond of him, and trusts him, probably she would have thought no such thing," I tried to comfort Maxine. "But, certainly, it was a rather bad fix."

"Rather bad fix. Oh, you laconic creatures, Englishmen. All you think of is to hide your feelings behind icy words. As for me—well, there was nothing I wouldn't have done to help him—nothing. My life would have been a small thing to give. I would have given my soul. And already a thought came flashing into my mind. I begged Raoul to wait, and say nothing to the Duchess, who didn't even know yet that he'd come back from Amsterdam. The thought in my mind was about the commission from your Secretary of Foreign Affairs. As I told you, I'd just sent him word in the usual cipher and through the usual channels that I couldn't do what he wanted. He'd offered me £8000 to undertake the service, and four more if I succeeded. I believed I could success if I tried. And with the few thousands I'd saved up, and selling such jewels as I had, I could make up the sum Raoul had been told to ask for the necklace. Then he could give it to the Duchess, and she need never know that the diamonds had been stolen. All that night I lay awake thinking, thinking. Next day, at a time when I knew Raoul would be working in his office, I went to see him there, and cheered him up as well as I could. I told him that in a few days I hoped to have eighteen or twenty thousand pounds in my hands—all for him. To let him have the money would make me happier than I'd ever been. At first he said he wouldn't take it from me—I knew he would say that. But, at last, after I'd cried and begged, and persuaded, he consented; only it was to be a loan, and somehow, some time, he would pay me back. In that office are several great safes; and when we had grown quite happy and gay together, I made Raoul tell me which was the most important of all—where the really important and valuable things were kept. He laughed and pointed out the most interesting one—the one, he said, which held all the deepest secrets of French foreign diplomacy. I was sure then that the thing I had to get for the British Foreign Secretary must be there, though it was such a new thing that it couldn't have been anywhere for long. 'There are three keys to that safe,' said Raoul. 'One is kept by the President; one is always with the Foreign Secretary; this is the third;' and he showed me a strange little key different to any I had seen before. 'Oh, do let me have a peep at these wonderful papers,' I pleaded with him. Before coming I had planned what to do. Round my throat I wore a string of imitation pearls, which I'd put on for a special purpores. But they were pretty ,and so well made that only an expert would know they weren't real. Raoul isn't an expert; so at the moment he fitted the key into the lock of the safe to open the door, I gave a sly little pull, and broke the thread, making the pearls roll everywhere about the floor. He was quite distressed, forgot all about the key in the lock, and flew to pick up the pearls as if each one were worth at least a thousand francs.

"While he was busy finding the lost beads, I whipped out the key, took an impression of it on a piece of wax I had ready, concealed in my handkerchief, and slipped it back into the lock while he was still on his hands and knees on the floor. Then he opened the safe door for a moment, just to give me the peep I had begged for, but not long enough for me to touch anything, even if I'd dared to try, with him standing there. Enough, though, to show me that the documents were neatly arranged in labeled pigeon-holes, and to see their general character, color and shape. That same day a key to fit the lock was being made; and when it was ready, I made an excuse to call again on Raoul at the office. Not that a very elaborate excuse was needed. The poor fellow, trusting me as he trusts himself, or more, was only too glad to have me come to him, even in that sacred place. Now, the thing was to get him away. But I'd made up my mind what to do. In another office upstairs was a friend of Raoul's—the one who introduced us to each other, and I'd made up a message for him, which I begged Raoul to take, and bring his friend to speak to me. He went, and I believed I might count on five minutes to myself. No more—but those five minutes would have to be enough for success or failure. The instant the door shut behind Raoul, I was at the safe. The key fitted. I snatched out a folded document, and opened it to make quite, quite certain it was the right one, for a mistake would be inexcusable and spoil everything. It was just what I wanted—the treaty, newly made, between Japan, Russia and France—the treaty which your Foreign Secretary thought he had reason to believe was a secret one, arranged between the three countries without the knowledge of England and to the prejudice of her interests. The one glance I had gave me the impression that the document was nothing of the kind, but quite innocent, affecting trade only; yet that wasn't my business. I had to send it to the Foreign Secretary, who wanted to know its precise nature, and whether England was being deceived. In place of the treaty I slipped into its pigeon-hole a document I'd brought with me—just like the real thing. No one opening the safe on other business would suspect the change that had been made. My hope was to get the treaty back before it should be missed. You see, I was betraying Raoul, to save him. Do you understand?"

"I understand. You must have persuaded yourself that you were justified. But, good heavens, Maxine," I couldn't help breaking out, "it was an awful thing to do."

"I know—I know. But I had to have the money—for Raoul. And there was no other way to get it. You remember, I'd refused, till the diamonds were lost, and would have refused, even if Raoul had nothing to do with the French Foreign Office. But let me go on telling you what happened. I had time enough. I had even a minute or two to spare. And, fortunately for me, the man I'd sent Raoul to find was out. I looked at my watch, pretended to be surprised, and said I must go at once. I couldn't bear to waste a second in hurrying the treaty off, so that it might the more quickly be on its way back. I hadn't come to visit Raoul in my own carriage, but in a cab, which was waiting. As Raoul was taking me to it, Count Godensky got out of a motor-brougham, and saw me. If only it had been anywhere, except in front of the Foreign Office! I told myself there was no reason why he should guess that anything was wrong, but I was in such a state of nerves that, as he raised his hat, and his eyebrows, I fancied that he imagined all sorts of things, and I felt myself grow red and pale. What a fool I was—and how weak! But I couldn't help it. I didn't wait to go home. I wrote a few lines in the cab, and sent off the packet, registeerd, in time, I hoped, to catch the post—but, after all, it didn't. Coming out from the postoffice, there was Godensky again, in his motor-brougham. That could have been no coincidence. A horrid certainty sprang to life in me that he'd followed my cab from the Foreign Office to see where I would go. Why couldn't I have thought of that danger? I have always thought of things, and guarded against them; yet this time, this time of all others, I seemed fated."

"But if Godensky had known what you were doing, the game would have been up for you before this," I said.

He didn't know, of course. Only—if he wants to be a woman's lover and she won't have him, he's her enemy and he's the enemy of the man who is her lover. He's too clever and too careful of his own interests to speak out prematurely anything he might vaguely suspect, for it would do him harm if he proved mistaken. He wouldn't yet, I think, even warn those whom it might concern, to search and see if anything in Raoul's charge were out of order or missing. But what he would do, what I think he has done, is this. Having some idea, as he may have, that my relations with certain important persons in England are rather friendly, and seeing me come from the Foreign Office to go almost straight to the post, it might have occurred to him to try and learn the name of my correspondent. He has influence—he could perhaps have found out; but if he did, it wouldn't have helped him much, for naturally, my dealings with the British Foreign Secretary are always well under cover—hence a delay sometimes in his receiving word from me. What I send can never go straight to him, as you can guess. Godensky would guess that, too; and he would have perhaps informed the police, very cautiously, very unofficially and confidentially, that he suspected Maxine de Renzie of being a political spy in the pay of England. He would have advised that my movements be watched for the next few days; that English agents of the French police be warned to watch also, on their side of the Channel. He would have argued to himself that if I'd sent any document away, with Raoul's connivance or without, I would be wanting it back as soon as possible; and he would have mentioned to the police that possibly a messenger would bring me something—if my correspondence through the post was found to contain nothing compromising. Oh, there have been eyes on me, and on every movement of mine, I'm sure. See how efficient, though quiet, the methods have been where you're concerned. They—the police—knew the name of the man I was to meet here at this hotel; and if, as Godensky must have hoped, any document belonging to the French government had been found on you or me, everything would have played into his hands. Raoul would have been ruined, his heart broken, and I—but there are no words to express what I would have suffered, what I may yet have to suffer. Godensky would be praised for his cleverness, as well as securing a satisfactory revenge on me for refusing him. The only thing which rejoices me now is the thought of his blank disappointment when he gets the news from the Commissary of Police."

"You don't believe then," I asked, "that Godensky has had any hand in the disappearance of the treaty?"

"I would believe it, if it weren't for the necklace being put in its place. Even if Count Godensky could have known of Raoul's mission with the diamonds, and got them into his own hands, he wouldn't have let them get out again with every chance of their going back to Raoul, and thus saving him from his trouble. He'd do nothing to help, but everything to hinder. There lies the mystery—in the return of the necklace instead of the treaty. You have no knowledge of it, you tell me, yet you come to me with it in your pocket—the necklace stolen from Raoul du Laurier, days ago, in Amsterdam or on the way there."

"You're certain it's the same?"

"Certain as that you are you, and I am I. And I'm not out of my mind yet—though I soon shall be, unless you somehow save me from this horror."

"I'm going to try," I said. "Don't give up hope. I wish, though, that you hadn't to act tonight."

"So do I. But there's no way out of it. And I must go now to the theater, or I shall be late; my makeup's a heavy one, and takes a long time. I can't afford to have any talk about me and my affairs tonight, whatever comes afterwards. Raoul will be in the box, and at the end of the first act, he'll be at the door of my dressing-room. The agony of seeing him, of hearing him praise my acting, and saying dear, trusting, loving words that would make me almost too happy, if I hadn't betrayed him, ruined his career for ever!"

"Maybe not," I said. "And, anyhow, there's the necklace. That's something."

"Yes, that's something."

"Will Godensky be in the audience, too?" I asked.

"I'm sure he will. He couldn't keep away. But he may be late. He won't come until he's had a long talk with the Commissary of Police, and tried to thrash matters out."

"If only your theory's right, then—if he hasn't dared yet to throw suspicion on Du Laurier, and if the loss of that letter-case with its contents is as much of a mystery to him as it is to us, we have a little time before us still; we're comparatively safe for a few hours."

"We're as safe," answered Maxine, with a kind of desperate calmness, "as if we were in a house with gunpowder stored beneath, and a train laid to fire it. But ——" she broke off bitterly, "why do I say 'we?' To you all this can be no more than a regret, a worry."

"You know that's not just," I reproached her. 'I'm in this with you now, heart and soul. I spoke no more than the truth when I said I'd give my life, if necessary, to redeem my failure. Already I've given something, but ——"

"What have you given?" she caught me up, quickly.

"My hope of happiness with a girl I love as you love Du Laurier," I answered, then regretted my words and would have taken them back if I could, for she had a heavy enough burden to bear already, without helping me bear mine.

"I don't understand," she said.

"Don't think of it. You can do nothing; and I don't grudge the sacrifice—or anything," I hurried on.

"Yet I will think of it, if I ever have time to think of anything beyond this tangle. But now, it must be au revoir. Save me, save Raoul if you can, Ivor. What you can do, I don't know. I'm groping in darkness. Yet you're my one hope. For pity's sake, come to my house when the play's over, to tell me what you've done, if you've been able to do anything. Be there at 12."

"I promise."

"Thank you. I shall live for that moment. Now, give me the diamonds, and I'll go. I don't want you to be seen with me outside this room."

I gave her the necklace, and she was at the door before I could open it.

CHAPTER VII.

IVOR IS LATE FOR AN APPOINTMENT.

I was glad to be alone, for as I had said, I wanted to think quietly.

Maxine had taken the diamonds, but she had slipped the necklace into the bosom of her dress, pressing it down through the rather low-cut opening at the throat, and had therefore left the leather case. I picked the thing up from the table where she had thrown it, and examined it carefully for the first time.

It had not been originally intended as a jewel-case, that was clear; and as Maxine's voice had rung unmistakably true when she denied all previous knowledge of it to the police, I judged that the diamonds had not been in it when the Duchess entrusted them to Du Laurier. He would almost certainly have described to Maxine the box or case which had been stolen from him, and if the thing pulled out from the sofa hiding-place had recalled his description, she must have betrayed some emotion under the keen eyes of the Commissary of Police.

The case which, it semed, I had brought to Paris, looked as if it might have been made to hold a peculiar kind of cigar, much larger than the ordinary sort. Within, on either side, was a partition, and there was a silver clasp on which the hallmark was English.

"English silver," I said to myself thoughtfully. The three men who had traveled in the carriage with me from London to Dover were all English. Of the trio, only the nervous little fellow who had reserved the compartment for himself, had found the smallest opportunity to steal the treaty from me, and exchange for it this red leather or case containing a diamond necklace worth twenty thousand pounds. If he possessed the skill and quick deftness of a conjurer or a marvelously clever professional pickpocket, as well as the incentive of a paid spy, he might conceivably have done the trick at the moment of alarm on the boat's gangway, not afterward, for when he had pressed near me in the Garé du Nord, he had been on the wrong side. But for my life, I could not guess the motive for such an exchange.

Supposing him a spy, employed to trace and rob me of what I carried, why should he have made me a present of these rare and precious diamonds? Would the bribe for which he used his skill reach anything like the sum he could obtain by selling the stones? I was almost sure it would not; and therefore, having the diamonds it would have been far more to his advantage to keep them than to stuff them into my pocket, simply to fill up the space where the case with the treaty had been. There would not have been time yet for the real diamonds to have been copied in Amsterdam, therefore it would be useless to build up a theory, that the stones given me might be false.

Besides, I reminded myself, if the man were a spy whose business was to watch and be near me, why hadn't he waited to see what I would do, where I would go, instead of taking a compartment, carefully reserving it, and trusting to such an unlikely chance as that I might force myself into it? Even if, after all, the three men had been in some obscure way playing into each others' hands, I could not see how their game had been arranged to catch me.

Maxine and I had talked for a long time, but not two hours had passed yet since I saw the last of the little rat of a man in the railway station. Though I could not understand any reason for his tricking me, still, I told myself that nobody else could have done it, and I decided to go back at once to the Gare du Nord. There I might still be able to find some trace of the little man and of my two other fellow-travelers. If through a porter or cabman, I could learn where they had gone, I might have a chance even now of getting back the stolen treaty. I had brought with me from London a loaded revolver, warned by the foreign secretary that to do so would be a wise precaution; and I was ready to make use of it if necessary.

I was beginning to be very hungry, but that was a detail of no importance, for I had no time to waste in eating. I went to the railway station and looked about until I found a porter whose face I had seen when I left the train. He had, in fact, appeared under the window of my compartment, offering himself as a luggage carrier and had been close behind me when my late traveling companion walked by my side. Questioned, he appeared not to remember; but his wits being sharpened by the gift of a franc, he reflected and recalled not only my features but the features of the little man, whom he described with sufficient accuracy. What had become of le petit monsieur, he was not certain, but fancied he had driven away in a cab accompanied by two other gentlemen. He recollected this circumstance, because the face of the cabman was one that he knew; and it was now again in the station, for the voiture had returned. Would he point out the cocher to me? He would, and did, receiving a second franc for his pains.

The cab driver proved to be a dull and surly fellow, like many another cocher of Paris, but the clink of silver and the sight of it mellowed him. I began by saying that I was in search of three friends of mine whom I was to have met when the boat train came in, but whom I had unfortunately missed. I asked him to describe the men he had driven away from the station at that time, and though he did it clumsily, betraying an irritating lack of observation when it came to details, still such information as I could draw from him sounded encouraging. He remembered perfectly well the place at which he had deposited his three passengers, and I decided to take the risk of following them.

When I say "risk" I mean the risk that the man I was starting out to chase might turn out not to be the man I wished to follow. Besides, as they had been driven to Neuilly, the distance was so great that, if I went there in a cab, and found at last that I had made a mistake, I should have wasted a great deal of valuable time on the wrong tack. If the driver had remembered the name of the street, and the number of the house at which he had paused, I would have hired a motor and flashed out to the place in a few minutes; but, despite a suggested bribe, he could say no more than that, when he had come to a certain place, one of his passengers had called, "Turn down the next street, to the left." He had done so, and in front of a house, almost midway along that street, he had been bidden to stop. He had not bothered to look at the name of the street; but, though he was not very familiar with that neighborhood, various landmarks would guide him to the right place, when he came to pass them again.

Having heard all he had to say, I reluctantly made up my mind that I could do no better than take the man as my conductor; and acordingly, with a horse already tired, I drove to Neuilly. There, the landmarks were not deceiving, as I was half afraid they would be; and in a quiet street of the suburb, we stopped at last before a fair-sized house with lights in many windows. Evidently it was a pension.

Of the man servant who answered my ring, I inquired if three English gentlemen had lately arrived. He replied that they had, and were dining. Would monsieur give himself the pain of waiting a few minutes, until dinner should be over?

My answer was to slip a five-franc piece into the servant's hand, and suggest that I should be shown at once into the dining-room, without waiting. My idea was to catch my birds while they fed, and take them by surprise, lest they fly away. If I pounced upon them in the midst of a meal, at least they could not escape before being recognized by me; and as to what should come after recognition, the moment of meeting must decide.

The five-franc piece worked like a charm. I was promptly ushered into the dining-room, and standing just inside the door, I swept the long table with a quick, eager glance. About eighteen or twenty people were dining, but, though several were unmistakably English, I saw no one who resembled my traveling companions.

Everyone turned and stared. There was no face of which I had not a good view. In a low voice, I asked the servant which were the new arrivals of whom he had spoken. He pointed them out, and added that, though they had come only that day from England, they were old patrons, well known in the house.

As I lingered, deeply disappointed, the elderly proprietor of the pension, who superintended the comfort of his guests, trotted fussily up to inquire the stranger's business in his dining-room. I explained that I had hoped to find friends, and was so polite that I contrived to get permission for my cabman to have a peep through the crack of the door. When he had identified his three passengers, all hope was over. I had followed the wrong men.

There was nothing to do but go back to the Gare du Nord, and question more porters and cabmen. Nobody could give me any information worth having, it seemed; yet the little man must have left the station in a vehicle of some sort, as he had a great deal of small luggage. Since I could learn nothing of him or his movements, however, and dared not, because of Maxine and the British Foreign Secretary, apply to the police for help, I determined to lose no more time before consulting a private detective, a man whose actions I could control, and to whom I need tell only as much of the truth as I chose, without fear of having the rest dragged out of me.

At my own hotel, I inquired of the manager where I could find a good private detective, got an address, and motored to it, the speed bracing my nerves. Fortunately (as I thought then,) Monsieur Anatole Girard was at home and able to receive me. I was shown into the plain but very neat little sitting-room of a flat on the fifth floor of a big new apartment house, and was impressed at first glance by the clever face of the dark, thin Frenchman who politely bade me welcome. It was cunning, as well as clever, no doubt; but then, I told myself, it was the business of a person in Monsieur Girard's profession to be cunning.

I introduced myself as Mr. Sandford, the name I had been told to give at the Elysée Palace Hotel. This seemed best, as it was in the hotel that I had been recommended to Monsieur Girard, and complications might arise if George Sandford suddenly turned into Ivor Dundas. Besides, as there were a good many things which I did not want brought to light, Sandford seemed the man to fit the situation. Later, he could easily disappear and leave no trace.

I said that I had been robbed of a thing which was of immense value to me, but as it was the gift of a lady whose name must not on any account appear in the case, I did not wish to consult the police. All I asked of Monsieur Girard's well-known ability was the discovery of the supposed thief, whom I thereupon described. I added the fact that we had traveled together, mentioned the incident at the gangway, and explained that I had not suspected my loss until I arrived at the Elysée Palace Hotel.

Girard listened quietly, evidently realizing that I talked to him from behind a screen of reserve, yet not seeking to force me to put aside that screen. He asked several intelligent questions, very much to the point, and I answered them—as seemed best. When he touched on points which I considered too delicate to be handled by a stranger, even a detective in my employ, I frankly replied that they had nothing to do with the case in hand. Shrugging his shoulders almost imperceptibly, yet expressively, he took my refusals without comment; and merely bowed when I said that, if the scoundrel could be unearthed within twenty-four hours, I would pay a hundred pounds; if within twelve, a hundred and fifty; if within six, two hundred. I added that there was not a second to waste, as the fellow might slip out of Paris at any minute; but whatever happened, Monsieur Girard was to keep the matter quiet.

The detective promised to do his best (which was said to be very good,) held out hopes of success, and assured me of his discretion. On the whole, I was pleased with him. He looked like a man who thoroughly knew his business; and had it not been for the solemn warning of the Foreign Secretary, and the risk for Maxine, I would gladly have put more efficient weapons in Girard's hands, by telling him everything.

By the time that the detective had been primed with such facts and details as I could give, it was past 10 o'clock. I could see my way to do nothing more for the moment, and as I was half famished, I whizzed back in my hired automobile to the Elysée Palace Hotel. There I had food served in my own sitting-room, lest George Sandford should chance inconveniently upon some acquaintance of Ivor Dundas, in the restaurant. I did not hurry over the meal, for all I wanted now was to arrive at Maxine de Renzie's house at 12 o'clock, and tell her my news—or lack of news. She would be there waiting for me. I was sure, no matter how prompt I might be, for though in ordinary circumstances, after the first performance of a new play, either Maxine would have gone out to supper, or invited guests to sup with her, she would have accepted no invitation, given none, for tonight. She would hurry out of the theater, probably without waiting to remove her stage make-up, and she would go home unaccompanied, except by her maid.

Maxine lives in charming little, old-fashioned house, set back in its own garden, a great "find" in a good quarter of Paris, and her house could be reached in ten minutes' drive from my hotel. I would not go as far as the gate, but would dismiss my cab at the corner of the quiet street, as it would not be wise to advertise the fact that Mlle. De Renzie was receiving a visit from a young man at midnight. Fifteen minutes would give me plenty of time for all this; therefore, at about a quarter to 12 I started to go downstairs, and in the entrance hall almost ran against the last person on earth I expected to see—Diana Forrest.

She was not alone, of course; but for a second or two I saw no one else. There was none other except her precious and beautiful face in the world, and for a wild instant, I asked myself if she had come here to see me, to take back all her cruel words of misunderstanding, and to take me back also. But it was only for an instant—a very mad instant.

Then I realized that she couldn't have known I was to be at the Elysée Palace Hotel, and that even if she had, she would not have dreamed of coming to me. As common sense swept my brain clear, I saw near the precious and beautiful face, other faces: Lady Mountstuart's, Lord Mountstuart's, Lisa Drummond's, and Bob West's.

They were all in evening dress, the ladies in charming wraps which appeared to consist mostly of lace and chiffon, and evidently they had just come into the hotel from some place of amusement. The beautiful face, which had been pale, grew rosy at sight of me, though whether with amazement or anger, or both, I couldn't tell. Lisa smiled, looking more impish than usual; but it was plain that the others, Lord Mountstuart among them, were surprised to see me here.

"Goodness, is it you or your ghost?" exclaimed Lady Mountstuart, in the soft accents of California, which have never changed in spite of the long years of her married life in England.

If it had been my ghost, it would have vanished immediately, to save Di from embarrassment, and also to prevent any delay in getting to Maxine's. But, unfortunately, a flesh and blood young man must stop for conventional politeness before he can disappear, no matter what presses.

I said "How do you do?" to every one, adding that I was as surprised to see them as they could be to see me. I even grinned civilly at Lord Robert West, though finding him here with Di, looking particularly pleased with himself, made me want to knock him down.

"Oh, it was a plan, as far as Mounty and Lord Robert and I are concerned," explained Lady Mountstuart. "Of course, Lord Robert ought to have been at the Duchess's bazaar this afternoon, but then he won't show up at such things, even to please his sister, and Di and Lisa were to have represented me there. Today and tomorrow are the only days all three of us could possibly steal to get away and look at a most wonderful motor car, made for a Rajah who couldn't take it, after all.

TRACKS UP MOUNTAINS.

none of the best, and accidents happened every now and then, so the superintendent has fixed up a scheme to put this part of the track in the finest condition possible. Reinforced concrete retaining walls are being built around every curve and alongside of every fill, so that there will be no wash-outs. The entrance to tunnels are being built up with concrete walls. In fact, everything possible is being done to reduce the chances of an accident on this section of the line.

The method used at present is to rush as many freight trains as possible up to the side tracks at the summit, from one side of the mountain, and then let the trains from the other side go down, reversing the method and repeating as often as possible every twenty-four hours, with several interruptions while fast passenger trains (which have the right of way) rush over the steep grade.

There is only one way that any more traffic can be handled at this point, and that is by building another road over the mountains, making it a double-track system.

This scheme is being seriously considered by the chiefs of the system, but it will mean so great an outlay of money that they are hesitating over the route. Some argue that the road should be laid parallel with the existing line, but others say that this would not be feasible, as at places the grade is cut right out of the solid rock, and it would cost twice as much as the original line. The engineers who oppose the parallel system have planned another scheme, which is to build another line fifty feet above the grade of the present road, following the easiest grade up the mountain.

Which plan will be used is still undecided, but one or the other must be adopted, as the Coast Line is in the same fix, and can handle no more traffic.

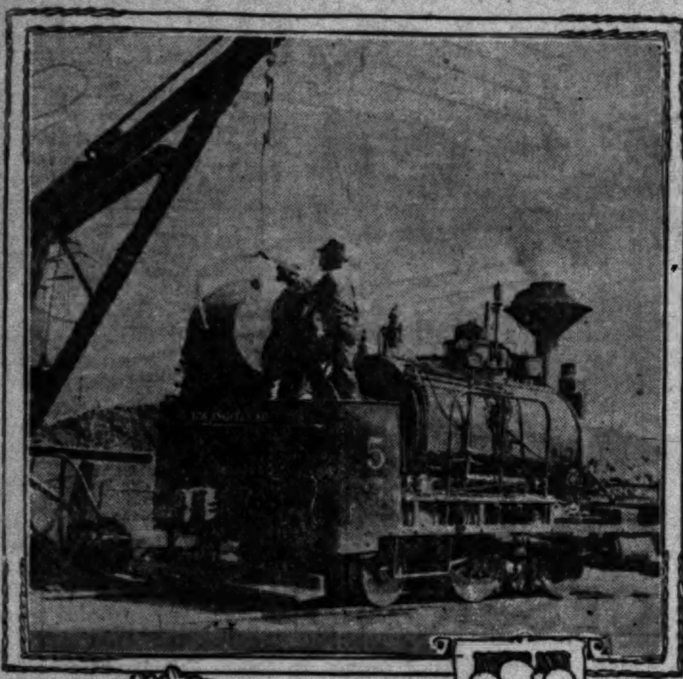
A fortune is being expended by the road to put the Coast Line in first-class shape. Rock ballast is being put in all along the bad places, and stone culverts, with concrete retaining walls, on the grades.

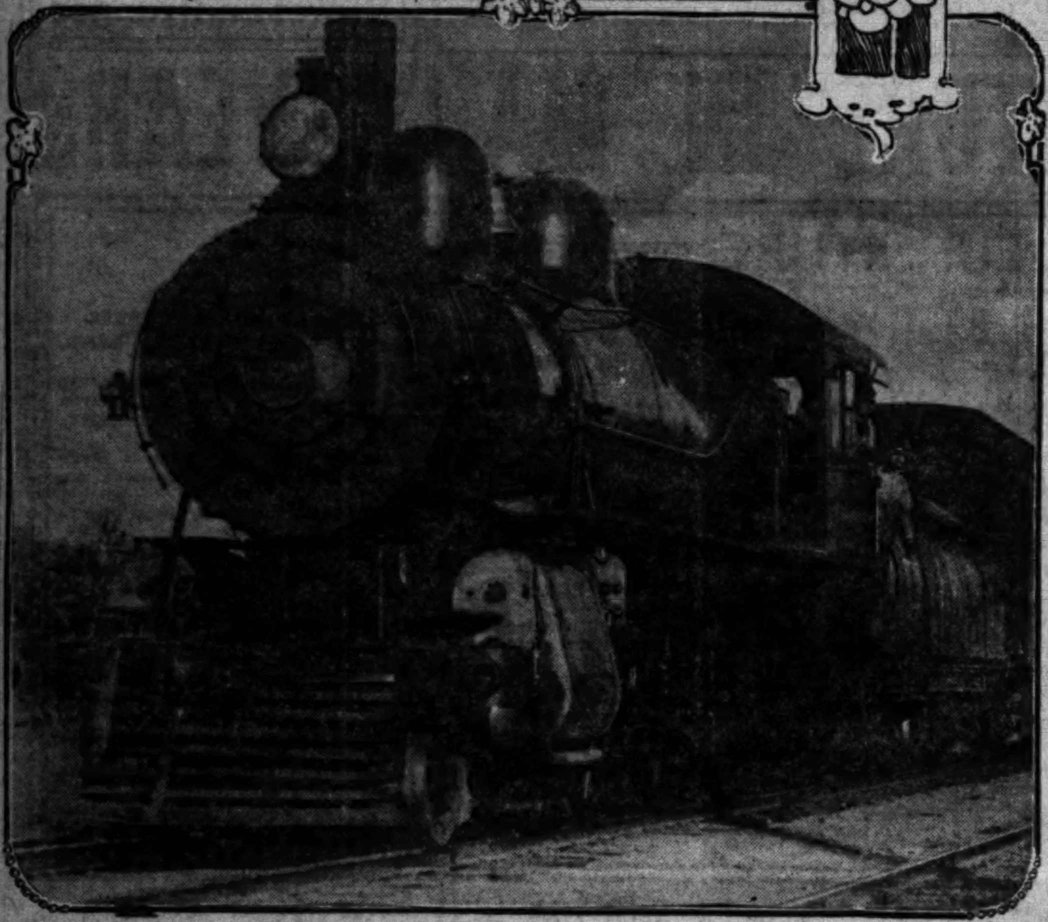
Should the Salt Lake have similar trouble this year and have to send their traffic around by other roads, as they did last winter, there will be the worst congestion of trrffic ever known in the State. As it is, the tourists will have to distribute themselves pretty well.

The increase in the lumber trade has caused a shortage of flat cars, which is made more serious by the constant demand of the government for rock for the San Pedro breakwater. The growth of the cattle business and the increased demand for sheep have caused a famine of cattle cars.

OIL TANKS SCARCEST.

But the worst shortage is in oil cars. There is a fight for the possession of every empty car that comes in, and sometimes when a batch of fifty will arrive, it is found that they must be distributed between fourteen city companies who have orders in for numbers varying from ten to 200 each. Not long ago a batch of 300 empty oil tanks arrived from the North. They were all turned over to the Associated Oil Company, and the row which followed, when the other companies heard about it, almost resulted in blood-letting.





One of the Big Sunset Limited Locomotives, which require constant attention from the motive-power department to keep them in condition to handle the heavy congested traffic. Above is a "teapot," smallest engine of the Southern Pacific, and used twenty-four hours a day handling work for the motive-power department.

POMONA.

POMONA, Oct. 12.—Attendance at the local public schools keeps increasing, although it was supposed the new registration was about completed. The rooms in the grade buildings are much overcrowded, and will continue so until the new Fifth Ward school building for which bonds have been voted can be erected. The attractive kindergarten bungalow being built on North Park avenue has been long needed, and will be rushed to completion. Many little tots who could not enter the local kindergarten this term because of lack of room, will be cared for in the new building.

A number of the friends of S. Carson Bowen, who was married in Santa Ana on Wednesday to Miss Winnie Lee, sister of Mrs. Ira Stevenson, made last night noisy and merry for the young couple with an old-fashioned "chivaree."

E. A. Rhoades and wife have returned from a trip to the hot springs near Elsinore.

An addition has been built to the Independent Fruit Company's packing-house on North Main street.

There is quite a demand hereabout for vacant land upon which eucalyptus groves may be planted, and several persons are planning to engage in the business on an extensive scale.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Ford are now living on Pasadena street in the house recently sold by W. B. Todd.

BETTER TERMINAL FACITILITES FOR GLOBE.

Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railroad Expends Considerable Sum in Improvements for That Town—Officers Investigate the Killing of Indian Jim.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

GLOBE (Ariz.) Oct. 11.—Work has been begun on the expenditure of $100,000 in improvement of the terminal facilities of the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railroad in this city. There will be a new freight depot, a handsome new passenger station, and roundhouse and shops that will cost about $50,000.

Lee H. Landis of Phoenix has been appointed to the newly-created office of general agent of the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railroad, and has been sent here from Phoenix, where he has been for several years general agent of the Randolph lines. G. H. Mauk of Phoenix has been appointed chief clerk.

The killing of Indian Jim, the Apache medicine man, slain lately near Gisela, in northern Gila county, appears to have been brought on by the late lamented himself. The county authorities have investigated the case, and believe that the two young Indians who shot the medicine man did so in an honest belief that they were acting in self-defense.

Thomas Ransom, an oiler in the engine-room of one of the Old Dominion shafts, slipped into the flywheel pit, and was brained by the wheel, death being almost instantaneous.

At Pine, in northern Gila county, last week, Alfred J. Randall was killed under the wheels of his own wagon. His six-horse team had become unmanageable, and he was pulled from his seat to the ground. He was 63 yeacrs old, a native of Illinois, and a prominent Mormon elder.

The Globe Barbers' Union is short $110, but has the satisfaction of having locked up its treasurer, J. W. Arthur. The treasurer fled when he learned that an auditing committee had been appointed on his books, but was arrested by means of a telephone message, about half-way between Roosevelt and Phoenix.

Several business houses in Globe have been entered lately and robbed of valuable merchandise, particularly jewelry and cigars. The criminal has been found in E. H. Hodges, a "dope" fiend, in frightful condition from the use of opium, morphine and cocaine. A number of saloon men were arrested later in connection with admissions made by Hodges, and have been charged with receiving stolen goods, particularly the cigars, which were peddled by Hodges along the street.

The residents of North Globe are actively moving toward the establishment of a branch postoffice, but it is probable that their needs will be satisfied at an early date by the installation of free delivery, to which the income of the Globe postoffice entitles the town.

A number of Globe business men are preparing to found a summer colony on Pinal Mountains, amid the pines, less than twenty miles distant from the city. The settlement will be somewhat on the order of the Iron Springs Colony, near Prescott, so popular with the residents of Phoenix in summer time.

TRAIN KILLS TWO.

HANDCAR ACCIDENT.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) Oct. 11.—Near Cedar Glade, north of Prescott, five section men on a handcar were struck by a freight train on the Santa Fé, Prescott and Phoenix Railroad. Two of the men, named Senora and Noreaga, were seriously hurt, and it is probable that the former will die.

An odd accident happened lately to an excursion train on the local railroad at Skull Valley. A telegraph wire stretched across the track had been allowed to sag, with the result that it ripped the headlight from the engine, pulled over the smokestack and tore off stovepipes and upper ventilators on the cars.

Sunday evening at Jerome, a Verde Valley rancher, Edward Packard, committed suicide by means of a shot through the brain from a rifle. He had lost heavily at gambling of late, though gambling is supposed to be a thing of the past in Arizona.

Several days ago a Mexican woman was arrested and held for insanity on the basis of a desire to appear in public unclothed. She had just disappeared from the County Hospital, and had been seen west of the city in company with a young Mexican, whom she had claimed as her husband. She gave her name as Della Gonzales, and is well educated both in English and Spanish. There seems little doubt of her insanity, as one of her latest escapades was to gather a pile of newspapers, which she fired in an attempt to destroy the hospital.

About the entire population of Humboldt has become interested in the fate of one Hattie Knox, who has fallen out of sight after leaving the Smelter City last Thursday, accompanied by two dogs, bound for a short walk. It is believed that her body will be found in some lonely gulch. The dogs have returned, but not a sign of the woman can be found.

John H. Scott has been arrested and brought to Prescott, charged with having taken possession of a ranch in the Verde Valley by force of arms, driving out the occupant, John Wilson, who represented the ostensible owner, W. A. Cook. Scott tells that he sold the ranch to Cook last May for $10,000, receiving $1000 on account, and that later Cook failed to meet accruing payments, and was proceeding to loot the ranch by selling off a large amount of valuable stock.

A Prescott attorney has failed in an attempt to assure Justice of the Peace McLane that "The Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that it is always 4 o'clock until it is 5 o'clock." The attorney had been just ten minutes late in appearance and judgment by that time had been rendered against his client.

J. R. Confar has sued the Arizona Smelting Company of Humboldt for $40,000 damages accruing through injuries received by the breaking of a belt in defendant's works.

It is reported that some sort of an understanding has been reached between the Santa Fé Railroad Company and Ralph Cameron, concerning disputed rights at the end of Bright Angel Trail, over which litigation has been in progress for several years.

It is believed probable that part of Grand Cañon Forest Reserve west of Cataract Creek will be opened before long for public entry, including about 240,000 acres. Most of it lies north of Williams and Ash Fork. It is very lightly forested.

CALIFORNIA OSTRICH RANCHES

Success splendidly assured! Of all newly launched enterpr the California Ostrich Ranches (Inc.) floats most proudly. Cap comes readily---eagerly---to embark in it. Of 20,000 shares of Tr ury stock offered for subscription, 10,000 have been reserved ready. Several Los Angeles men and women have subscribed from 5 to 100 shares each. Inquiries come from Santa Barb Pasadena, and especially from San Diego, for stock. There nothing like this on the market today. All other Ostrich Farm sto are such big dividend payers that they have been withdrawn sale. We now apprehend an over-subscription. You must no this chance slip. We advise you to reserve some stock as early morrow morning as our office opens.

Remember we are not only incorporated and organized, but already running one Ostrich Ranch and hope to have two in op tion by the time that the height of the tourist season is here.

Ostrich ranches pay better here in California than anywhere else on earth. The climate of Southern California is peculiarly adapted to Ostrich raising. The birds grow larger and healthier here than elsewhere. They produce finer plumes than in their native land. They live longer, fewer young ones die, they produce more eggs, and the chicks mature more quickly.

Each hen Ostrich lays an average of 36 eggs a year. The average hatch of chicks is 25 per cent. nine chicks a year. Ostrich eggs which do not hatch are never wasted, since the shells are in great demand for souvenirs.

Each bird yields an average of from 40 to 70 feathers at a plucking. At the age of nine months each chick yields as fine a crop of feathers as a full-grown Ostrich. The plumes are sold at from $5 to $50 each. Every Ostrich, therefore, earns in plumage about $375 a year.

All tourists who come to California visit the Ostrich Ranches, and their admission fees alone practically pay all expenses of feeding, care and maintenance. Nearly every visitor will purchase a plume direct from the factory, at from $5 to $50. This is independent of sales to California residents, who patronize this home industry to the extent of thousands of dollars a year. Profits from sale of plumes and eggshells are positive, permanent and prodigious.

BOUGHT THE SAN DI RANCH

The first of our chain of Ostrich Ranches in Californ lished at San Diego. We have bought the Bentley Ostri and factory in that city, and this week we enter upon ness of conducting the first of our proposed ranches. Mr. ley, former owner of the San Diego Ostrich Farm, and wh it in 1884, is retained as manager at San Diego. Mr. greatest living expert in the Ostrich raising industry States.

The San Diego Ranch is now earning money every following four sources:

FIRST—The Paid Admissions. During the month of August for the privilege of visiting the Ostriches.

SECOND—The Sale of Ostrich Plumes. The demand is much supply, orders being received from all parts of the United THIRD—The Sale of Egg Shells. The San Diego ranch cannot empty shells to supply the local demand for tourists for to Eastern friends.

FOURTH—The Increase in Ostriches, which will be very great The flock at this writing consists of 115 birds, although by words appear in print the number doubtless will be increas eggs are now in the incubator and some little Ostrich chi be hatched.

Our Second Ranch at O

Besides the maintenance and operation of our San Diego factory, our plans contemplate:

FIRST—A model Ostrich Ranch on the foothill boulevard just land. We have secured an option on a highly valuable adjoining the Toler Heights Tract, which has just been on the market.

SECOND—A retail store for the sale of plumes in the city This probably will be followed by the opening of other sa

It is for the purpose of securing capital for the rental, purchas fund above described that Treasury Stock in the Californ is now being offered for public subscription.

Officers of the California Ostrich

President—Horace Wilson, formerly president Mercantile Lo
Secretary—C. E. Wood, manager Overland Monthly Maga
Treasurer—F. A. Anderson, vice-president Industrial Invest Directors—R. P. Boyer, cashier Mercantile Bank and Tru Tex.; H. E. Folkenson, director Occidental Trust & Sav Angeles.

This is absolutely the first opportunity ever offered to the public to become part owners of an Ostrich raising business. Ostrich raising pays prodigious profits, which come not only from sale of produce, but also from the Ostrich Ranch as a show place, taking in thousands of dollars per annum in gate money. Where else can you find an industry which pays for itself as an exhibition, leaving the sale of all products as pure profit?

This is a business which is attractive from every point of view. Women especially would like to embark in it, but until now it has been practically impossible. Private individuals have made fortunes out of the busness and retired to private life to live upon an income for the rest of their days. This deserves full investigation and should attract popular investment.

THE SALE OF OSTRICH PLUMES IS A PROFITABLE INDUSTRY AND ORDERS ARE RECEIVED FROM ALL PARTS OF THE UNI BECAUSE OF THE SUPERIORITY OF THE PLUMAGE OF C BIRDS. PROFITS FROM THE SALE OF PLUMES ARE GOLDEN TIVELY CERTAIN.

E OIL INDUSTRY.

OIL FIELD S DISCOVERED.

BETWEEN WILMING- LOS ANGELES.

however, destroyed the entire crop of the Celestials and nearly ruined them. Investigation showed the water to be impregnated with oil, and however unlucky the affair was to the Chinamen it may add another large producer to Southern California's record list of oil fields.

The stratum runs to a finish on the coast between Redondo and San Pedro, and an extensive oil seepage is found on the beach and extending for quite a ways into the water. It is the opinion of experts that the same seepage would occur the entire length of Long Beach harbor, was it not for the fact that the beach shelves too gradually, a fault eliminated at the spot where the seepage does occur.

The Wilmington company has secured 700 acres, covering the ground that their experts located, and have started operations. The personnel consists entirely of Los Angeles or San Pedro men. J. W. Brunton is president; H. J. Robinson, secretary, and F. S. Carey, treasurer. Brunton is a well-known oil man in California fields, and there are other experts among the officers.

A sixteen-inch casing has been sunk to a depth of 750 feet, but was found to be too weak to sustain the pressure, and the work had to be discontinued. At a meeting of the directors yesterday afternoon it was decided to sink a fourteen-inches casing within the former, and save the sixteen-inches for a future well. It is even probable that the hole will have to be made smaller still.

Little pockets of oil were struck from time to time during the drilling, and strong gas pressure was always in evidence. At several times sand was thrown to a heighth of twenty-five feet or more by the explosion of gas and particles of gray shale have made their appearance. The oil is undoubtedly there, and it is thought that another 150 or 200 feet will be all that is necessary to strike it.

If the well "makes good" on its numerous promises, the work will go on briskly toward further development, and as the oil land is not entirely controlled by the Wilmington company it is probable that other companies will be formed to work the ground.

Any oil produced from this field could be easily loaded upon vessels in San Pedro Harbor by pipe lines, and it is thought that gravity would eliminaate any necessity for pumping stations.

ANOTHER FIELD?
STRIKE NEAR OCEAN.

A quiet little experimental well drilling in the Santa Monica Mountains, ten miles northwest of Santa Monica, is reported coming suddenly into oil at a depth of 410 feet yesterday, and to have added one more field to the list of producing fields of Southern California, having beaten the Wilmington field, now being developed, as far as the actual production goes.

The well is the property of the Santa Monica Oil, Gas and Mining Company, and the Los Angeles office has few facts concerning the gravity of the oil or the amount which the well will produce. The drilling superintendent on the ground sent the news of striking oil by a chance traveler, and shut down the well to await further instructions. The well is on the "ocean" end of the Newhall formation, in the same manner as the Wilmington field is on the "ocean" end of the Fullerton field.

It is said that the oil strata upon which the Newhall field is situated can be traced across hill and valley to the spot where it disappears in the ocean. Construction on the Malibu railroad has revealed strong traces of oil when crossing the end of the strata, and wharf building has shown oil seepage as far as a half-mile out into the ocean. Along the shore the seepage is very evident.

Those acquainted with the formation of the Newhall field and the new field in the Santa Monica Mountains say the formation of the latter corresponds exactly with that of the former, showing traces of volcanic action and a uniform strong gas pressure. The gas pressure, in particular, is said to be exceedingly strong at the ocean end, having forced a quantity of shale into the oil-rock formation. The oil-rock constitutes the larger portion of the soil, and the well is situated beside a great mass of it.

OLD PROCESS REVIVED.

Decorating the Robing Room of the United States Supreme Court.

[From the Washington Star.]

The small robing room of the United States Supreme Court has just been redecorated, preparatory to the reassembling of Congress and the opening of the fall term of the court. This is quite a small and obscure room, and possibly would be seen by few visitors at the Capitol in the course of the year, but the interest in the work lies in the fact that it has been done by a new process, or at least a very ancient process, that has never been used before in Washington, and it may prove a sort of test piece that will have decided influence on the future decoration of buildings for the government here.

The work is partly in fresco and partly by the old Greek process, where a dark ground is laid on and covered with a lighter tint and the picture then produced by cutting out the light upper layer and exposing the background. The whole work is by Max Friederang of New York. [Studio at No. 1236 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn.] The fresco process has been alluded to in the Star, being a revival of the old system to weatherproof fresco used by Michael Angelo, Tintoretti and a number of the old masters whose work has stood the test of centuries. The process has been used in this country for about two years, and has shown that delicote tints will stand exposure to outdoor weather in the latitude of New York without deteriorating.

The robing-room of the Supreme Court, where the work has been done, is quite a small apartment—one of the hardest in the Capitol to decorate effectively. The artist has worked with a view to giving an impression of space rather than excessive decoration and has succeeded so well that the room looks considerably larger than it really is. The chief part of the decorative scheme is the ceiling, where there is a representation of the laws of the universe symbolized by a globe showing the Northern Hemisphere surrounded by the stars and the rays of the sun. Below this on the arched ceiling are the laws of the States, represented by the national coat of arms, and in the corners the figures of four men, nude and partly draped, showing the progress of the race from primitive man, perfect physically, to the dawn of the destructive instinct, typified by a figure bending over a sword and a skull.

The lunettes below the arch of the ceiling and above the walls of the room are simply filled in with a shimmering blue-cloud effect, coming as near as possible to the sky on a bright day.

The mural decoration is finished by a frieze of thirty-two small heads in sepia on a light ground, representing the lawmakers and philosophers of Greece and Rome. The walls are in plain white, with the columns brought out in very light marble.

The effect of the whole is light and airy, the tints of the walls and ceiling almost duplicating the view of the sky and the trees seen through the windows. The coloring is so delicate and the tints so little emphasized that it gives the impression that the work must fade after it has been in position for a little while, but the artist expresses his confidence, in view of the outdoor tests already made, that the work will remain in the key in which it was first pitched for an indefinite period.

It is quite possible that if the work holds, as previous tests indicate it can, there may be more of the same process employed in future government decoration. Before the work was done samples of this system of fresco were submitted to tests by hot and cold water and strong sunlight, under which they stood up without any trouble. The recovery of the system from the old records of Michael Angelo's dairy makes a long and romantic story and was brought about through vain efforts to restore the frescoes in the Vatican some years ago.

WARNS AGAINST FAKE.

Geological Survey Announces That "Dr. Aug. Mau," Claiming to Be Inspector, Is a Fraud.

The director of the United States Geological Survey has sent out the following communication, warning mining men and others of the operations of "Dr. Aug. Mau," who claims to be an inspector in that bureau:

"On September 18 a man presenting the card of 'Dr. Aug. Mau' called at the office of the United States Geological Survey at rooms 22-23, United States Postoffice building, Sacramento, and claimed to have been appointed by the director as official inspector for that bureau.

"He was about 5 feet 8 inches tall, light complexioned, wore a sandy Van Dyke beard, and apparently was 35 years of age. He was well dressed in a gray suit, and had the appearance of being excitable. His manners were abrupt and peremptory, and his conversation absurdly inconsistent.

"The United States Geological Survey knows nothing whatever of this man previous to his visit on September 18. His allegations are absolutely false, and his claim of connection with that bureau wholly without foundation. 'Dr. Aug. Mau' is a fake and a fraud, and it is the wish of the United States Geological Survey officials that persons encountering him should be informed concerning his gross misrepresentations."

All the teachers and some new ones secured in the East, are now here and will be ready for the opening of the school on Tuesday.

TEMPORARY STORE.

Hub Clothing Company Will Open, Through the Holidays, on South Broadway.

The Hub Clothing Company has leased the first floor of the premises recently vacated by the Bon Marché, at Nos. 430 to 434 South Broadway, for a short term ending on January 1, 1908, and will place on sale a large stock of clothing purchased from first hands in the East. This will be known as Store No. 2, and will not interfere with the regular business on North Spring street at present, though there is a possibility that if the new location should prove tempting, a permanent store may be located somewhere on South Broadway. President Brown of the Hub Company says he purchased a quarter of a million dollars' worth of clothing at his own price, and will make a remarkable showing in the temporary store.

DEATH MET IN HORROR TRIP.

Frightful Suffering Endured in Labrador.

Pitiful Story of Lonely End of an Explorer.

Wallace Tells of Ill-fated Expedition.

Dillon Wallace, a short, stocky gentleman of quiet manner, who has experienced the horrors of the wilds of Labrador and who brought out of that country the body of Leonidas Hubbard, late assistant editor of Outing, has been a guest at the Hollenbeck for the last few days. He is en route to the west coast of Mexico on an exploring expedition of several months.

Dillon Wallace, explorer and magazine writer, now here, who brought Hubbard's body out of the wilds of frozen Labrador.

The story of the horrors and hardships encountered by Wallace during his ill-fated trip with Hubbard is a thrilling one.

"It was in the spring of 1903," said Mr. Wallace, "that Hubbard and myself started for the interior of Labrador. We had three objects in view: to gather data on the migration of caribou from the western to the eastern coast of that country; to study the mineralogy of the country, and to learn about the Nascaupee Indians, a peculiar tribe. We landed at Battle Harbor, Labrador, and in a small boat went to Rigolet, which is a post of the Hudson Bay Trading Company. Only persons connected with the company live there.

"After reaching the Northwest River, on June 15, 1903, we entered canoes and began the real invasion of Labrador. Our journey to Lake Mischikaman, which is in the interior of the country, was uneventful, except that we encountered frightful colds and the usual hardships of such journeys. Lake Mischikaman is about 2000 feet above the sea, and is little known to white men.

"On the trail to the lake we had discarded one sack of flour, as our loads were heavy and we expected to make the journey easily with the rest of the food we had on hand. But our food ran short, a series of accidents ruining the greater portion of it. So we started post haste back for civilization.

PACE IS KILLING.

"The pace we three—Hubbard, the Indian half-breed and myself—set to escape starvation was killing. Day and night we struggled on toward the sea coast. Hubbard began to fail. He staggered and we helped him for several days, but he finally collapsed. We hastily constructed a tent and wrapped him in our blankets. Then the half-breed and myself held a council.

"Never will I forget that night. Hubbard was tossing and turning, and we were gaunt with hunger. We had picked up the entrails of two deer we had shot on the way up, and devoured them. Pieces of the skin of the deer we also boiled and ate. Starvation stared us in the face. It had been snowing for several days and traveling, even for a well-fed, strong man, was most difficult, and for us it was well-nigh impossible.

"The Indian and myself decided, at the suggestion of Hubbard, to try to reach a point fifteen miles farther along the trail, where we had abandoned that sack of flour. Hubbard remained in the tent. We placed what little food we could get at his side and started.

"We had struggled along scarcely two miles when it began to snow again. It was bitterly cold. We only had fifteen miles to go but it took us over two days to cover the distance. We slept in rude shelters and ate a little pemican. Finally we reached the sack of flour. It was green with mould but I ate part of it eagerly. It made me sick at first.

"Joe, the half breed, said that there was a trapper about twenty-five miles farther, and I decided to return to Hubbard with the flour while the half breed went on to find the trappers. When I said farewell to the Indian I never thought that either he or myself would ever see civilization again.

"The next day it began to snow and for ten days and nights it snowed continuously. The drifts were almost impassable, and my feet were frozen. I could not stand up, on the third day, because of their condition. I had little shelter and for food, cut small pieces from the top of my moccasins, lighted a fire, and boiled them until the leather was softened and then ate it.

LIKE NIGHTMARE.

"I seemed to be doing things mechanically for I can only remember the rest as a sort of a nightmare. I was horribly cold, tired and hungry. I could only lie in my little shelter, fighting off that numbness that precedes death by freezing."

Mr. Wallace thinks that he must have been in a comatose condition for about three days before the halfbreed arrived with a band of trappers. They had been discharging their rifles at short intervals, and the shot which aroused Wallace was fired not more than ten paces from where he lay. He was so covered with snow that the trappers would have passed by him except for the shot.

"The rescuing party," continued Mr. Wallace," had food and of course I rallied immediately after securing something to eat. I could not walk alone, but, with assistance, managed to lead the party to where Mr. Hubbard had been left. We found him in the same position in which we had left him, but dead. Believe that he died the day the half breed and I left him.

"The snow was so deep that it was impossible to take the body out then and sorowfully we stated back over the long miles toward civilization.

"I finally arrived at a small trading camp, where there was but one doctor. He was a young Englishman, who was sick. My feet had become affected with gangrene.

"I remember vividly the young fellow. He was seized with hemorrhages soon after he reached my bedside. He laid down beside me and we talked as two men who might be about to die. He told me that the only way my life could be saved was by amputating both of my feet and that he was the only man within two thousand miles who could do it. But he had hemorrhage after hemorrhage and the second day he died.

"My constitution triumphed and I began to get well. But the early spring of the next year I was able to walk about and I hunted up the half-breed and prevailed upon him to go after the body of Hubbard. When he returned with it after severe hardships, I started on a 1000-mile walk, a team of dogs drawing the body, and finally arrived at Battle Harbor. I am proud to say that Hubbard's body went back to New England soil and was buried there."

Mr. Wallace has been visiting relatives of Mr. Hubbard in Long Beach.

CERTAINLY WORTH TRYING THIS.

GIVES PRESCRIPTION WHICH ANYONE CAN EASILY MIX AT HOME.

Kidneys and Bladder readily relieved by this simple home made mixture. Make some and try it. —A noted authority says there will be less disease here if this prescription becomes known.

Get from any prescription pharmacy the following:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Shake well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful dose after each meal and at bedtime.

The above is considered by an eminent authority as the finest prescription ever written to relieve Backache, Kidney Trouble, Weak Bladder and all forms of Urinary difficulties. This mixture acts promptly on the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys, enabling them to filter and strain the uric acid and other waste matter from the blood which causes Rheumatism.

Some persons who suffer with the afflictions may not feel inclined to place much confidence in this simple mixture, yet those who have tried it say the results are simply surprising, the relief being effected without the slightest injury to the stomach or other organs.

Mix some and give it a trial. It certainly comes highly recommended. It is the prescription of an eminent authority, whose entire reputation, it is said, was established by it.

formerly of classic proportions, and an eye which resembled a boiled gooseberry, sunk deep in the brilliant and varied hues of a summer sunset. Her indisposition did not, however, prevent her from inspecting "that horrid man" from behind her curtains, and secretly commenting upon the facts that he was certainly very good looking, and that he took sly peeps at her window as he passed.

If she had expected a repetition of Mr. Hepburn's former frenzied conduct when she again appeared in the corridors of the hotel she was disappointed. At first he seemed not to even see her. Then after they were introduced by a mutual friend, he treated her with the grave courtesy which a happy instinct told him would be most pleasing to a young lady with a high regard for the conventionalities of polite society.

It was only towards the close of the season, and when preparations were being made by her family to return to the city that, piqued by his indifference, she began to unbend a little. They met often, then oftener, then walked together. They discovered that they had many points of interest in common, although photography was not one of them.

"You see," explained Miss Carrington, "my brother takes pictures, and one crank of that kind is enough in a family."

One warm September evening they walked upon the almost deserted piazza of the hotel in the moonlight, and it seemed to Hepburn that the hour was ripe at last. Ardently, but this time with dignity and decorum, he told her again of his love. Memories of that other proposal must, however, have returned to the lady's mind, for she drew herself up haughtily and said:

"I am surprised and sorry, Mr. Hepburn, that you should so have misunderstood my sentiments toward you. I esteem and respect you, but I do not love you. I cannot marry you, but I will be a sist—" Miss Carrington paused and blushed. It was the regulation formula which she had tendered to more than one callow youth, but it was too obvious a chestnut to offer to a man of Mr. Hepburn's character and experience. To her utter amazement, he seemed to entertain no sensation of chagrin, or disappointment. Instead, he drew her only half-resisting form into his arms, and for the second time in their short acquaintance pressed a kiss upon her brow.

Again she intimated angrily, as she had once before done: "You are certainly the most presumptuous man I ever heard of. Don't you understand me? I said no!

Hepburn's face beamed with joy and satisfaction. "My sweetest girl," he said, gayly, repeating the osculation, "I hear you. But don't you remember that you learned long ago when you were in school that a double negative is always equal to an affirmative? This is the second time you've turned me down. What other conclusion can I draw?"

That evening, when the happy man was again alone in his room, he found in close proximity to the fateful piece of glass a letter placed there by the bell-boy, and bearing a special delivery stamp. It read as follows:

"Dear Hepburn—Did you take away with the rest of the stuff you bought of me last summer an open box of 4x5 dry plates? If so, for heaven's sake, return them at once. I hope you haven't monkeyed with and spoiled them. They were left here by a young fellow—Billy Carrington—to be developed and he is rending the earth because they can't be found. Wire if you have them. Yours,

"SANFORD."

Hepburn smiled, with some concern on his features, however. "What a careless fellow Sanford is," he said; "I always insisted that he would never make a business success. Still," he admitted, without a shadow of reluctance, "he does keep pretty good plates."

RECIPE FOR ROSY CHEEKS.

A lady, prominent in social circles just returned from a sojourn in Europe, brings back with her a valuable skin food recipe, which she says is in general use among the society women of France, who have an international reputation for their exquisite complexions. The recipe is as follows:

Two ounces of Rose Water; one ounce Spirits of Cologne; four ounces Sartoin (crystalized.)

Put the Sartoin in a pint of hot water (not boiling), soft water being preferable. When it is dissolved and cooled, strain through a fine cloth, add the Rose Water and Spirits of Cologne. This preparation to be applied twice a day or oftener and massaged thoroughly into the skin and if adhered to persistently is said to produce wonders even on the worst complexion or roughest skin. It is an inexpensive mixture and the ingredients can be gotten from any well stocked drug store, the above formula making enough to last quite a while, and sufficient for a very thorough trial.

LOS ANGELES-UTAH OIL COMPANY

Stock Goes Up to 25c a Share

The next allotment will be at 40 or 50 cents.

The initial allotment of treasury stock at the original price of 20 cents per share is exhausted.

We have secured a small additional allotment for sale at 25 cents per share to satisfy over-subscriptions and subscriptions that were tardy and arrived too late. The books closed on the first allotment at 20 cents last night.

If more money is needed to get out the oil on our 1000-acre tract, after the small portion at 25 cents is taken up, the price will then be 40 or 50 cents. For the directors believe they are warranted in saying that these shares are intrinsically worth 60 cents today.

The shares should go to $1 the moment we have fully proved our two miles of oil land with producing wells.

We are going deep for a "gusher." Our neighbors feared to go below 600 feet or to "shoot" their well. The first drill is at work and should be down 1000 feet in twenty days' time.

The oil already struck at 600 feet depth on adjoining land is equal in quality to any in the West, and is worth hauling to the railroad and shipment to Salt Lake City for refining.

Some splendid offers have been made to lease of purchase portions of our large tract, but the present plan is for this company to hold and develop it all.

A score of companies are scattering rigs over the field and events are moving so rapidly that January 1 will see the Virgin River Valley field well developed.

The new year will see great profits in this wonderful field. We have the cream of it.

Senator Nixon of the famous Mohawk mine and other Nevada men with land holdings will soon open a bank, a forty-room hotel and a general supply store in Virgin City and begin operating a regular line of freighters to the railroad at Lund Station.

Much oil machinery is now delayed on the sidtracks for lack of sufficient horses.

R. E. Knox of 815 S. Hancock st., Los Angeles, traveling engineer of the Salt Lake Railroad, said yesterday:

"All oil men who have been over the field agree that it promises to be the best in the world. I have been getting reports of many experts from West Virginia and Pennsylvania now in the Virgin River Valley, and they predict wonderful results. The first well that goes down 1200 feet will tap the main oil stratum, release the force of gas that is now sending out those seepages and make a 'gusher.' The oil taken out is worth $1.50 a barrel at a refinery."

Our winter drilling campaign is on. We are working on high ground, to avoid interruption from winter rains and freshets

A detailed statement will be sent to all stockholders as soon as we reach the first oil stratum, of which there are three.

The oil on adjoining ground is being sold for fuel to run the boilers of the numerous other drilling rigs and two wagons are engaged in hauling it to the railroad for shipment to the Salt Lake refinery.

This 25-cent stock will all be taken up in a few days. No more will be sold for less than 40 or 50 cents; even if more money is soon needed for development work.

A "gusher" will send the stock soaring, and we're going after a "gusher" well prepared.

Note the price on this small additional allotment—25 cents a share:
200 shares, $50. 800 shares, $200.
400 shares, $100. 2000 shares, $500.

If you desire to share in this investment, mail your subscription to this office AT ONCE.

Fair and ample notice was given to all that we desired to sell only a certain amount of the treasury at 20 cents a share, because we needed the money." The late ones may now secure their shares at 25 cents, but the allotemnt at this price is smaller than the first.

A month or two hence, if more funds are needed, any stock sold will go at 40 cents or 50 cents per share.

ZOO LIKE BRONX.

"It is truly wonderful, but I doubt if the people have the proper spirit to attempt to duplicate it here.

"They have just finished a house for the lions there at a cost of $180,000 and they are starting to build an elephant house that will cost not less than $200,000. These are just a few items to indicate the expense New York incurs to maintain its Zoological Garden."

The winning of the West has stamped out with a hoof of steel the native lair of most of the wild creatures of the mountain and plain. Many species are fast disappearing. During the last year the city has lost many magnificent specimens of native animals of the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Slope, animals of disappearing species that may never be replaced.

KEEPER SEES THEM DIE.

Head Animal Keeper Gerson seems to be competent to care for a zoo if it were located in a place where the animals could have dens and lairs, and could live something akin to their native state. At Eastlake he can do little; he sees the wild creatures waste away, and he is powerless to interfere.

Some have died of slow torture in the stuffy quarters in which they were caged; others from loathsome diseases contracted in the filth of the animal pens. When once these hapless creatures fall into the possession of the park department they are apparently placed beyond the pale of the Humane Society.

In the confined quarters of the Eastlake Zoo Animal Keeper Gerson pointed to wild creatures Friday that are dying a death of slow torture under the eyes of the curious. The roster of the dead is already greater than that of the living. He could almost name the number of months that some of the finest specimens will live in their death chamber.

"I must admit that not one of the animals here is properly housed," said the animal keeper. "Their quarters are better than they were when I came here a few years ago, and most of the animals are in better condition. But their cages are so cramped that it is impossible to care for them properly."

In the deer pens are two specimens of these fleet-footed children of the mountains that under proper conditions would be the pride of a regal zoo. The tawny skins hang like century-old parchment about emanciated forms, and their knees knock together as they walk. In their eyes there is a look of devouring pain. To keep these creatures confined in a runway smaller than a city lot is the refinement of human cruelty.

PATHETIC BABY DEER.

In one pen there bleated a three-months-old fawn, a puny deformed creature, the prototype of the bandy-legged children of the city slums. It seems almost beyond belief that this dwarfed baby deer adds to the pleasure of the sightseer who goes to spend an afternoon at Eastlake.

The fawn was born in the deer pen. The mother doe's period of torture ended three months ago. "It was inflamation of the bowels," said the animal keeper. Humanity characterises it as wanton murder in which a great city has taken part.

One buck is a fine specimen of the true "black-tail" deer of the Pacific Slope. This species is wholly a creature of the West. Repeated efforts have been made to raise a herd in Bronx Park, New York, but all have failed. The last report of the New York Zoological Society says that "black-tail deer are among the most difficult of all ruminents to acclimatise anywhere in the United States eastward of the great plains."

The black-tail deer is a native of Northern California. In a proper corral the city could maintain here some of the finest black-tails in captivity. It keeps a single dust-begrimmed specimen in a torture chamber at Eastlake Park.

In an adjoining pen is a young white-tail buck that lost its freedom through prying about a deer trap in the San Bernardino Mountains when but a half-grown fawn. If the Griffith Park oZo were to be finished before the holidays it would not be soon enough; this handsome buck is marked by a disease swifter and more deadly than the great white plague.

BIG BEARS, LITTLE PITS.

The bear pits are cement floored cages a little larger than a piano box. During the last year these have been improved and made more nearly habitable by the addition of a cement bath to each cage. There are three bears in the zoo—three black bears, says the zoölogical record. One is a sure-enough black bear, a handsome cub captured in Oregon two years ago. The other two are of a golden brown color, as pretty cubs as ever were enticed into an inhospitable pen.

These were captured a year ago in the Ventura mountains. It is difficult to view their golden-brown coats and be reconciled to the stern dictum of the zoölogical society that they are black bears. In spite of the fact that these bears can be instantly distinguished at a distance of almost half a mile by their cinnamon coats, Dr. Merriam and all other American mammologists refuse to consider them as a distinct variety, or, in fact as anything else than a pure black bear.

The three cubs in the bear pens are faring better than most the other animals in captivity. Yesterday afternoon as a representative of The Times was looking them over a keeper came by with their lunch. The ebon-black cub received three loaves, and the two cinnamon-black cubs two loaves each.

The park employés have named the black one Gen. Kuropatkin and the cinnamon cubs Gen. and Mrs. Oyama. Gen. Kuropatkin took a loaf of bread and walked solemnly over to his bath; there he carefully soaked the bread and munched on it such as a school boy devours a sandwich.

GAY MRS. OYAMA.

Suddenly there was a commotion in the far corner of the cage. Mrs. Oyama had spied one of the loaves in Kuropatkin's cage lying near the Oyama lair. She pounced upon it slipping her paws deftly through the iron bars. Kuropatkin heard her and hurried to the rescue dropping his half-soaked loaf; he was just in time to be too late. Mrs. Oyama shuffled away from the bars carrying a streak of mud on her cinnamon coat where Kuropatkin's paw had reached her, and Kuropatkin's loaf hugged closely to her breast.

Muttering to himself in bear talk Kuropatkin carefully pawed the third loaf out of harm's way and returned to his bath and sandwich.

Keeper Gerson says it is impossible to keep bears healthy in captivity unless they are provided with a bath and running water. Each morning the bears take their baths and climb the logs in their dens to lie in the sun.

Two years ago the zoo contained magnificent specimens of California black bear, one of a cinnamon hue. The full-grown bears were unable to survive the winter in the cramped cages.

Griffith Park would be a native lair for these bears; there they should thrive and multiply. Running wild in the park they would not be a menace, for neither the black nor the cinnamon bear will attack a person unless cornered and compelled to fight for life.

But strong objections might come from the ranchmen in the cañons surrounding the park; a bear will risk his shaggy hide and mortal soul for a taste of suckling pig or a bit of honey.

FINEST CALIFORNIA LION.

A beautiful tan-coated California lioness, said to be the finest specimen of the type in captivity, lies mooning the hours away in a ten by twelve cage. Queen came as a cub from a brush thicket on the slopes of Old Baldy. The skins of her parents adorn the polished floors of a mansion in millionaire's row on Orange avenue, Pasadena.

Queen's capture cost a San Bernardino trapper two fingers. The grizzled frontiersman makes a trip all the way from the San Bernardino mountains to Eastlake twice a year for the purpose of visiting his pet. He will spend an entire afternoon talking to her and patting her velvet sides through the bars. The keepers say he is "a bit queer."

Queen looks out on her admirers with a quaint, puzzled expression that reminds one of a Newfoundland puppy. She came to the park too young to know the delights of the wild life of the mountain, and she is as docile as a petted colt. Queen stands as high as the Nubian lions in the adjoining cage. Experts who visit the zoo express surprise at her size. In a proper den Queen would develop into a wonderful beast. At Eastlake she may exist two or three years longer.

Two Nubian lion cubs are late acquisitions to the zoo. They have not been in the animal arcade long enough to become fairly acquainted, but the climate here appears to suit them well. These cubs are not native born but were shipped from Africa for a circus. They occupy the most commodious quarters in the zoo.

POOR OLD ZEM ZEM.

Limping as he trots, Zem Zem, the old coyote, travels yearly about his den a distance equal to the span of the earth. The hunted look is ever in his eyes; he slinks away from the curious sightseers who pass his cage, and never displays spirit enough to utter more than a moan. Zem Zem's back was hurt when he was trapped for the zoo, and the hurt has never healed. He looks the most hapless, helpless, forlorn creature in the row.

The keeper says he is raising two young coyotes to take Zem Zem's place in the cage; as soon as they are ready the old coyote will go—not back to the woods, but to the city crematory.

At night Zem Zem gives tongue to the old cry of the hills, but it ends with a shriek born of captivity. The coyote is a strange creature. The keepers say that one night during the mountain fires a year ago they were disturbed by cries as of a trio of coyotes in Zem Zem's den. One keeper crept out to investigate and in the gray of the morning twilight two gaunt figures slunk away. They were devotees of the hills that had been attracted by Zem Zem's heart-breaking night song.

Zem Zem still announces the coming dawn with his broken staccato cry, a weird mixture of howl and bark, but it is only an echo of the voices of his brothers of the plains.

BOB OF THE FOOTHILLS.

Perched on a little three by six shelf away in the farthest corner of his cage, a striped California bob cat looks disdainfully down on the white-faced animals that wander aimlessly along in front of his cage. This is the bob cat of the foothills. Its nightly concerts have won for this cat the sobriquet Caruso. He refused to be civilized and today will cough and snarl at the visitors who linger before his cage just as he did in the first month of his captivity.

In Griffith Park there are a number of Caruso's fellows roaming wild. He is interesting to visitors by reason of his very evident disdain.

Half a dozen red and gray foxes are caged together in quarters that guarantee at least that their period of torture shall be of short duration. The most interesting of these are the Swift and New Mexico desert fox. Neither of these delicate specimens thrive well in the Eastlake fox dens. The New Mexico desert fox looks like an understudy of the Swift, the fox of the northern plains. The desert fox is smaller than his northern cousin, but has larger ears and appears to be an apt pupil. One pretty specimen deserving better quarters is a California silver fox from Catalina Island.

SNARLING LIVES AWAY.

About the hollow square are ranged other cages, in which Canadian nad Mexican lynxes snarl their luckless lives away until the mange or some other squalor-bred disease releases them from their captivity. The eagles are housed in foul-smelling cages—a disgrace to the park. There the Bird of Freedom presents about as inspiring an appearance as would an army officer working in soiled and rent uniform on a chain gang.

Sleeping sluggishly amid a score of baby alligators and snapping turtles lay an overgrown lizard, whose curiously mottled skin looks like an original pattern for a Navajo Indian blanket. This stupid, clumsy reptile is the dreaded Gila monster, whose bite means certain death.

Keeper Gerson stepped into the cage, drove the alligators away with a short club, picked the monster up by the tail and held him before the gaping sightseers. The monster blinked its bead-like eyes, but gave no further sign that it was aware it had been disturbed.

Gerson maintains stoutly that the bite of the Gila monster is sure to kill. He says that the monster locks its teeth when it bites, hanging on like a snapping turtle, while it pumps poison into the wound.

The serpents' cages are empty. Prior to two years ago the city kept a fine collection of rattlers and other venomous snakes. Then one of the rattlers struck Keeper Rabe, inflicting a mortal wound. After his death the city played the part of an Irish saint, and there are no snakes in Eastlake.

POLITICS, EVEN HERE!

Keeper Gerson insists that the animals are in much better condition than they were two years ago, when he secured his present situation. But Park Superintendent Morley says some of the finest specimens have died since Gerson became head keeper.

A conversation with these two men reveals that politics plays an equal part with efficiency in selecting a keeper for the zoo. It appears a travesty on civilization that these animals should be taken from their native haunts and tortured to death by reason of the discards in the game of politics.

Gerson secured his position by a civil service examination. He finished ahead of the old animal keeper, who was a favorite with the former administration. Gerson alleges that the former commission worked reprisals on him because he had beaten its favorite, and that the animals suffered by reason of this hostile attitude. But he says Mayor Harper is friendly to him and conditions are much better now.

Building the animal cages about a hollow square in the park shows a sublime disregard for the care or comfort of the hapless wild creatures. Zoologists who visit the park unite in condemning it. They say it would be much better for the city to attempt no zoo than to keep animals under such cruel conditions.

A Discovery Worth Millions of Dollar

A Few Hundred Dollars Invested Today Will Make Thousands in Profits

No uncertainty as to quantity and quality of deposit as in a gold mine or oil property, as we have thousands of tons of high-grade marble exposed to the eye in a solid mass over a mile long and 800 feet deep.

Of the more than $40,000,000 worth of marble used annually United States over 75 per cent. comes from European, Asiatic can quarries and all quarries are from 18 months to 2 years filling orders.

A Small Block of Stock

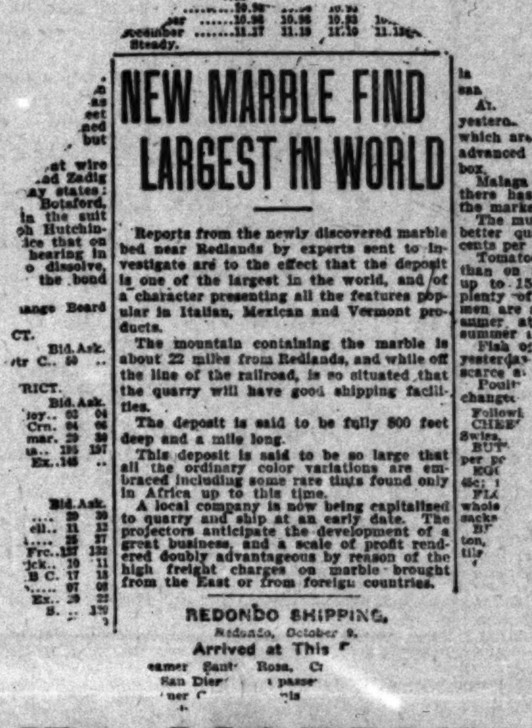
Only 22 miles from Redlands, with 16 of the 18 miles of road to our nearest present railroad point already built on an average drop of 400 feet to the mile. A force of men is at work erecting buildings and clearing for operations. With our modern machinery we can put marble in Los Angeles or San Francisco for less than $8.50 per ton.

Freight alone on marble from Vermont and other eastern quarries costs $20 per ton to Pacific Coast points. Compare with our cost to market.

We have a richer find by far than any gold mine or oil property.

Come to our offices and let us show you the beautiful marble knocked from the face of the mountain with a sledge. Do yourself and us the justice to investigate our proposition.

Newspaper Comment from L. A. Examiner Oct. 10, 1907



NEW MARBLE FIND LARGEST IN WORLD

Reports from the newly discovered marble bed near Redlands by experts sent to investigate are to the effect that the deposit is one of the largest in the world, and of a character presenting all the features popular in Italian, Mexican and Vermont products.

The mountain containing the marble is about 22 miles from Redlands, and while off the line of the railroad, is so situated that the quarry will have good shipping facilities.

The deposit is said to be fully 800 feet deep and a mile long.

This deposit is said to be so large that all the ordinary color variations are embraced including some rare tints found only in Africa up to this time.

A local company is now being capitalized to quarry and ship at an early date. The projectors anticipate the development of a great business, and a scale of profit rendered doubly advantageous by reason of the high freight charges on marble brought from the East or from foreign countries.

50c Share Par One Do

Vermont quarries employing over daily are two years behind in deliveries cheapest merchantable marble brings ton f.o.b. quarries. Foreign marbles $70 to $550 per ton f.o.b. Pacific coast Remember the demand is so far in exce supply that there is no competition. The is hunting us. We have marble equal to duced in any part of the world and get prices for it. Men, I Can Cure You With My Electric Belt!

If you suffer from Debility, Rheumatism, Stomach Trouble, Nervousness, Poor Circulation, Lack of Power, Varicocele, Failing Manhood, we can cure you with our natural cure--Dr. McLaughlin Electric Belt with free suspensory.

How many men are suffering miseries for the want of a simple remedy? They do not live; they simply exist. In the faces of thousands can be read the story of a wasted life and blighted hopes; joys and pleasures are unknown to them because their vitality is being sapped. Varicocele, wasting drains, have exhausted Nature's Electrical forces and left them wrecks upon the shores of life. Many have sought in drugs and patent remedies to relieve their mental and physical suffering. They have soothed for a day, or maybe a week falsely braced up, until the effects of the drug wearing off like the momentary bracing of whisky, they sink still lower in vitality, and, with hope exhausted, lose confidence in themselves and their fellow-man and decide to abandon all efforts to recover their power, feeling there is no hope for them. Man, do not sacrifice yourself in this way. Do not endure this living death while Nature holds out to you relief in the form of Electricity—that vital element of which by a life of dissipation you have deprived yourself—tearing down faster than Nature could rebuild. In this great restorative—Electricity—there is life and happiness for you. It restores power to the weak and indifferent; it builds up the weakened system, and by its vitalizing, stimulating cure it makes the blood jump through sluggish veins, increasing the circulation to every part, assisting Nature to carry off the impure matter which clogs up the wheels of life. If you are weak and sick, don't depend on doctors or drugs any longer, but try

Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt

The product of years of study, the realization of the fondest dreams of the weak and worn invalid, it is not a toy Belt, but a powerful, life-giving Electric appliance, which is now recognized by the highest and best in the medical profession as the only certain means of restoring power to weak and vital organs. The strength is quickly restored by it and losses corrected. Rheumatic pains are quickly dispelled and all functions of the body developed and made strong. It sends the blood with a gladsome bound through the veins, carrying health to the body and happiness to the heart of the despondent sufferer.

Don't Delay Try Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt at once. No matter what ails you, there is a cure for you in Nature's remedy—Electricity. The greatest cures on record have been performed by this famous Belt, and it is recognized today as the greatest remedial agent known to mankind. It cures every form of weakness, restores the life and vigor of youth, cures all forms of Nervous Diseases, Kidney and Bladder Troubles, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Varicocele, Lumbago and many other complaints, after every other known system of medical treatment has failed.

Vigor of Youth Restored in a Night

HOW DOES IT CURE? How simple that is to us! We have studied and developed it for years, and we will explain it to you as simply as we can. Your weakness is like the running down of the steam in the engine. There is not enough power in the nerves to make the physical body go. Nerve power is Electricity. Electricity runs your body just as it runs an electric car, when there is enough power. If the power is short the car don't run. Neither will your body. Now, when you have overtaxed Nature, when you have been dissipating too freely, you have drained away the reserve vitality and caused injury to the nerves and glands which retain the vital force, so that you are now subject to a constant drain of this power. You are losing it fast. You have never regained what you originally lost, and never will until this drain is stopped. We can stop it, and cure. Our belt pours electricity into your impoverished nerves for hours every night. They drink it up gladly, absorb it and retain it. They expand and develop under its powerful influence. They get strong, and the drain is stopped; they grow in size and power daily, your step becomes quicker, and you look into the glass and see a MAN; you are CURED! RESTORED! MADE OVER! and the sun shines gladly upon your future. "The world is mine," you say and the people in it proclaim you a man. So our Belt cures you, and when you pay for it you make an investment which returns you more profit than any that has ever been made by man."

Free Book Every man who admires the perfection of physical strength should read our beautifully illustrated book. It tells how strength is lost and how we restore it with our Electric Belt. We will send this book closely sealed, free, by sending this coupon. If you are not the man you should be, consult us today. Office Hours, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m. Sunday, 10 to 1.

Today Mr. Root captures it with courtesy and with that rare and genial gentleness and chivalry of spirit which make him so many friends.

On October 2 the immense park of Chapultepec was elaborately decorated and a garden party was given in honor of Mr. Root and fmily.

SPLENDID ENTERTAINMENT.

Gen. Diaz was host on the occasion to 5000 guests. Everything was done on a big scale. The lakes and the groves were decorated with about 10,000 electric lights. These lights, green, white and red, the national colors of the country, were sprinkled lavishly among the trees, and at a given signal were all lighted at once. Behind and beyond the sparkling lake, all alive with light, were the giant ahuehuetes, or cypresses, those monarchs of Chapultepec, some of which are said to be 2000 years old.

The turreted heights of Chapultepec and the embrasures of the Military Academy were suddenly transfigured, as hundreds of cadets leaped to the parapets with tricolor torches. Canoes with Indian boatmen, singing typical songs, filed past the guests. The magnificence of the occasion was heightened by the costumes of the ladies.

H. H. ROGERS, PHILANTHROPIST.

The Standard Oil Official Has Been Generous to His Own Town.

H. H. Rogers, of the Standard Oil Company, portrayed in the magazines as a relentless monopolist, is regarded by the people of his native town, Fair Haven, Mass., as a democratic, public-spirited citizen. A list of his gifts to Fair Haven, printed in the New York Tribune, shows that his philanthropies have been many and generous. In Fair Haven the investigator learns that Mr. Rogers gave more than $4,000,000 for the erection of municipal buildings, the laying out of streets and parks, to say nothing o fthe gifts to poor and needy residents. In 1885 he gave the Rogers School, built at a cost of $100,000, and more recently a new high school building, which cost $750,000. Mr. Rogers decided that it was time they had a new town hall, so he gave $200,000 to build one to replace a dilapidated structure.

As a monument to his daughter he erected the Millicent Rogers Library, costing $350,000. For many years Fair Haven has been avoided at night by travelers because of its abominable hotel accommodations. But the town's benefactor changed this by furnishing $75,000 for a modern hostelry. Its name is the Tabitha Inn, and it is rented to a manager at a rate just sufficient to pay the taxes on the property.

As a memorial to his mother, Mrs. Mary Eldredge Rogers, he built the First Unitarian Church of Fair Haven, and its elegant parsonage, costing $1,000,000. Mr. Rogers has also aided financially the Methodists, Adventists, Congregationalists, and Catholics. He has expended large sums for parks and street trees. He has also served as street commissioner of Fair Haven and manifests a deep interest in the trees and parks. Besides giving Fair Haven its sewer system, he presented the town with its water-work plant.

THE POWER OF MONEY

Probably no merchandising event on the Pacific Coast has attracted so much attention as the buying and selling of the entire stock (excepting shoes) of the Bon Marche, Le Sage Bros. Co., 430 to 434 Broadway, by the J. M. Hale Co., 107-9-11 No. Spring St. Cold black type really fails to tell the true significance of this transaction. It fails to tell what high class merchandise there is here for you, what up-to-date styles and materials are offered for your choosing. This is positively the best stock of goods in Los Angeles, and think of it, all being slaughtered at half price and less.

This is truly one of those occurrences that emphasize the results of THE POWER OF MONEY.

The development of an industry in Los Angeles, or the moving picture movement.

SAVED!

The Associated Charities explains that it has no ambition to annihilate the fascinating moving-picture shows in Los Angeles.

The arrest of a couple of blonde ladies—proprietors of a 5-cent theater in Sonoratown—was for quite another purpose.

Their offense was admitting some dirty-faced urchins, not yet 14 years old—merely a sort of Curfew proposition.

The film shows are actually the most interesting theatrical problem of the day.

The film show may be said to be a loose bovine, liable to charge in almost any direction—capable of almost anything—or of mere extinguishment.

During the brief course of its career as a Los Angeles amusement, the moving-picture show has completely changed its character three times; and now seems to be entering on a fourth change.

In its present status, it is, at once, an almost unmixed good, an atrocious evil—and a source of much humiliation to every one born in America.

Its evil is simple; it teaches crime.

But its good—. For the first time in the world, the poorer and uneducated American people have a peep at real French art. Through the picture film, those of us who speak no French, learn why Rejane is better than Leslie Carter, why Jack London limps after Guy de Maupassant.

Our humiliation lies in seeing our raw, cheap, vulgar, aimless pictured melodramas displayed alongside the swift artfulness and grace of the French melodrama.

In short, we come to the conclusion that we Americans may be great for designing thrashing machines and devising get-rich-quick schemes, but that art was left out of us.

To be convinced of this, you must go to a moving picture show.

The "film theaters" are scattered along Broadway and Main streets. The people who patronize them are of such varied quality that you could tell at once, if brought in blindfolded, in just which particular film show you were enjoying life.

From Chinese and Mexican audiences by the Plaza, they progress to crowds where the women wear the new hipless corsets and get up in the middle of it and walk out, if bored.

Perhaps the quaintest of them is on Main street near the old Pico House; and we might as well go to that.

It shares the building with an undertaker. Hidden back of the white screen upon which the pictures of dancing ballet girls, and wedding festivities are flashed, is the horrible room where the dead are "laid out;" but of course the audience does not know that.

It's a little squalid, narrow hall, filled with rows of chairs. Along the wall, at mathematically regular intervals, are grease spots where delighted spectators have leaned their enraptured heads.

At the back of the hall is a cracked old piano which lets out the most diabolical noises that ever assailed the ear of man. It plays "popular" songs about two years after they have ceased being popular.

When the other theaters are playing "Mariuchi at Coney Island," this old piano is wheezing out "So Long Mary" in the cadence and time of a funeral dirge. It never stops. Poor old joyless drudgery piano.

At intervals around the walls are hung notices.

"Se Quitan El Sombrero Y No Se Fuma."

"Favor de Quitarse el Sombrero no Fumar Y no Decir Malas Palabras."

Nearly all the spectators are either Mexicans or Chinese or Japs.

The pictures, however, are just the same as at the other theaters; for the films are passed from one to another. Hipless corsets and flabby no-corsets see the same scenes and dilate with the same emotions at opposite ends of town.

No concessions are made to nationality in the box office, for the girl who sells tickets is made in the exact mold of the girls who sell tickets at the other theaters. It seems that a special species of female must have been created for the special purpose of selling tickets at 5 cent theaters. They are all pink and white and round and near-blonde and of a supercilious blasé nature.

The peons come in from the cheap lodging-houses near. They are of the lowest type. They have heads that rise to a peak in the middle and foreheads about an inch broad. They laugh prodigiously when some is pictured as doing some simple and childish thing like falling into a wash tub. When some one is stabbed or a horse falls in a bullfight, gored to death, their thick lips almost seem to make the sipping noises of a man drinking a luscious draught.

The Chinese are different, dignified, self-contained men with slender graceful hands. John comes shuffling with two or three Chinese girls paddling along in his wake—a great family treat. Chinese are devoted to picture shows. They have a quick intelligence that the pictures appeal to. They would probably be as fond of other theaters if they understood the language. The Chink girls giggle and are much ashamed when the ballet girls come onto the screen in tights.

Americans, who have been, from childhood, going to theaters and seeing half-clad women, little imagine the shock that an oriental woman must feel at such an exhibition.

Japs, occasionally with women and more often without, are frequent visitors, and newsboys used to haunt the places until the City Council, at the request of the Juvenile Court Committee, drove them out.

It was for violating this ordinance that the women were arrested in Sonoratown last week. For some reason fewer and fewer children are seen at the theaters of late—even with parents as they are privileged to go. The picture shows are becoming "grown up."

The first "crime picture" thrown on the sceen makes it plain why children should be kept out. The police claim that several crimes in this city have been directly traceable to these pictures.

It should be stated that the moving pictures, as given in these days, principally represent the following equivalents:

The travel essay or sketch.

The melodrama and farce.

The dime novel.

The "crime films" are simply the old-fashioned dime novels in picture form.

They should be suppressed by the police.

THE BAD ONES.

The train robbers, of which there are legions of films, aren't very harmful because train wrecking isn't a tempting crime.

The harm is done by such films as these:

Enter a beautiful girl into a jeweler's shop and asks to see the jewels. A tray is spread out before her. She is chewing gum. As the jeweler turns to get more gems, she quickly jabs her wet chewing gum down onto a diamond, and, like lightning, fastens it under the edge of the counter. Later, she returns, after the excitement following the loss has died down and gets her chewing gum and the diamond. That is frankly and atrociously immoral, because it suggests to very ignorant men a clever crime that they never would otherwise have thought of.

The delighted laughter that greets her success proves the harm done.

There has been another on exhibition during the past week, showing a crook masquerading as a policeman and burglarizing houses under the noses of unsuspecting citizens.

But not so much sermonizing.

The really interesting films are the little melodramas, showing how differently the French and Americans develop an idea.

The American melodramas, as before indicated, frequently have a vulgarity that disgusts. The French, even in the rawest, have a piquancy that fascinates.

A perfect type of the melodrama manufactured by the big picture company on this "side" is the one called "The Seminole's Revenge."

A very tall person, who is obviously a cheap actor, is dressed up like a story-book Indian. He looks about as much like an Indian as he does like a ham. The villain, much to the relief of the audience, kills a most objectionable "bratty" little white boy for whom the Injun has conceived a violent and ridiculous love. Hence he trails down the villyun and slays him with an enormous knife, held in a way that no sane person ever yet held a stabbing weapon.

The whole thing is as palpably a fake as "Broadway After Dark." It's cheap and silly.

The French equivalent tells of the revenge of a Sicilian on the despoiler of his home.

Instead of the raw childishness of the American version, it is filled with the little touches that make art; the little daughter of the Sicilian brings him food, and is followed by the police, to the undoing of the father she had come to save. The acting is as unconscious as life—even to the child, whereas the American drama was full of stagey poses and punk heroism.

In the American version, there were almost no ideas, merely the rush of the man hunt and the thrill of the kill. The French was filled with swift little touches.

There is an American melodrama called "Convict 999," but there is a French called "The Two Orphans."

"There is a "Du Barry," played by a Leslie Carter, who yells like a Comanche Indian and breaks the scenery; but there is a Du Barry, played by a Rejane, who scarcely raises her voice.

There is a "Lady Macbeth," by an American Nance O'Neill, who squalls like a stock train laden with agitated pigs; there is a "Lady Macbeth," by Modjeska, who tears your heart out, but who strains your ears to hear what she says.

Perhaps the most striking contrast is in the "comics."

One American comic now on exhibition is called "The Trials of the Newly Married." It makes one sick with ennui and disgust. It begins with a lame attempt to make a farce of a sacred ceremony, borders on the indecent in the bedroom scene, and is disgusting in the finale, which consists mainly of two fools getting chimney soot on their faces and sitting on red-hot stoves.

The French comic on exhibition is a perfect satire.

RED TAPE.

A hungry artist is seen in the act of committing suicide. A peasant rushes to warn the nearest official, who hurries to the place, takes one look, and hastens off to inform his superior. This official, in turn, investigates and hurries back, informs the gendarme, who rushes out for a look at the form hanging from the tree, and hurries back for the sergeant. The sergeant has a look, and hustles back for the captain. And so, with the procession constantly growing, until at last some sort of dignitary, who corresponds to our Coronor, arrives. He runs out to the scene in the woods, at first in an unofficial capacity, and sees teh suicide really kicking from the tree. Convinced, he runs home and puts on all his official regalia, sash, sword, chapeau, etc., and stalks out to rescue the unfortunate young man, who, of course, is dead by the time he gets there.

No mere words ever said such a withering thing about red tape.

All the French films, of course, are not so good, and the American are not all bad, although, as a general rule, those made on this soil have crude faults.

The convincing thing is that the mixed crowd in the 5-cent theaters seems every whit as much entertained by the good French melodramas as by the poor American ones.

Put that in your pipe and smoke it, authors of "Broadway After Dark," or the "Convict 999."

It's action and "go" they want, not bad plays, particularly.

Of late, a new turn has been given to the picture shows. It was said earlier in this article that the whole character of picture shows has changed three times during the last few years.

It began with mere scenes that were not prearranged—such as marching regiments, panoramas from moving railroad trains, Emperor William reviewing his guards, President McKinley at Canton, hurdle races.

The next step was little prearranged dramas, that began with crude ideas, such as a supposed quarrel between a man and his wife, and developed to these little picture playlets—which are legitimate children of the pantomime.

Lately, a combination of the two ideas seems to have come in. They are using the old panoramas of the first stage of the picture business, combined with the play idea.

The "Revenge of the Sicilian," for instance, was set in surroundings of surpassing beauty and picturesqueness.

Pictures of the old Alhambra in Spain are helped out by figures of Moorish warriors, with long, Arab muskets, veiled woman. On just such a river rampart as that where Carmen met Don José, are other cigarette girls and other young officers.

THE FUTURE?

The future of the moving picture machine is a theatrical problem.

Some theatrical men believe that it will prove a serious competitor of the vaudeville. They suggest the time when the phonograph will work with it, and the best act of the newest New York comic opera will be flashed on the screen and sung out of the phonograph.

Others, and probably these are right, say that the picture machines have hit their highest notch.

VERY HIGH PRICE FOR ORANGES.

EXCEEDED RARELY IN HISTORY OF GOTHAM MARKET.

Heavy Influx of Grapes Has no Effect on Consumption of California Yellow Balls—Navels from Storage Richly Rewarding Far-Sighted Dealers.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—California oranges made a grand showing during the week, and sold for $8 for 200s and $7.37½ for 216s. These figures have been exceeded in only a few instances in the history of the orange business in New York. This record shows that New York is still buying oranges and is paying for them liberally.

The heavy influx of grapes from both California and Spain might be expected to cause some reduction in demand for oranges, but such, apparently, is not the case. The market is strong and active and the trend of prices ever upward.

Fortunately for oranges, there has been no competition with peaches, this season, the peach crop having been a failure everywhere.

Good navel oranges are coming from cold storage and are being sold at very high rates. The scheme of placing the best procurable fruit in cold storage when it can be bought at a low price during the height of the season is proving one of the most profitable ventures in orange dealing. Those who were far-sighted enough to go into this extensively are reaping a rich reward. Next year the quantity stored will be much greater.

The Fruit Auction Company has a new salesroom and offices at the corner of Washington and Franklin streets right in the midst of the fresh-fruit district, and it ought to obtain more business than they ever had before. E. L. Goodsell, head auctioneer, was presented with many beautiful floral offerings upon the occasion of the opening of the new rooms, and made a record sale of grapes.

The exchange is working hard to correct some of the abuses in the handling of foreign grapes, and is now attempting to do away with scattered barrels. A committee is at work on the problem. It is something which adds to the expense, and does not benefit the importer in the least.

The chief point of interest to those engaged in handling California fruit is the fact that foreign buyers are always in trouble about something. The foreign fruit business engenders more strife and leads to more "shady" transactions than all the other business enterprises in the food district together. There is some hope that this matter will be satisfactorily adjusted soon.

Congressman Sulzer of New York has had some exciting experiences this summer cruising among the ice floes off the coast of Siberia in a gasoline boat. He and three companions crossed Bering Strait in a gasoline boat owned by two fur traders, and visited a number of Esquimaux villages above East Cape.

No. 11—Gov. Gillett.

BY M. J. BOUTELLE.

James Norris Gillett, lawyer, legislator, and now Governor of the sovereign State of California, was born at Viroqua, Wis., September 10, 1860, on which day Uranus was in the sign Gemini, Venus and Jupiter in Leo, Saturn, Mercury and sun in Virgo, moon in Saggiturius, Mars in Capricorn, and Neptune in Pisces.

Gov. Gillett has an excellent physical constitution, and is strongly equipped with those qualities which tend to the continuous maintenance of good health, the enjoyment of all things which fall within the range of the physical senses and the sustaining of existence to advanced years.

MENTAL EQUIPMENT.

His mental equipment is strong and excellent in character, and it has sustaining qualities that render him capable of close and continuous mental exercise and grant a capacity and liking for detail and particulars that is infrequently found among men who have attained to high positions.

He is independent, forceful, incisive, assertive, intuitive, tactful, considerate, methodical, quick to see a point of advantage, and not neglectful in appropriating it; generous, social and approachable, a good and enjoyable companion, yet possessed of decision and firmness sufficient to make him impartial, just, and, if necessary, severe, as occasions or circumstances demand.

His nativity is, in all principal respects, an exceptionally strong one, and with strength it embodies much more than the average amount of good fortune and those innate elements which tend to elevate man above the station and circumstances of birth, bring positions of power and emolument, and keep the individual so constituted in situations of prominence.

VIBRATIONS.

Fortunate and unfortunate influences, as a rule, strongly prevail in the nativity of Gov. Gillett, but in certain periods of his life the scale of fortune takes a descending direction, and in such times the vibratory influences active are more or less discordant and inharmonious. He is now closely approaching one of these periods, and the vibrations of the near future will run directly along the lines of public affairs and matters of large financial importance and the tendency of present and future acting influences is to adversely affect him in affairs related to corporations and the administration and investment of public funds.

He has a trustful nature, and, above deceit himself, he naturally does not look for misrepresentation and unfair dealing on the part of others. He will be for three years to come more than usually exposed to harm through what others may do.

OUTLOOK.

The next coming five years, though strong and fortunate in many respects, are in others sensitive and critical, and this period will have large influence on his general future, and will also test him as a man and as to his ability to successfully deal with affairs of large importance.

Aside from the disturbing conditions of the near future, the outlook for coming years is, in general respects, favorable and significant with large possibilities.

He is sure to be associated with important enterprises of a business character, to be in close touch with political and public concerns, and to be yet further honored with public positions.

HIS SIGN.

The sign Virgo, under which Gov. Gillett was born, bears important relation with nature in its physical respects, with lakes and rivers, mountains and forests, and these significations argue for the close association of the Governor with those enterprises which relate to irrigation, reclamation and the improvement of the public domain.

The people of California should see to it that Gov. Gillett is kept in the public service, either State or Federal, and in the latter, position as minister to some one of the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, or else a South American State would admirably fit his capabilities and conditions.

In the year 1920, the influences in his nativity will be strongly favorable, and if in that period California is looking for a man to put forward for the attainment of the Presidency of the republic, they can put the Governor's name prominently on the list for a winner.

RAILROAD NOTES.

The Erie Railroad and its controlled lines carried 56,196,153 passengers between March 1, 1905, and July 31, 1907, and not one of them was fatally injured.

While the gross earnings of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway increased $1,091,559 last year, the net earnings decreased $310,490. The surplus for the year was $756,342, which permitted the payment of a 7 per cent. dividend, and left an additional 3.6 per cent. in the treasury.

The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad increased its surplus earnings from $1,653,088 in 1906, to $3,682,311 in 1907, and consequently increased its dividend on preferred stock from $260,000 to 520,000. The balance of $3,162,311 is equal to 4.99 per cent. earned on the $63,300,300 common stock outstanding. The president reported that the company is unable to properly handle all the business offered.

The Canadian Northern Railroad expended last year $8,000,000 for additional equipment, rolling stock and improvements.

Before the Boston and Albany road was absorbed by the New York Central, it was the best-equipped and operated road in New England. Its condition has now fallen so low that the Railroad Commissioners are asking its management to keep their promises of several months ago and put the road into shape to properly accommodate its business.

Henry M. Flagler, who has been building the Florida East Coast Railroad, announces that construction work will cease on January 1 because of the tightness of money.

The operation of the 2-cent fare law in Missouri is reported to have cost the railroads of that State $1,500,000 during the past three months. The railroads propose to fight the law, and will present their statements to Federal Judge McPherson at Kansas City about October 15.

The people of Ohio will probably ask the next Legislature to repeal the 2-cent rate law. The dissatisfaction is the result of the railroads taking off many trains that had been made unprofitable by the new law.

VICTORY OF SCIENCE.

CLEARED THE PATH FOR THE BIG CANAL.

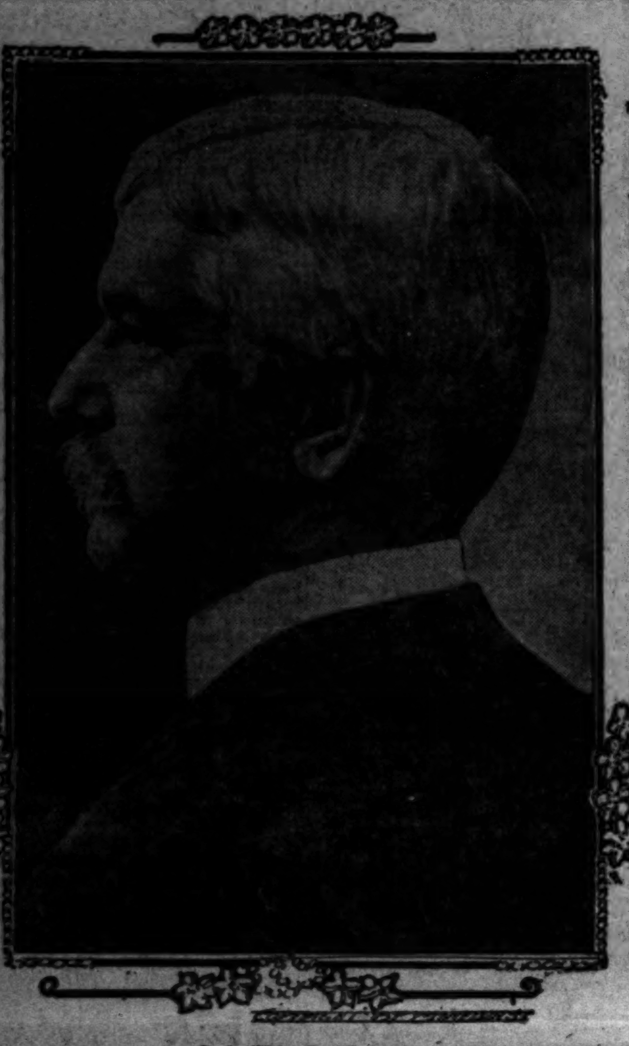
Col. William Crawford Gorgas Says Yellow Fever Is Almost an Impossibility in Former Home of Mosquito, and Predicts a New Paris.

BY JAMES B. MORROW.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—Creative and imaginative energy is north of the frost line; lassitude, torpifying at times as an opiate, is south of it.

Exactly so, yet one of the most famous students of the tropics says it is not unlikely that civilisation will transfer its capitals, its talents, and intelligence, to the hot countries.



Col. W. C. Gorgas.

A new Paris, a new Berlin, a new Vienna, a new London, and another New York! Surely, a bold and dramatic conception for the centuries.

Mosquitoes, winged lances of the water tipped with death, drove the French from Panama. Behind a terrified nation in the delirium of flight were millions of lost money and the bones of innumerable men.

Very naturally, when the United States bought the ruins of De Lesseps's canal, with its ghastly edging of skeletons in long trenches, there were many who believed the infernal regions had been annexed, together with an enormous graveyard for fresh myriads of human sacrifices, not to mention American pride and treasure.

But something tremendously important had happened in Cuba. Yellow fever, a little group of doctors had learned and proved, was neither contagious nor infectious. On the contrary, a single known and distinct kind of mosquito transmitted it from man to man. The war with Spain, costly in life and dear in all other respects, brought that great truth into the definite knowledge of science.

MADE HAVANA HABITABLE.

An Alabama physician, a surgeon in the army, transformed Havana, pestilential and terrible, into a safe and habitable city. Men and steam shovels are digging in Panama today because Col. William Crawford Gorgas with the necromancy of a concrete fact, fortified by his personal experience in Cuba, has made yellow fever improbable if not actually impossible in that part of the world. Moreover, this modest, silent, and distinguished doctor and executive has fought and defeated malaria, the very worst of all jungle diseases and the malady which has deadened both body and mind in vast areas throughout the United States.

Nine years ago Col. Gorgas was an inconspicuous human unit in the sum total of a necessary but unnoticed department of the American army. He was a post surgeon on the plains of the West and Southwest, attending soldiers in time of peace, together with the wives and children of officers. Since then his brilliant achievements in sanitation have made him eminent at home and abroad, and written his name into the permanent records of medicine. He it is who believes civilization may migrate toward the equator.

"I think it has been shown," he said to me, "that white men in the tropics can be protected easily, and without much cost, against yellow fever and malaria. Both diseases are spread by mosquitoes. Yellow fever is frightful, because it kills, and does it quickly. Aside from its physical effect, therefore, it seizes upon the imagination and by the terror of its name increases its power to work death and demoralization.

"On the other hand, malaria, being not so surely and speedily fatal, occasions less fear, yet, as a matter of fact, causes more incapacity than all other tropical diseases combined. If there were no way to control yellow fever and malaria, the hot countries would be left to the inertia of the ages and the blacks who inhabit them. The way being found, however, the tropics can be made more healthful than the temperate zones, and also very much more profitable for the labor and enterprise of the white man.

WILL LEAD THE NORTH.

"The first thing a farmer does when he moves into our northwest is to build a warm house, that he and his family may not freeze in winter. The climate is stormy and cold, and he takes sensible precautions against it. But if he goes into the south, where the summer is eternal, he is careless about himself and his surroundings. He can sleep under a tree, if it is necessary, and eat of its fruit when hungry. So, when he doesn't die from some violent disease he becomes dull and indolent, which means that the lethargy of the tropics—malaria, as I believe it to be—is in his blood, and that a mosquito, its spittle loaded with parasites, hit him. Stop malaria and in my opinion, the South will be more robust and aggressive than the North.

"There is torrid weather in the temperate zones, as well as elsewhere. I have suffered more discomfort in Dakota, where the temperature was 112 degrees for several days at a time, than in Panama, and sometimes I walk in the sun from breakfast until supper. I don't even carry an umbrella. I did so at first, but, like all the others who go there, soon left it behind. Six thousand white laborers and 4800 American civil engineers, mechanics and clerks are employed on the canal, and are as healthy and energetic as they would be at home. A day's work in Panama is no less with them, so far as I can see, than would be a day's work in the United States. Taking all these matters into consideration, it is my belief that within two or three centuries, tropical countries will be filled with white men, and that civilization, as in the beginning of the human race, will have its centers somewhere else than in regions made harsh, unprofitable, and dangerous by ice and snow."

"Have you suffered from any of the diseases against which you have been battling?"

"Yes," Col. Gorgas replied, in the affability of manner and the mellifluous accent of the South. "I had yellow fever at Fort Brown, in Texas, during my first period of service as a surgeon. It was because I was an immune that the government ordered me to Cuba during the war with Spain."

APPOINTED TO CHINESE HOSPITAL.

"How did you get into the army?"

"Through a combination of inherited predilection and personal necessity, I fancy. My father was in the army before the Civil War. Going with his State, he became a general and officer of ordnance under the Confederacy. I was graduated from the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., of which he was president, and then came to New York and attended Bellevue Hospital Medical College. While a member of the house staff of Bellevue Hospital I had an opportunity to go to China and take charge of a hospital there—a missionary enterprise of the Presbyterians. I recollect that I was to receive 900 taels a year if married and 600 taels if a bachelor. That was in 1880. Times were not as prosperous as now and I was in need of money. However, when I found that I could become a surgeon in the army, with the rank and pay of a second lieutenant, I concluded that $133 a month at home was better than an indefinite number of taels in China.

"I was immediately sent to Fort Brown, the Brownsville at the mouth of the Rio Grande, which has been considerably in the newspapers of late, where I remained four years. Yellow fever came over the border of Mexico and I was one of its victims. For eighteen years I served in Florida, Texas and Dakota as a post surgeon. A doctor in the army is a general practitioner, and is supposed to know how to pull teeth, operate for appendicitis, and treat all kinds of diseases. If he is in a thinly settled region, he is called night and day by farmers, who sometimes appear to believe his knowledge also includes live stock as well as women and children."

"In 1898 you were sent to Cuba?"

"Yes; to the base hospital at Siboney, where during our campaign against Santiago and afterward all the soldiers seriously ill were treated. Then I went to Havana and had charge of the yellow fever wards at Las Animas Hospital. Afterward I was made sanitary officer of the city."

"When was it finally determined that mosquitoes caused the spread of yellow fever?"

THE YELLOW FEVER THEORY.

"The theory was first brought to the notice of the medical men in 1881 by Dr. Carlos Finlay, a practicing physician in Havana. He never abandoned his position, but was unconvincing because he failed with his proof. When Maj. Ronald Ross, of the British-India medical service, after infinite labor and exposure to danger, discovered that the parasite of malaria was transmitted from one person to another by the bite of the anopheles mosquito, the theory so long maintained by Dr. Finlay was thought to be worthy of investigation. Until the year 1900 it was the belief of medical men that the yellow fever germ was spread by contact; that the clothing, etc., of those who had the disease was infected, and that the parasite itself required foul conditions for its culture and development.

"Havana was then the earth's worst sink-hole for breeding the plague, and the harbor into which had poured the sewage of centuries seemed to bear out the belief that filth caused yellow fever. It was known, however, that flight baffled the disease; that a garrison of troops, for instance, could move away and not carry the infection with them. At Fort Brown we took the soldiers to high ground and stopped the epidemic almost instantly. But that was a scant fact on which to work, yet it was suggestive if nothing else. The mosquito theory had been rejected by a board of physicians, but the authorities in Washington decided to have it thoroughly investigated again by other qualified men. The discovery of Maj. Walter Reed and his associates followed—a discovery as brilliant, perhaps, as any in the science of sanitation or the preservation of health.

DIES IN THREE MONTHS.

"It was found that the female stegomyia mosquito biting a person in the early stages of yellow fever—during the first three days of the malady, in fact—became infected, and in from ten to twenty days, but not before, the germ could be transmitted to some one else. Indeed, it was declared finally that the disease could be spread in no other way. The whole history of the stegomyia mosquito was worked out. It lived in or near the houses of man, was born in the clear but stagnant water of barrels, buckets, jars, pools and cans, remained near at hand, and died in three months, but, singularly enough, not so the parasites which made it so mortal to human beings. But the larger proof, a test of the truth upon an entire city, remained to be given. First, however, we lost three lives by a process that was similar in principle to vaccination. We thought the bite of an infected mosquito might result in a mild form of fever, to be followed by complete immunity thereafter. But the theory broke down, and we turned to the mosquito itself—its destruction and exclusion from persons having yellow fever.

"There were 28,000 houses in Havana near which or in which female mosquitoes could deposit their eggs. Besides, there were hundreds of persons ill with the fever who were being bitten, and thus were sources of infection to thousands of others. Well, we screened the city, poured petroleum on it, spilled its dead water, smudged it with sulphur, and stopped the epidemic."

"What did you learn about the yellow-fever germ?"

"Nothing; it has never been found. We have filtered the blood of patients and caught everything but the organisms of yellow fever. They are too small to be seen under a microscope, and no filter has been found that will hold them. Blood that has been filtered is just as dangerous as it was before, and by actual test has caused yellow fever."

"Are there stegomyia mosquitoes in the United States?"

"Millions of them. They are found almost everywhere in the South, and are indigenous as far north as Norfolk, Va. There was a terrible epidemic of yellow fever in Philadelphia during the year 1793, and occasional outbreaks have occurred since in onr northern latitudes. The supposition is that in each instance infected stegomyia mosquitoes got away from their geographical range in some accidental manner and thus brought the disease. You must remember that mosquitoes do not originate either the germs of malaria or yellow fever. They become inoculated from biting human beings. All they do—and they do it thoroughly—is to scatter the poison they obtain from man himself. Stegomyia mosquitoes are native in India and the Philippines, but the yellow-fever organism has never ben taken into those countries, and, therefore, that particular kind of mosquito is no menace to life or good health."

MYSTERY OF THE FEVER GERM.

"Where did the germ come from, in the first place?"

"You might as well ask me about the first cat or the original bullfrog; it is an animal parasite, and there our knowledge ends. Whence the germ came we know not. Whither it goes is entirely a matter of mosquitoes of the right sort. Yellow fever was an unknown malady in Europe before the discovery of America. The Indians around Vera Cruz in Mexico are supposed to have suffered from the disease in the time of Montezuma. The early Spaniards of the West Indies are thought to have had it. Consequently, science has concluded that the original habitat of the germ was in the Western Hemisphere."

"Are the mosquitoes in the northern part of the United States dangerous to health?"

"The anopheles are; they carry malaria and thrive North and South, wherever there is stagnant water. I am sure that much of the sickness in many sections of this country can be followed straight back to mosquitoes as the disseminators of the malaria microbe. However, the microbe, as I said before, does not begin with them. Man accuses the mosquito, whereas, the mosquito might justly accuse man. It was once believed that the turning up of new ground let loose the miasmatic bases of the earth, and that ague and other malarial diseases were absorbed in some manner from the atmosphere.

"Now, the truth is, that 1000 perfectly sound men can work in an excavation or can build a railroad among swarms of mosquitoes without developing a single case of malaria. But let some one with the organism in his blood join them, and in a very short time many will be ill with chills and fever. In the early demonstrations of the truth of the mosquito theory an Italian near Rome, who was suffering from a bad case of malaria, was bitten by an anopheles. The mosquito was put in a bottle and taken to England, where there is no malaria, and permitted to bite a healthy young man. In a few days the Englishman clearly developed the usual symptoms of malaria, and the microscope showed that parasites were feeding on the red corpuscles of his blood. As in yellow fever, we know how the malaria microbe is transferred from one human being to another, but the history of the microbe itself is an unopened book."

"What protection is there against it?"

PROTECTION EASY AND CHEAP.

"Screens in doors and windows and the drainage of all wet places near at hand. The malaria mosquito is a resident of the country, living in marshes and stagnant pools close to barns, sheds and houses. He scarcely ever travels more than 200 yards from the place in which he was born. He may have been hatched in a rain-water barrel under the eaves or in a quiet little puddle near a spring. He is a wiggler when he leaves the egg and must come to the surface of the water for air. Pour a little petroleum in the barrel or puddle and the wiggler, finding it impossible to get his nose above the oil, drowns. At small expense and with comparatively little trouble, almost any farmer or resident of village or country can make himself and family proof against malaria.

"It is now possible for white men to live and work on the Isthmus of Panama. How was that great achievement accomplished?"

"Largely by fighting mosquitoes. We found a strip of country ten miles wide and forty-six miles long, with a considerable settlement at each end and almost twenty-five hamlets between. We followed the methods which had rid Havana of yellow fever, of a scourge that had been epidemic for 150 years. We stopped the fever in sixteen months, in the city of Panama alone, where each house was fumigated three times; we burned 100 tons of pyrethrum, 200 tons of sulphur and large quantities of other disinfectants. Four hundred men were engaged in the work. Ninety-eight per cent. of the West India negroes who came to dig the canal had malaria and the parasite was found in the blood of 70 per cent. of those persons whom we examined at random.

"While we fought the yellow-fever mosquito with chemicals and screens, we destroyed the breeding places of the malaria mosquito, drove him back several hundred yards from our camps and villages, put wire netting into the houses, and advised every one to take three grains of quinine daily. I think I am justified in saying that we have malaria under control. Our death rate among Americans last year was less than four persons in 1000, and we have 4800 men and 1200 women and children strung along the zone from Panama City to Colon."

FOREST CULTIVATION.

THE FORESTS OF GERMANY.

GOVERNMENT DERIVES AN ANNUAL PROFIT FROM TIMBER.

The German States Practice Systematic Tree Cultivation; About One-fourth of German Soil Has Been Adapted to Foresting—Effect on Evaporation Is Also Studied.

Consul William C. Teichman of Elbenstock, in the following report shows how the public forest reserves in Germany are made to yield splendid returns:

Official figures recently compiled by the Saxon government for the year 1906 demonstrate a net revenue of $2,126,037 obtained from the cultivation of 442,105 acres of governmental forest land, an area of which 424,246 acres represent land covered with trees or soil designated for rotational foresting. The total area of the kingdom of Saxony amounts to 5789 English square miles, of which almost one-half is covered with private and governmental forests. The State Treasury places the latter as its highest revenue producer after the State railway, and exceeding the income from all other sources, taxation included. The total quantity of timber cut during the year is estimated at 1,231,473 solid cubic yards, 210,947 cubic yards representing wood used for fuel only, and 1,020,525 sold for all other purposes. To this must be added a yield in brushwood, cut and sold for fuel use principally, of 190,415 cubic yards, raising the total quantity of timber and brushwood cut and sold in 1906 to 1,421,887 cubic yards, for which the sum of $3,374,385 was obtained, which amount was still increased by additional revenue from the leasing of meadows, hunting privileges, and other rights to the total of $3,483,616.

Deducting from this total figure the cost of forest cultivation (with salaries and wages of the entire service included,) amounting to $1,357,580, the net profit of $2,126,037 was added to the State Treasury in 1906. There is nothing unusual in this result, as the ten preceding years show equally high figures, a few slightly exceeding the revenue of 1906, others being lower to a very small degree. The same comparison applies to the area cultivated and timber obtained in ten years.

Similar results have been achieved in other German States by systematic forest cultivation. Nearly 50,000 square miles of German soil, representing about one-fourth of Germany, have been adapted to foresting, the value of the wood gained therefrom being estimated at $60,000,000 a year. In all the German States revenue for the State Treasury is the paramount consideration in determining the species of trees to be planted on government land. Formerly the deciduous tree varieties were planted in preference to the needle-leafed kind. The principal demand for the former was for fuel purposes. However, since coal has replaced the deciduous tree in this respect the price of such wood has fallen accordingly. On the other hand, that of the needle-leafed steadily rose until today it has become more profitable to plant the latter. This rise is largely due to growing industrial demands for this variety of wood for raw material.

The connection of forestry with irrigation has been studied in Germany for years. One authority on the subject, Prof. Ebermayer, has conducted extensive experiments, with the result of estimating that evaporation of soil water in forests amounts to 85 per cent. less than outside of them. While the forests do not create water springs, they feed and sustain them, in addition to the preservation of soil moisture resulting from protection against drying winds and rays of the sun. Wherever forests are absent drought, storms and sudden floods can create conditions less frequent in well-forested countries.

The climatic influences of forests have been extensively investigated in Germany. For the last forty years the governments of Germany, Austria and Switzerland recorded observations at their forestry-meteorological stations which as yet have not proved any material influence of the forest upon the climate of its surrounding territory. The only fact established by these investigations has been that the temperature of the atmosphere under the trees in the summer averages from one to three degrees C. (from two to six degrees F.) less than in the air outside of the woods. During winter time it is the same for both, and that the mean for the entire year shows only seven-tenths to eight-tenths degree C. less for forest temperature than outside. The temperature of the forest soil was found to be from one to three degrees C. lower during the entire year. The evaporation of free water surface in the woods was calculated to be 50 to 60 per cent. less than on non-forested soil. These are the only substantial facts thus far ascertained by these scientific researches, so far as climatic effects are concerned.

The hygienic value of forests is unquestioned in Germany, their richness in ozone and dust-free character being highly beneficial to health; hence their cultivation in the neighborhood of cities.

The Ordinary Savings

That makes loans on lands and bonds is perfectly safe, but is small to the depositors. If you can make twice that in a Co-operative Bank, that loans all your money on lands and distributes all the profits to you, is it not common sense to put your savings in a Co-operative Bank? Think it over without the banker, and you will get more interest on your money, with security.

"Staying In Business" Sale

This "Staying in Business" sale is a protest against the furniture dealers who are advertising "Selling Out" and "Closing Out" sales. You know that these announcements are put out to mislead the buying public—these dealers are not going out of business—they do not intend to. Yet they would have the public believe they are. That the stand we have taken in regard to this dishonest advertising is appreciated and commended is shown by the tremendous business we are doing. The furniture buyers are coming to this store because they know our business to be legitimate. Here you get a square deal.

Old King Cole

Prize Poem by Florence S. Craig, 850 Mallard St.

Old King Cole was a merry old soul,
And he loved his home so well,
That he furnished it all, from cellar to hall,
With furniture that was swell.

Then he asked in his friends from all of the ends
Of the Earth, and part of the Moon;
They admired his chairs, his bookcase and stairs,
And ate with his best silver spoon.

"O pray, sir," said they, "whence comes this delight?
Your carpets and rugs are a show."
"I bought them," he said, "with the dresser and bed,

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 11.—With five tickets in the field and four candidates for Mayor the average citizen feels that he has not been overlooked in the matter of affording him a wide discretion. The Good Government League deserves the thanks of the community for determining to shelve the old-time spellbinders who draw their inspirations from Washington's Farewell Address as illumined by the Constitution. The league proposes to make a home to home contest with youthful enthusiasts to the front all the time. William Greer Harrison, that grand old athlete who at 75 is as spry as a chick, told me the other day that the league would exact nothing from its candidates except civic loyalty and he is not worried because some of the campaign meetings are to be held in a skating rink called Dreamland.

To rebate or not to rebate, that is the question which has been agitating some of our merchants since Interstate Commerce Commissioner Lane in his investigation has furnished the Federal attorney with enough material for prosecutions to last well on into next year. Our many small shippers have realized that they have been getting the worst of it for years and they propose to do some prosecuting on their own hook. Lane's stay in the city, though brief, was forceful and in a short talk with him he appeared to me as aggressive as he was four years ago when he ran for Mayor against Eugene Schmitz.

The graft prosecutions still have the center of the stage and the main contention this week has been the matter of getting enough trial talesmen to continue the trials. Judge Lawlor has ruled that some new men are needed as jurors and the 2400 who have served in the past deserve a rest. The present grand jury is on its last legs and Abe Ruef, with over 100 indictments to face is wondering whether the next grand jury will heartlessly tear him from his present comfortable boarding house.

A beggar asked a man for 15 cents to pay for a meal and the good Samaritan promptly opened his sack to get some change when the ungrateful mendicant knocked him unconscious and robbed him of $510. The unfortunate man was a stranger in the city and appealed to the police to aid him in getting his money back. All the machinery of the police department was put to work at once but without success, and citizens believe that the patrolmen are getting indolent now that they have returned to eight-hour shifts instead of the twelve-hour watches which Chief Biggy instituted with a great flourish of trumpets last month.

The curiosity of an up-state minister as to the Chinese mode of life will cause some radical changes in our oriental quarter. The divine entered a Chinatown house, thinking it to be a gambling place, and a Chinese woman had him arrested on the charge of taking an ear-ring from her. Judge Shortall promptly acquitted the defendant, preferring to take his word that it was all a dreadful mistake instead of the woman's word that he had robbed her. Now the Chinese Vice Consul insists that the Chinatown of old is a thing of the past and that in the future while tourists will be welcome in the bazaars, restaurants and joss houses, they must not invade oriental homes for mere curiosity, and a strict taboo will be placed on licensed guides who attempt to show strangers faked scenes of Asiatic depravity.

Europe may be beating us in practical aerial navigation if the press reports are to be believed, but we cannot be beaten in the financial booming of flying. For months past an airship company has sold stock in this city for a monster balloon which was to travel to New York in a few hours. The other day it started, somewhat prematurely, but it ended disastrously a few miles down the coast and now the stockholders are wondering if there is anything under the sun in the way of a safe investment.

Not long ago our Bar Association was very angry at Superior Judge J. C. B. Hebbard and proceedings were instituted to have him removed from the bench on the score of drunkenness and incompetency. Hebbard made a vigorous resistance particularly as to the latter charge. For some time nothing has been heard of the case and the other day the judge stopped me on Van Ness avenue, to say that he had fought his opponents to a standstill. He claims to be in better fighting trim than ever before and in order that his enemies may not get a vantage hold on him again he has quit writing poetry.

Lottie Jennie Bothin, society lady, cannot agree with her wealthy husband, Henry E. Bothin, and so she has asked the courts to legally free her from galling matrimonial chains. She complains that he loves books and babbling brooks while she detests them and dotes on the fascinating life of the city. He is fond of children and learned talks on socialism as toned down by esthetics while she cares for nothing but the socialism of society. In the same court a lady of more humble station in life wishes a divorce from her husband because he plays all his money in slot machines and gets drunk three times a day.

OUR STONE PRODUCTION.

According to a press bulletin of the United States Geological Survey, the production of American stone in 1906 was of the value of $66,378,794, an increase of $2,570,046 over the production of 1905, and an increase of $42,413,565 over that of 1896. That last-named increase is literally gigantic.

The 1906 production classified as:

Limestone	[illegible]
Granite	[illegible]
Marble	[illegible]
Sandstone	7,147,429
Trap rock	[illegible]
Bluestone	[illegible]

The production in all the classes increased in 1906 over 1905, except in sandstone.

Almost all the producers, especially the small quarrymen, says the bulletin, state that the cost of production was greater in 1906 because of the increase in cost of supplies and in the rates of wages, especially for common laborers. The increased use of cement and concrete also had an important effect on the stone industry.

Pennsylvania, producing chiefly limestone and sandstone, but also granite and marble, reported the greatest value of stone output for the entire country, which was 13.27 per cent. of the total; Vermont, producing granite and marble chiefly, was second, with 11.34 per cent. of the total; New York, with its sandstone, limestone, granite and marble, ranks third; Ohio, producing limestone and sandstone, was fourth; Massachusetts, with granite, marble, sandstone and limestone, was fifth; then follow Indiana, Illinois, Maine, California and Missouri, each with a yearly stone product valued at over $2,000,000.

Massachusetts, exceptionally ranked first among the granite-producing States in 1906, its great increase being due to large contracts for stone for the new Pennsylvania Railroad station in New York City. Pennsylvania led in sandstone and limestone. In marble Vermont led, followed by Georgia and Tennessee.

Considered as to uses in 1906, the largest value ($20,687,625) was in building stone, and the next largest value ($17,467,436) was in crushed stone, used principally for railroad ballast, road making and concrete.

MINES AND THE MINING INDUSTRY.

IN THE EARTH.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY.

To Correspondents:

This department is not conducted for pay. Its object is to convey reliable information of interest and value to the public, and it is not for the private benefit of any miner, collector, speculator or prospector. Correspondents are particularly cautioned to take careful note of the statements and injunctions contained in the paragraphs below.

(1.) Specimens must be small and bear a tag giving name and address of sender, and the general—not exact—locality from whence the specimen was taken, also the name of it as nearly as the sender knows. Send, also, with the specimen a clearly-written letter briefly describing the find and what the finder wishes done with it. The letter must be properly dated and plainly signed.

(2.) No attention will be paid to anonymous letters or to letters signed merely with initials.

(3.) No examination of samples or specimens will be made in cases where The Times may decide that the specimen and inquiry are not of public interest. This office does not undertake to perform the work of an assay office.

(4.) Inquiries relative to matters of purely personal interests will not be answered.

(5.) When no response to an inquiry made or specimens sent appears in these columns, the inquirer will understand that his inquiry does not come within the purview of this department.

(6.) It is impossible to return specimens, as they must necessarily be destroyed or impaired in the process of analysis.

Address invariably, The Times.

Gothite.

KANAB (Utah) Sept. 17.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The piece of iron ore in this package is from the iron deposits near Cedar City. Its peculiar form is a puzzle to me and my associates. We will thank you heartily if you will name and describe it in your "In the Earth" department.

Yours truly, R. D. T.

ANSWER: The sample is "rhombic; primary form a right rhombic prism; occurs in prisms longitudinally striated. It is frequently found flattened and parallel to the shorter diagonal." (Bristow.)

Your specimen is reniform; color, black-brown, and yellow, by reflected light, sometimes blood red by transmitted light. Adamantine in luster. Yellow-brown in streak. Hardness, 5.5. Sp. gr. 4.5, and brittle. Chemical composition hydrated iron peroxide, with approximate analysis: Iron peroxide, 88; silica, 1; copper oxide, 1; peroxide of manganese, 1; water, 11; lime traces. Soluble in warm aqua regia.

Realgar.

GLOBE (Ariz.) Sept. 16.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In prospecting in this section I came across a lead of what I take to be cinnabar. Sample is in this package. Is it cinnabar? Please describe it if another mineral.

Yours truly, M. J. B.

ANSWER: The sample is realgar. Many samples of the mineral have been sent to The Times during the past year from Utah, which were of a different form from yours.

"Realgar occurs in prismatic crystals, streaked longitudinally and shining; also massive, disseminated, investing." Color aurora red. Streak orange yellow. Can be marked by the pressure of a finger nail. Conchoidal in fracture. Sectile, and becomes negatively electrical by friction. Hardness, 1.5 to 2. Sp. gr., 3.3 to 3.7.

Realgar is made up of, approximately, 70 per cent. arsenic and 30 per cent. sulphur, and thus forming arsenic bisulphide.

Before the blow-pipe it burns with a blue flame, evolving sulphurous and arsenious acid.

"Artistically prepared realgar is used as a pigment, and was also employed by the ancients for the same purpose, under the name of sandarach. The Chinese are said to form cups from realgar, in which they let stand lemon juice, which they afterward drink as a purgative."

Red silver ore is distinguished from realgar by its higher specific gravity and absence of orange-colored streak. Red lead ore is, also, higher in specific gravity than realgar.

By powdering a little cinnabar and mixing the powder with some sodium bicarbonate and then placing the mixture in a glass tube (sealed at one end,) with blow-pipe flame applied to the under side of glass, and contents, mercury (quicksilver) forms in small globules; while realgar powder subjected to the cinnabar test would result in (what is known in chemistry) a mirror being formed upon the glass with evolution of a garlic-like odor; so noticeable in "Marsh's Test for Arsenic."

Stibnite and Smelters.

FLINT (Idaho) Sept. 13.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am an old miner and prospector, and send you a sample of ore from a two-foot ledge on a claim I own near here. Is the sample of any commercial value?

Yours truly, D. B. A.

ANSWER: Your sample is a good grade stibnite (antimony sulphide,) and carries approximately 65 per cent. metallic antimony, with 27 ounces of silver per ton ore.

It should, and probably soon will, be of commercial value. At present the smelters will pay for the silver contents in the ore, and, as an eleemosynary institution accept the antimony values (?) as an appropriation to their own use.

Near Nampa, and at other points in Idaho are fine deposits of stibnite, some of it as high grade as yours, with silver values up to 900 ounces per ton ore. Mills that cost big money, in building, are standing idle owing to "base metal ores?"

The metallic spring under the Jack-in-the-box of the smelter trust has not, as yet, been thoroughly sprung by the government.

Pyrrhotite.

SAUGUS, Sept. 17.—[To the Editor of The Times:] May I respectfully ask you to give me a description of the sample of mineral I am sending you? It is from this locality.

Yours truly, T. L. O.

ANSWER: Pyrrhotite (a pyrite that can be lifted by the magnet.) Magnetic pyrite "seldom carries less than 2.50 per cent. or more than 6 per cent. of nickel." It is from 3.5 to 4.5 in hardness, and is easily distinguished from pyrite by being attracted by the magnet and its inferior hardness. Pyrite (iron disulphide) is 6 to 6.5 in the scale of hardness, and "strikes fire" when struck with a hammer.

Pyrrhotite is: "Hexagonal. Rarely crystallized, in irregular six-sided prisms, variously modified. Perfect basal cleavage. Generally occurs massive and amorphous. Structure granular. Color bronze-yellow, reddish, or brownish; liable to speedy tarnish on exposure to the air; opaque; luster metallic; streak grayish black; brittle; fracture uneven, passing into small imperfect conchoidal." In composition, iron sulphide; iron, 60.95; sulphur, 39.05 per centages, respectively.

Marcasite.

VALDEZ (Alaska) Sept. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Please classify in your "In the Earth" department the specimen in this box. It is from the Copper River country.

Yours truly, B. & A. CO.

ANSWER: The sample is marcasite, a variety of which is known among the mining boys as "white iron." It is "white-speiss yellow" in color. Streak, black; 6 in the scale of hardness; brittle; reniform or massive in structure; tabular, columnar and pyramidal in habit and, often, orthorhombic in crystallization. Sp. gr. 4.5 to 5. Iron disulphide in composition, and with mineralogical chemistry reactions, like pyrite.

Under the term Pierze des Incas was included: "A kind of marcasite, having a brilliant luster, and a color somewhat approaching to tin white, when first found, and bearing the same relation to European marcasite, which is generally of a bronze color, that white gold does to ordinary gold."

The Incas, or ancient kings of Peru, attributed many virtues to marcasite. They wore it in rings and as amulets, which adornments were buried with them after death. Some of these rings and "devil skitters" are said to have been taken from the tombs of princes who had been buried 500 years, and, apparently, without any alteration or change.

The old, ancient mirrors of the Peruvians were made of marcasite and used by the ladies in their time-honored "primpings"—"until the reign of the Inca Huaynacapac, who was defeated by Pizarro in 1532."

Quartz Only.

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 18.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I believe that the small white crystal, from just over the Mexican line and near here, is kuntsite. Please give me your opinion of it.

Yours truly, D. T.

Hematite.

PIOCHE (Nev.) Sept. 14.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The sample I send you is surely tin ore. It is from "Twin Buttes," Utah. Please name it and oblige. E. W. C.

BETTER SIGNS AT CHRISTMAS.

THOUGH MINES ARE SHUT TIGHT, THEY'LL OPEN SOON.

Preparations Under Way for Starting Operations on Much Larger Scale—Coal Found in Gila Canyon at Depth of Eighty Feet—Quality Good and Development Promised.

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Oct. 11.—Though the utmost activity continues in the neighborhood of Kelvin, the mines at Christmas, Pinal county, are shut down hard and tight. Last winter about 700 men were on the pay roll of the Saddle Mountain Mining Company at Christmas. Now the company employs just five men and one bookkeeper, to keep the pumps in operation and to watch the property. Last Christmas there were at least 1200 people in camp and now there are not more than fifty. Yet preparations are being made for starting up the camp again on a much larger scale, and under more favorable working conditions.

A tunnel one mile long will be pushed to connect with the main working shaft at the 800-foot level, to which depth the shaft will be sunk from its present depth of 800 feet. The tunnel will be double-tracked, and will be equipped for electric traction and for the drainage of the mines. It will cross beneath a number of surface copper croppings, and it is expected to be in mineral nearly all of its length. At its mouth will be built a large smelter, twice the size of the present works on top of the hill, and one and one-half miles distant.

The Southern Pacific is bringing material for an extension of its line up the Gila Cañon from Winkelman to a point where connection will be made with an aërial tramway which will lead to the new smelter site.

COAL AT EIGHTY FEET.

In connection with the working of copper ores in the Kelvin-Christmas district, an interesting discovery was made a couple of weeks ago in the Gila Cañon, a few miles above Christmas, where coal was found at the depth of eighty feet in a seven-foot ledge, much of it of far better quality than known heretofore in the district. The shaft is within a stone's throw of the grade of the Phoenix and Eastern Railroad, and there can be no doubt that its tracks will be extended in a very short time. The shaft has been sunk by a miner named Hanson, understood to be backed by the Saddle Mountain Company.

General Manager Finney and Consulting Engineer Brooks of the London-Arizona Copper Company have been on the company's ground near Kelvin for the past week or so, laying plans for the development of the property and for the building of the great smelter projected.

A fifth payment of $19,000 has been made to J. K. McCarthy of Florence and Mrs. Clara Kinney of Globe on the Bryan group near Kelvin, now known as the Sultana-Arizona mine. Two payments are yet due before next February on the purchase price of $95,000. On this mine, as is the case with the London-Arizona Company's mine, the deposits are of immense size and very near the surface, and it is proposed that much of the ore be handled by steam shovels in great open cuts.

The concentrating plants of the Kelvin-Calumet Copper Company at Kelvin have been put in condition to handle 120 tons of ore a day, favored by the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad to the Madaline shaft of the company.

COPPER; NO GOLD OR SILVER.

On a property owned by S. D. Gardom, near the Gila River, twelve miles east of Florence, has been found a considerable body of ore assaying 20 per cent. copper, but with no gold or silver, a fact considered remarkable, inasmuch as samples from other parts of the mine have shown considerable quantities of the more precious metals.

New machinery and oil tanks are being installed at the Superior mine, at Superior, Pinal county, yet little is being done in the way of development on this or any other property of the district, despite large plans for a railroad from Florence station, and for a smelting plant on the Gila River.

J. C. Snyder of Los Angeles has bonded a number of mining claims in the Superior district, from George and Eugene Woodbury, and from Henry Lempker and John Cope.

The copper output of the Old Dominion Company at Globe last month was 2,577,000 pounds, which equals the record for the mine. It is understood a large number of foreign miners have been dropped, but it is hoped to secure Americans in their places. Though considerable depression is felt in the camp, development work still is active in the hills, and there is general confidence in ultimate resumption of fullest activity.

RANDOLPH BUYS CLAIMS.

Railroad Man Heads Corporation That Takes Three Groups in the Catalina Mountains.

TUCSON (Ariz.) Oct. 11.—A local corporation, headed by Epes Randolph, has arranged for the purchase of three groups of mining claims in the Catalina Mountains, for a total consideration of about $300,000. Among the beneficiaries are William M. Lovell, R. M. Leatherwood and W. E. Francis of Tucson. The mines lie on the eastern slope of the mountains, and can be reached readily by a railroad from Benson.

It is understood that at least $1,500,000 has been expended on the property of the DeQuesne Mining and Reduction Company, near Patagonia. The principal stockholder in the corporation is the Pittsburgh millionaire, Westinghouse. In area the property aggregates 1400 acres, comprising many mineral bodies of high value, though base to a remarkable degree. Electric ore separators have been tried, and with considerable success. Machinery keeps arriving at the property, and occasionally the mill is run and a few carloads of concentrates are shipped, but very little seems accomplished, in consideration of the vast amount of capital invested and the undoubted value of the property.

The North American Company, operating the Nelly Bly mine near Lordsburg, has suspended work and discharged its men. The instructions to suspend were not accompanied with money to pay the miners, so there was considerable trouble on tap till a sufficient sum was telegraphed from New York.

The company was a sort of experimental one, which, not content with the hauling cost of $2 per ton for ore sent to the railroad, introduced a traction engine, which was a monumental and costly failure. The management seems to be blamed with the failure of what has been considered one of the best copper properties in Southwestern New Mexico.

Work continues active on the King of Arizona mines, in Yuma county, forty-five miles north of Mohawk, where 150 miners are taking out about 190 tons of gold ore a day. The ore is reduced in a dry crushing mill, and then treated by cyanide. The property is developed to a depth of about 1000 feet. Water is pumped from deep wells and piped several miles to the mine. The property is owned mainly by Southern Pacific men, including Epes Randolph, Eugene S. Ives and Frank Cox.

For September, the Arizona Copper Company at Clifton produced 1389 tons of Bessemer copper, which is about its standard output. The managers of the company have announced that there is no intention to cut down production. This is the more remarkable, in that the Clifton and Morenci districts carry about the lowest copper percentages worked in Arizona, averaging only about 3½ per cent. metal.

The great new furnace of the Shannon Company has been in operation for the past two weeks, and the September output of the works near Clifton has been close to 1,500,000 pounds of copper. The works have been handling a considerable quantity of custom ore.

A six-foot vein, with values running as high as $70 a ton, has been cut on the property of the Arichise Company, north of Safford.

D. M. Potter has sued the Chase Creek Copper Company for 18,000 shares of stock, alleged due plaintiff as consideration for the transfer of twenty-four mining claims.

SNOOZER VEIN?

Large Ore Body Is Cut at Depth of About One Thousand Feet by the Senator Tunnel.

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) Oct. 11.—From the great Senator tunnel, south of Prescott, has come word that a large ore body, presumed to be a Snoozer vein, has been cut, at a depth of about 1000 feet. A working shaft is being driven from the surface on the vein, to connect with the tunnel, which, it is believed, will be the outlet of millions of dollars' worth of ore, as it will penetrate one of the richest mineralized zones of Central Arizona.

A ten-stamp mill for the Arizona Copper-Gold Mining Company in Cherry Creek district, is to be started within a week on ore from the Leghorn mine, where the main shaft, now 368 feet in depth, will be continued to a depth of 700 feet. The shaft lately was equipped with a fine hoist.

A record of ninety-three feet was made during September in sinking the shaft of the Little Daisy mine at Jerome, one of the properties of the United Verde Extension mine. The shaft is now down over 580 feet, and is to be continued to the depth of 1000 feet before any drifting will be done. The formation penetrated by the shaft has been remarkable. The first 200 feet was through an iron formation, containing 5 per cent. copper; then came cement, conglomerate, manganese, spar, tough red clay and schist, which is expected to continue till the striking of another copper body. The owners are hopeful of finding something that approximates in value the near-by ore body of the United Verde.

A working capital of $250,000 has been raised for the development of the Cunningham Pass mine, near Wendendale, in Northern Yuma county.

Joseph W. Greenough of Missoula, Mont., paid $20,000 for a group of claims on Bill Williams Fork. A large number of undeveloped mining claims have been sold lately in that district.

E. L. Marks of Cleveland, O., is opening the Profusion group, near Wickenburg, for the Eagle Gold and Copper Company. In a 160-foot inclined shaft has been cut a twenty-five-foot ledge of ore, with a pay streak of three feet, which averages $42 per ton in gold and copper.

A four-foot ledge, averaging $14 to the ton in gold, has been found in the well-known Relief mine, in a drift on the 300-foot level.

BISBEE DISTRICT.

Starting of New Reverberatory Furnace at Copper Queen Smelter Big Event.

BISBEE (Ariz.) Oct. 11.—The most important event of the past week in this district was the starting of a new reverberatory furnace at the Copper Queen smelter at Douglas, for the treatment of the lighter ores, flue dust and converter slag. The product of the entire smelter for September was about 6,000,000 pounds of copper, six-tenths of the monthly record heretofore. Nearly 500 men have been laid off at the works. At the Calumet and Arizona smelter, three furnaces have been running and the product for September is estimated at 3,000,000 pounds, about three-quarters the regular figure heretofore.

The Shattuck-Arizona Company has discontinued shipping oxide ore to Douglas, and is now sending 250 tons of sulphide daily to Globe.

The Copper Queen has suspended Sunday work, and is pushing toward completion the new skip system of handling ore. A number of drifts are being run toward the Sacramento shaft, which will handle most of the company's ore product in the near future. The company's new power plant is to be in operation about February 1, after which date practically all of the pumping in the various mines will be done by electrical power.

The Casey group of six claims in Gleason mining district, has been sold for $150,000, to L. W. Powell, manager of the Calumet and Arizona interests in Arizona. The claims adjoin the Leadville group, already being operated by the Powell interests. The seller of the Casey group is Martin Costello, who sold the Calumet and Arizona Company the "Irish Mag" mine at Bisbee for $550,000. The Bisbee deal was most satisfactory to the company, for from the mines acquired millions of dollars worth of ore has been secured.

After spending $150,000, the holders of the bond on the Cananea-Bisbee property in the Cananea Mountains of Sonora, have thrown up their option and have refused to pay a balance of $500,000.

NEVADA.

EAGLE STRIKE IS PROMISING.

ALL-PAY ORE FOUND IN NIXON AND WINGFIELD MINE.

Fifteen Feet of Sulphide Containing Silver, Gold and Copper Seems to Confirm Previous Reports on the Property and Development Is Going Forward Rapidly.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Oct. 11.—Fifteen feet of all-pay sulphide ore, exposed by drifting at a vertical depth of 200 feet, the chief mineral contents being silver and the quartz showing some gold and copper, is the boast of the Fairview Eagle mine, Fairview district, Churchill county, Nev. The group adjoins the Nevada Hills, which is a steady shipper and is paying regular dividends, after only a year of operation.

The Eagle is said to be in every essential the equal of Nevada Hills and it is claimed it is only a matter of weeks until regular consignments of rich ore will be going to the smelters. Men are sacking the product for the market. The Jarvis lease on the Eagle is also making ready a lot of choice rock for the wagon haul to Fallon, the nearest railway station.

Previous flattering reports as to the magnitude of the Eagle strike are verified by George Wingfield, General Manager J. W. Finch of the Goldfield Consolidated Mines Company, and S. M. Warmbath of the brokerage house of W. F. Bond & Co., who made a visit to the diggings. They say the mine is employing as many men as the workings can accommodate and that some headway is being made in company drifting on the 200 level, where the flow of water has diminished to about 3000 gallons a day. A powerful hoist is on the ground, the first one installed in Fairview, and the equipment is speedily to be complemented by the delivery of a sixty-horse-power gas engine, a five-drill compressor and a fifty-gallons-per-minute pump.

Control of the Eagle is held by Senator Nixon and George Wingfield, who acquired the property by purchase at a time when the pick of the camp was theirs for the buying.

End-lining the Eagle on the east is the Fairview Aztec, whose manager is W. H. Webber, also manager of the Nevada Hills. The main working shaft of the Aztec has tapped a strong flow of water in a sulphide formation and those in charge are convinced that the extension of the Eagle ledge is near at hand. At the point of the fabulous find on the Eagle the vein heads directly for the Aztec, whose dividing line is only 300 feet distant. It seems reasonable to predict for the Aztec the next entry into the shipping class at Fairview.

HIT BY BEAR RAIDS.

Thirty-one of the Active Issues on the Goldfield Exchange Slip Down the Toboggan.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Oct. 11.—Only seven of the total of thirty-eight mining stocks which recorded sales in the last week of September and the first week of October on the Goldfield Exchange were able to make headway or hold their own against the bear raids. Those are Grandma, Mohawk Ledge, Nevada Champion, Frances-Mohawk, Baby Florence, Madonna and C.O.D.M. & L. The first three just played even and the remaining four scored an average advance of 14.14 per cent.

At the same time thirty-one of the thirty-eight active issues declined an average of 18.52 per cent. The net decline of the entire market, counting the winners and the standoffs, was 13.62 per cent. from the last week of September to the first week of this month.

WOMEN'S WORK IN MINES.

Very Few Employed Underground—In Africa They Carry Heavy Loads.

Until recently women were employed in England in connection with surface work in coal mining and brick yards. The women were found to be very strong, but they were otherwise unsatisfactory and were ultimately dispensed with at the collieries. The coal mines regulation act of Great Britain prohibits woman labor being employed underground.

In German Southwest Africa an investigator found many native women at work about the mines. They were useful in carrying in loads, especially of firewood. The women labor was cheap and as long as they were left alone to take as much time as they liked over the work and do it as they wished they were all right.

His next experience was higher up the coast, in West Africa. Labor was short and they decided to try women to carry stones. They carried the first two loads and then they struck.

Those women quite altered the conditions of carrying stones. They carried them for a certain distance, but three or four relays had to be provided. After that they were tried at carrying sand and things like that. They went on for a short while, but did the work in fits and starts.

In another place, also on the West Coast, where women had been tried against the black men, it was found that for carrying in firewood they were by far the best and cheapest. There, of course, they were on piece work, although their tickets were marked just the same as if they were on day work.

Their task was to carry in a cord of wood a day. They used to start about 4:30 a.m. and went on carrying until 7 and from 7:30 till 9 or 10. Then if they wanted to get off early the next day they used to carry another cord of wood in the afternoon or a part of it.

They were a decided success, but they were very particular as to whether the cord of wood was exactly in what they called their circle. They did not mind how close it was to the boilers, but if it were a little over their distance they would go to the manager and want an increase directly.

Some women used to carry about 100 pounds on their heads; on an average about 85 to 95 pounds of wood.

Statistics published in the Mining World from time to time show that there are a number of women employed in the coal mines of Belgium and Germany, for instance, as pickers and sorters. In Germany women receive from 27 to 28 cents per day.

MEN AND THINGS OVER THE SEAS.

Kier Hardie, Self-Educated.

When Kier Hardie, the well-known labor leader of the British Parliament, was twelve years of age he could neither read nor write, and the only schooling he received was a rough drilling in the elements of reading which he obtained by studying books and notices in shop windows. Writing and shorthand Mr. Hardie taught himself, practicing the latter in the coal mine with the aid of a white stone blackened with smoke from his pit lamp and used as a tablet upon which he scratched the symbols with a pin. At 22 he left the pits and became secretary of a miners' union and two years later he obtained a position as sub-editor of a local newspaper at Cumnock, the town in which his present home is situated.

Rich, Unostentatious, Charitable.

Miss Emily Charlotte Talbot, an unmarried lady who is but little known outside her native Wales, where she lives on her two magnificent estates, is probably the richest woman in the world. She lives very quietly, rarely visiting her London house, and dispenses charity in a splendid manner. She inherited her fortune from her father, who died a short time ago. The property was real estate in London, Wales and many cities of England, and also tin and copper mines in Cornwall and coal mines in Wales. Quite recently all this property was advanced enormously in value.

Has no Home Instinct.

George Bernard Shaw, critic, dramatist and novelist, asserts that he has no more home instinct than a milk can at a railway station. He admits, however, that he has an address at 10 Adelphi Terrace, London. "These chambers," he explains, "constitute the real center of my domesticity, because my wife lives there. My official residence, qualifying me as a vestryman, is in Fitzroy Square; my mother lives there. I live nowhere." He says that any place that will hold a bed and a writing table is as characteristic of him as any other. At one of the socialist conferences, when the delegates assembled after lunch, the well-known writer came in, rubbing his hands and giving thanks for the splendid dinner he had just had. Some one asked him what he had for dinner. "Ah!" replied Mr. Shaw, with all the serenity of a well-fed man, "I've had seven bananas!"

Spain's Railroads.

The railroads in Spain do not lose any chances for revenue. The railroads all sell billetes de anden, which are good for the platform only. These cost generally 5 centimos, equivalent to a cent in American money. Just why this is done it is hard to see, because persons entering a train cannot very well avoid the conductor, who is always making trips to inspect the carriages. If a person attempted to steal a ride in a carriage he would have small chance of getting away with it. If caught he would have to pay a penalty of just twice the fare between the point where he was discovered and the point where tickets last were inspected.

Dress Superior to Title.

At the Savoy Hotel, in London, no one is admitted at the dinner hour who is not in evening dress. Recently a well-known English Earl and his wife were refused admission to the restaurant because they were not in evening attire. The gentleman bears one of the proudest titles in England, but his protestations to the head waiter availed nothing. To dine in the Savoy's restaurant, or even to be served with coffee in the adjoining foyer, it is absolutely essential that a lady shall wear a dinner gown, sans chapeau, and her escort naturally must wear a dress suit. This rule has not been broken since the Savoy restaurant was opened, and those who do not care to dress are invited to eat the same viands and drink the same wine in the grill-room.

London's Police Force.

The police force of London numbers 19,000 men. The city proper is patroled by 2000 men. Outside of this territory of one mile square the other 17,000 maintain order. They are known as the London Metropolitan Police Department, with headquarters at Scotland Yard. The average pay of a London policeman is $45 a month. Accommodations for single men are provided at the station houses and Scotland Yard. Board and room costs them 10 shillings a week, or $2.40 American money. When a policeman goes off duty he unbuttons a braid on his arm and all Londoners understand it. Members of the Metropolitan police force never encroach on territory comprising the city of London proper without first notifying the proper officials.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Propagation of Mussels.

Because mussels are becoming scarce along the Mississippi River the last Congress made a liberal appropriation for an investigation of the way to artificially propagate these fresh water bivalves. Of the difficulties to be overcome, Prof. Bartsch says:

"The difficulties of artificial propagation of the mussel are many. These may be overcome, but at present we do not know sufficient of the mussel and its habits to be able to form a definite opinion. It is a very simple thing to turn millions of eggs into fish, but the egg of the mussel passes through another stage before it becomes a mussel. After being hatched it is a parasite which attaches itself to fish. Now, while one mussel may produce 60,000 eggs, but a very small number of these will be hatched. That is one of the things the expedition will learn something about. If artificial propagation shall not prove practicable, perhaps by protecting the fish and the mussels and having a closed season during which the mussels must not be disturbed the desired results may be attained."

Fleas Transmit Leprosy.

Plague and leprosy are transmitted by fleas, according to the theory of Prof. Charles F. Baker of the Cuban experiment station, at Havana. Mr. Baker has believed this for some time, and he is now receiving fleas from all over the world and being requested to examine them to see if they are the kind that breed these two loathsome diseases. The fleas are sent to Prof. Baker, and he carefully examines them and answers the inquirer. The East Indian Commission, which has been an important factor in the study of the plague, has been in correspondence with Prof. Baker for a long time, and has followed out his suggestions, and made experiments which have proved his theory. It has long been believed that rats transmitted the plague from one country to another, but now it seems not to have been the rats, but the fleas on the little rodents. While there has not been a wide spread of leprosy in any part of Cuba, a few cases have occurred, and the authorities have been unable to account for its spread. Prof. Baker obtained permission to experiment in the leper hospital of Havana, and his experiments there proved that fleas which have bitten people afflicted with leprosy can transmit the disease to other animals.

Extracting Smoke from Coal.

The new English fuel, coalite, is practically coal with the smoke extracted. From the smoke and gas liberated at the same time, are made gas for lighting or power, tar, various oils, and sulphate of ammonia. Large establishments are being prepared for the preparation of coalite, the demand for which grows as the people understand its value.

Scarcity of Radium.

Some idea of the difficulties in the way of extracting radium from the pitchblend waste may be appreciated when we learn that pitchblend, the mineral that is richest in radium, contains but one-millionth part of 1 per cent of radium, less than the proportion of gold in ocean water. We would think it a pretty thankless task to mine gold, or extract it, from sea water; but the work would be far easier, and we should get more gold from a cubic yard of sea water than we would radium from a ton of pitchblend. Perhaps, then it will not be hard to appreciate how little radium there is in the world—less than twenty grains, certainly not half a teaspoonful of pure radium bromide. A grain of gold can be had for 5 cents or less. Diamonds are worth, by weight, much more, perhaps $10 a grain, but the cost of radium is truly fabulous—$7200 for a single grain.—[Harper's Weekly.

Remarkable Medical Case.

What New York physicians look upon as the most remarkable case in medical history was revealed this week by the autopsy following the death of a Mrs. Stevens, who has lived for months with a hole in her heart through which the blood leaked out. According to all the laws of science this trouble, the first of its kind to be recorded, ought to have caused death as soon as it began. Mrs. Stevens was literally the sickest person on record, suffering, in addition to the heart trouble which carried her off, for which a name has not yet been chosen, from at least six other deadly diseases, to say nothing of many minor ones. How she lived at all is a mystery. Although but 23 years old the list of her troubles sounds like a medical dictionary. At the time of her death she was suffering from Bright's disease, cirrhosis of the liver, tuberculosis, pachymeningitis, dropsy of the whole body and general edema or puffiness of the brain. In addition to these, any of which should have caused death, were a list of minor complaints, making her literally a museum of maladies.

Study of Cancer.

Dr. G. Cooke Adams of London has been making a study of cancer in Chicago, and has reached a conclusion that diet is a most important factor in the increase of the disease and the death rate.

The increase from cancer in Chicago from 1864 to 1905 was 232 per cent.; in 1866 1 in each 104 deaths was due to cancer, and in 1905 it had increased to 1 death in every 22. The results show that the increase is due to the foreign-born inhabitants, as the native Chicago-born show the lowest death rate in the world.

The cancer death rate per 100,000 living over forty years of age of the different foreign-born inhabitants show that the German is 757, Irish 700, Scandinavian 520, Slavonian 320, other foreign 466, Italian 56, colored 59, Chicago and Illinois born 35.

Of Germans dying in Chicago at the age of forty years and over, one in every four dies from cancer. In Germany it is one in twelve. Of the Irish dying in Chicago aged forty and over, one in six dies from cancer, while in Ireland it is one in fifteen; whereas, among the Chicago and Illinois born dying in Chicago, aged forty years and over, there is only one death in seventy-two from cancer.

The death rate among the foreign-born from cancer in Chicago is rapidly increasing. The German and Irish show the highest death rate from cancer in the world, nearly 300 per cent. higher than in their native countries. The Italians and Chinese maintain the lowest death rate of all from cancer, as shown in their own countries.

A study of foods showed that the nations showing higher mortality consumed large quantities of canned, preserved, dried and pickled meats, sausages, etc., often eaten uncooked. While these preserved meat foods are eaten to a certain extent in their own countries, the higher wages of America permit indulgence in them to a greater extent, while the greater cost of fresh meat is an added inducement to the consumption of these articles. It was found, also, that the bulk of the fresh meat prepared at the plant of a slaughtering company, where stock condemned ante-mortem by government, State and city inspectors is slaughtered, is eaten by the poor.

Frost Works for Man.

An interesting application of the freezing system in shaft sinking is exhibited at the Washington colliery in England. When the shaft had been sunk a short distance it was found that a layer of quicksand eighty feet in depth must be penetrated. To prevent the wet sand from flowing into the shaft it was frozen solid. A circular row of holes, forming a ring more than twenty feet in diameter, was made around the shaft, and by means of metal pipes a freezing mixture, or brine, of chloride of sodium was caused to circulate in the holes. This had the effect of freezing the sand in a circular wall around the shaft, as hard as rock. On the removal of the soft sand in the center the frozen wall remained intact, protecting the workmen from the quicksand behind it.—[Philadelphia Record.

PROMINENT PERSONS.

Ex-Senator Henry G. Davis of West Virginia, though 83 years of age, is being urged by some of his Democratic friends to accept the nomination for Governor. Notwithstanding his years, he is still hale and hearty.

Prof. Carl C. Lorentzen of the University of New York has gone to Copenhagen to further an exchange of professors between Danish and American universities, similar to that in vogue between Germany and the United States.

Thomas Henry Shelvin, a multimillionaire of Albany, N. Y., but at present engaged in the lumber business in Portland, Or., has presented to the University of Minnesota a hall for women which cost $60,000. The new building has been named the Alice Shevlin Hall.

Senator Edwards of Vermont is living in Philadelphia, where he has engaged in the practice of law since his retirement from the Senate. He is now in his eightieth year.

Lord Beresford will be the guest of honor at the annual banquet of the Unitew States Naval Academy Alumni at Chicago, to be held in that city in November.

Hall Caine, it is believed, is the wealthiest novelist and playwright in the world. In theatrical royalties alone he has received up to now $450,000 from England and America, and the huge sale of his novels must bring him in a much bigger income.

[illegible] DISCOVERER.

[illegible] of the man who has made [illegible] is Harry W. Campbell [illegible] Neb., and it will some day [illegible] among America's great. [illegible] has practically doubled [illegible] area of the Union, in fact, [illegible] land surface of the earth. [illegible] years ago, Mr. Campbell [illegible] and not especially success[illegible] in Brown county, South Da[illegible] had gone there in 1879 from [illegible] There were years of drought [illegible] of plenty. [illegible] PROBLEM.

[illegible] problem was not as simple [illegible] Mr. Campbell found, [illegible] experimenting, that any [illegible] surface packing caused the [illegible] rise and evaporate more [illegible] than ever. Then came the [illegible] that to retain the moisture [illegible] of storms, the purpose of [illegible] the subsoil only must [illegible] This resulted finally in [illegible] of a new implement, the [illegible]," which was wedge[illegible] wheels that cut into the [illegible] compress the earth.

[illegible] earth still lost its moisture [illegible] the subsoil packing, though [illegible] as before. One day a [illegible] with which he had been [illegible] started across a field of [illegible] dragging the harrow with [illegible] a few weeks the harrowed [illegible] he had supposed would [illegible] injured, was flourishing far [illegible] the rest. From this accident [illegible] the principle of the "soil [illegible] which, briefly stated, consists [illegible] the top layer of soil broken [illegible] the moisture will find no [illegible] through which it can rise by [illegible] action to the hot surface for [illegible] and which will readily [illegible] and store any moisture that [illegible]

[illegible] ploughing gave by far the [illegible]. The neighbors gave up [illegible] in despair, but Mr. Camp[illegible] set to find the reason he [illegible] them. He found it and here

[illegible] should be done when the [illegible] moist, regardless of season. [illegible] moisture is conserved by the [illegible] consistency. Ploughing dry [illegible] leaves large hard lumps and [illegible] exposed surface from which [illegible] up moisture is quickly [illegible] the sun.

[illegible] SCIENCE OF IT.

[illegible] soil culture, as Mr. Camp[illegible] it, is thus epitomized: The [illegible] be plowed at the right [illegible] all possible moisture, the [illegible] be packed, to save all [illegible] moisture, and the surface soil [illegible] kept broken up through the [illegible] growing season—again to save [illegible] moisture. All this means [illegible] and plenty of it. Hence the [illegible]" farming, which means [illegible] your work on half the [illegible] and getting three times [illegible] every season.

[illegible] soil culture finds its most [illegible] field in the regions where [illegible] inches of rainfall a year is [illegible]. There with the old [illegible] the chances against getting [illegible], no matter how rich the [illegible] about ten to one. But [illegible] of the Campbell system are [illegible] under any conditions though [illegible] will be varied. This [illegible] generally recognized and [illegible] is familiar to every [illegible] gardener.

[illegible] years the State agricul[illegible] of the West have been [illegible] with "dry farming" and [illegible] a campaign of education [illegible] with land in the semi[illegible] The Hays government [illegible] in connection with the Kansas State Agricultural College was the pioneer, and since then experiment stations have been established at Dickinson and Edgley, N. D., Highmore and Belle Fourche, S. D., North Platte, Neb., Hayes and Garden City, Kan., Channing, Amarillo and Chillicothe, Tex., and Akron, Colo., for the study of soil culture methods and seed selection, and one at Eads, Colo., for the testing of new machinery suitable for the working of the hard western soils.

A RAILROAD'S HELP.

Another important factor in the development of dry farming was the Rock Island Railroad system which has thousands of miles of track in the semi-arid regions of the West. This railroad gave the Campbell system almost its first recognition, putting F. S. White, its agricultural and horticultural commissioner, in charge of extensixe investigation which led to a broad campaign of education at its own expense. The combined results has been a remarkable development of its tributary territory in Eastern Colorado, and Western Kansas and Nebraska, and, in turn, in a rapid growth of the railroad in the belt.

It is estimated that there are 4,500,000 acres of semi-arid land now under cultivation on this region and in the Dakotas, a great part of which is being farmed under the Campbell system. The development in Eastern Colorado is typical. Three years ago there were but 200,000 acres and this year it has passed the million mark, with large crops being harvested each year.

The semi-arid belt was once part of what was known as the great alkali desert and lies just east of the Rockies, extending through parts of New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana. The entire area of this belt is close to a billion acres of which, it is estimated, about 70 per cent. will produce good crops under the Campbell system.

The semi-arid lands of the world have never been accurately computed, but there are thousands of square miles of such lands in Mexico, South Africa, Australia, Canada, India and Egypt where the first "dry farming" was practiced a few thousand years before the discovery of America. The general application of the principle would mean the production of wealth beyond computation.

Now comes a man who shows us that even these deserts contain enough water to grow our crops—if we can but conserve and use the water that is there. Further he shows us how it can be done.

Some of the best results obtained under the Campbell system are seen on the Pomeroy farm in Graham county, Western Kansas. The farm was owned by J. P. Pomeroy, now of Colorado Springs, who had just one successful crop and thirteen failures in fourteen years. Seven years ago, Mr. Pomeroy heard of Mr. Campbell and engaged him to superintend his soil culture.

Last season the sixth successive crop was harvested under the new system and all these crops were from two to five times as large as those of adjoining farms where the old methods were used. Mr. Campbell got as high as forty bushels of wheat to the acre when others got from thirteen to nothing. The average yield for Kansas is only 11.4 bushels.

Other grains and standard fruits yielded equally well to the Campbell system. Shade and fruit trees were produced where trees would not grow before.

So these things have been made evident regarding farming in the semi-arid regions. Crops can be grown each year regardless of climate or rainfall, but they require more knowledge and better farming; farming with scientific soil culture is not more expensive than with ordinary methods. Steam machinery is not necessary, but the pioneer should save sufficient capital to tide him over the first year should the season be too dry to break and prepare new ground with success.

WORK PREVIOUSLY DONE BY THE ENGINEERING CORPS.

Many Important and Difficult Projects Built by Army Officials and Other Engineering Works That Are the Result of Government Supervision.

Harper's Weekly has published an extremely interesting and instructive article from the pen of Lieut. Joseph A. Baer, Sixth United States Cavalry, relating to the construction of the Panama Canal under the supervision of the Engineer Corps of the Army. Lieut. Baer's paper is not only a just and splendid tribute from one arm of the military service to another—but it is so full of pertinent information that it really constitutes a valuable chapter in the history of army achievement in peace. "That the engineer corps is competent to complete the construction of the canal," says the author, "will be evident to any one who will take the trouble to examine its record—a record remarkable as much for its unassuming modesty and lack of self-advertising as for its notable achievements. In preparing an outline of the various works of the engineers, it is but fair to include the works of those engineers who have received their education at the engineer school, West Point, and in the practical school of experience in the corps, and have afterwards undertaken engineering work in civil life.

"In two cases, indeed, I have included men who, through lack of vacancies in the engineer corps, have, upon graduation at West Point, been commissioned in the artillery corps, but have been engaged in engineering work. I feel justified in thus including graduates of the military academy from the fact that up to 1866 West Point was purely an engineer school and a graduate was merely an engineer assigned to the engineers, or perhaps to the artillery, cavalry, or infantry.

"Of the distinctively military engineering work no details can be given except to state that at a cost of $130,000,000 they have drawn up all plans and have two-thirds finished the task of protecting 4000 miles of seacoast so thoroughly that not only do the great cities feel safe from foreign invasion, but also every Congressional district that borders on the sea sleeps in security from marauding landing forces.

"The earliest work of national improvement that the engineers accomplished was the national road, the 'Old Cumberland Pike,' that ran from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, and made possible the rapid settlement of the great Middle West.

"But the most important service that the corps has rendered to the country is the development of the railroad system of the United States. Up to 1855 there was scarcely a railroad in this country that had not been projected, built, and in most cases managed by officers of the corps. They could follow no precedent, but were compelled to evolve new methods; they were true pioneers blazing the way for the magnificent railway engineering science of today. Not only did they locate the B. and O., but they constructed it and managed it. With their contemporary army engineers, they built and managed the Northern Central, the Erie, Boston and Providence, New York, New Haven and Hartford; Boston and Albany, Long Island, the Lake Shore, parts of the New York Central, most of the Southern Railroad, the Ohio and Mississippi, Tehuantepec Railroad, Mexico and Pacific, Cumberland Valley, Virginia and Tennessee, Cuban Railroad, and a list of smaller roads too numerous to mention. Gen. McClellan built the Illinois Central, and was president of the St. Louis and Cincinnati; Gen. Bragg built the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé. Counting engineers and other army officers, forty-nine have been chief engineers, twenty-two served as railroad presidents, and counting assistant engineers and superintendents, the list mounts up into the hundreds.

"During the same period the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, the old Erie Canal and the Morris Canal were built by army engineers. At the present time, Col. Symonds of the Engineer Corps is one of the board of consulting engineers on the enlargement of the Erie Canal. The great transcontinental railways were all surveyed and projected by the corps. Among the familiar names connected with this work are those of Gens. McClellan, Hood, Parke, Weaver, Abbott and Humphreys. Army officers explored the West and mapped it, especially from 1810 to 1830.

"Practically every boundary of the United States and most of the State boundaries were surveyed and marked by the Engineer Corps. The Coast and Geodetic Survey was recognized, and the geodetic survey of the Great Lakes was made by the corps. In this connection Capt. Talbot invented the zenith telescope and the zenith method of determining latitude.

"Although the maintenance and construction of the lighthouses are under the Lighthouse Board of the Treasury Department, they are maintained by the navy and constructed by the Engineer Corps. The tale of the building of some of these lights rivals in interest that of Eddystone and Skerryvore.

"The Tillamook Rock Light is probably the most exposed light in the world. Its site is a precipitous rock rising ninety feet from the Pacific, about twenty miles south of the mouth of the Columbia River. On three sides the waves curl over the top of the rock; on the fourth is a treacherous, swirling current. The first man who attempted to scale its sides slipped and fell into the current beneath. His body was never recovered. After a month of scheming, a few men were successfully landed, and communication was kept up by means of a cable and breeches buoy. Due to the rocking of the ship, the cable whipped up and down so violently that one man who made the passage to the rock refused to return, and spent the many remaining years of his life a prisoner on the rock. The workmen had first to dig a niche in the rock in which to live. The roof and front were anchored by heavy ship's anchor chains, to keep them from being washed away. The waves dashed over their roof and practically compelled them to live under water. All material was landed by means of the cable. After sixteen months the light was completed. There are in all 9000 lights, beacons and ranges, of which 1243 are lights. These have been constructed at a cost of $65,000,000.

"Taking the fourteen principal harbors of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, the average available depth has been increased from twelve to twenty-five feet; a harbor of refuge at the Delaware capes has been constructed that has sheltered 450,000 vessels; docks and breakwaters have been added to the harbors, so that the cost of sending a ton of wheat to Liverpool has decreased from $5.75 in 1863 to $1.90 in 1900. Taking thirty-seven out of forty-one of the present important lake harbors, the average available depth has been increased from two to eighteen feet. Fifteen important harbors have been made by the construction of breakwaters, and a twenty-foot channel has been opened between Buffalo and Duluth. This includes the Sault St. Marie locks and canal. More tonnage passes through these locks annually than clears from the port of New York. [Also more than clears from the port of London, we believe.—Ed.] In addition, the Hudson, Mississippi, Ohio and Columbia have been made more navigable by a system of dredging and locks. The statistician of the Interstate Commerce Commission states that the saving to the United States due to these interior waterways alone is $240,000,000 annually. The total expenditures of the Engineer Corps since 1820 on rivers and harbors have been $515,000,000.

"Of this immense work it is difficult to select the most noteworthy examples. The most important from a commercial standpoint is the improvement of New York Harbor. The main channel has been deepened from 22½ feet to 30 feet, and when the dredging is finished a straight channel 2000 feet wide and 40 feet deep will be made. All New Yorkers are familiar with the removal of the reefs at Hell Gate. In this work the engineers blew up Hallet's Point and Flood Rock in two simultaneous blasts of numerous mines of high explosives with which the rocks were honeycombed—100,000 pounds in Hallet's Point and 250,000 pounds in Flood Rock distributed in six miles of galleries; 460,000 cubic yards of rock were shattered. In their dredging work they have designed a type of self-containing dredge that is the most economical machine of its kind in the world.

"Galveston Harbor is the most important port on the Gulf of Mexico west of the Mississippi. Up to 1890 there were but 13 feet of water over the bar, and large vessels were loaded by lighters five miles from shore. Today the jetties built by the corps aggregate twelve miles in length, and with the dredging and scouring from currents thus created there are now thirty feet of water over the bar.

"In 1853, President Pierce sent a note to Lieut. Montgomery C. Meigs, saying that he wanted him to build the most beautiful dome in the world. Meigs replied, 'I will, sir.' The wings and dome of the Capitol building at Washington were the result. Thomas W. Walter was associated with Meigs as architect, but the beauty of the structure was mostly due to the latter, and all the plans of construction were of his designing. In this work Meigs invented the process of turning stone columns in a lathe. Meigs also built the Washington Aqueduct which crosses a ravine in Cabin John's Bridge, a single masonry arch of 228 feet span. This was for years the longest masonry arch in the world. Meigs afterward was quartermaster-general during the Civil War.

"To Thomas L. Casey was given the task of building a foundation under a masonry structure then 156 feet high, weighing 35,000 tons—the half-completed Washington Monument. This was successfully accomplished by a system of opposite tunnels, and the monument was continued to a height of 555 feet. Casey afterward built the State, War and Navy Department building, and the Library of Congress.

NEW HAVEN JUDGE DEFINES RIGHTS OF STRIKERS—FINE FOR INTIMIDATION.

JUDGE TYNER of New Haven, Ct., after a hearing that lasted a day and a half, found Frank J. McGee of Worcester, Mass., national organizer of the Iron Moulders' Union, guilty on four counts of intimidation and gave him the extreme penalty on each of the counts—a fine of $100 and six months in jail.

He found him "not guilty" on a fifth or general count.

This totals to $400 and two years.

The appeal bond was fixed at $1000 on each count and, although the counsel for the defense put up a strong argument for a lower total bond than $4000, saying that it was practically impossible for McGee to get it, His Honor said, "I think I shall let the $4000 bond stand. I have considered the matter very carefully and I do not think it exorbitant."

Of the hearing the New Haven Leader says:

In rendering his decision His Honor went into the case at length. He said that he regarded McGee as the principal in the affair and that he was inclined to take the defense's view of Dunn's position.

He therefore continued Dunn's case, nisi, under probation, until November 25, with the understanding that there would be no more trouble.

"I suppose that we will always have strikes. We always have had them in one form or another," said Judge Tyner, in rendering his finding. "It is my opinion that it is not unlawful for men to engage in a strike to the extent of leaving employment that is distasteful to them. I will go even farther and say that I do not consider it unlawful to have pickets out, provided they are out for the purpose of knowledge only and that they in no wise interfere with any one.

"On the other hand it is not unlawful that men who through business energy and thrift have grown in a community shall discharge employés if they so desire.

"Strikes only become unlawful when they interfere with those sacred rights of safety and liberty which all people have a right to enjoy. When those rights are assailed then the actual crime is committed.

"It would seem to me that it would be wisdom on the part of employés who have gone on strike, because they were dissatisfied with their wages or hours of work, to seek employment elsewhere—find it in the open market, but when they gather about their former place of business and by their acts cause an annoyance to their former employer or employers, then they are infringing on the rights of others which they have no right to do.

"Our laws protect both capital and labor alike. We have on our statute books a large number of laws relative to the rights of labor, such as hours, etc. The laws are for both the rich and poor alike.

"An employer of labor should be protected the same as the laboring man, and he should be allowed to run his business in his own way as in many cases he himself has built it up after years of toil. A man may use his all provided he does not interfere with the rights of others. When he does he must stop that interference.

"Men who leave a shop have no more right there than have I. If you worked for Mr. Farnsworth and some member of another organization went to him and tried to have you removed from your place you would not like it and you would consider that your rights were being interfered with. It is so in the case of others.

"I believe that McGee did use the threats as testified to. On his own statement he came here for the purpose of keeping men from working at the McLagon foundry, which in itself is an assault on the rights of others of which I have spoken. I consider that McGee was the master mind. I therefore fine him $100 and give him six months in jail on each of the four first counts. On the general, or fifth, count, I will discharge him."

Dunn, who is referred to by Judge Tyner, is secretary of the New Haven branch of the Iron Moulders' Union, and he is also charged with intimidation of workmen. The strike has been in progress about three months.

Cardinal Gibbons Denounces Strikes.

Cardinal Gibbons, in an article entitled "Organized Labor," in the October number of Putnam's Monthly, declares himself strongly opposed to strikes and boycotts as means of settling differences between the employers and the employed, and makes an urgent appeal for the pacific adjustment of industrial difficulties.

With unusual candor, but in a kindly spirit, he makes several outspoken admonitions to organized labor. He expresses clearly in detail his views regarding capital and labor, and finally urges workingmen to strive constantly and zealously toward an uplifting of the moral and social standard of their organization.

While he approves the banding together of workingmen for their own protection, Cardinal Gibbons denounces those elements of organized labor which seek to stir up unnecessary discord.

Regarding the evils of strikes, which subject he discusses at length, he says, in part:

"Experience has shown that strikes are a drastic and at best a very questionable remedy for the redress of the laborer's grievances. They paralyze industry; they often foment fierce passions, and lead to the destruction of property; and, above all, they result in inflicting grievous injury on the laborer himself by keeping him in enforced idleness, during which time his mind is clouded by discontent while brooding over his situation, and his family not infrequently suffers from want of the necessaries of life. The loss inflicted by strikes on the employers is not much more than half as great as that which is sustained by the employed, who can much less afford to bear it."

Continuing, Cardinal Gibbons discusses the subject of boycotting, of which he says, in part:

"I am persuaded that the system of boycotting by which members of labor unions are instructed not to patronize certain obnoxious business houses, is not only disapproved by an impartial public sentiment, but that it does not commend itself to the more thoughtful and conservative portion of the guilds themselves. Every man is free, indeed, to select the establishment with which he wishes to deal, and in purchasing from one in preference to another he is not violating justice. But the case is altered when by a mandate of the society he is debarred from buying from a particular firm. Such a proposition assails the liberty of the purchaser and the rights of the seller, and is an unwarrantable invasion of the commercial privileges guaranteed by the government to business concerns. If such a social ostracism was generally in vogue, a process of retaliation would naturally follow, the current of mercantile intercourse would be checked, every center of population would be divided into hostile camps, and the good feelings which ought to prevail in every community would be seriously impaired. 'Live and let live' is a wise maxim, dictated alike by the law of trade and by Christian charity."

Finally His Eminence directs a little sermon to the workingmen, part of which follows:

"Take an active, personal interest in the business of your employer; be as much concerned about its prosperity as if it were your own. And are not your employers' affairs in a measure yours? For your wages come from the profits of the concern, and the more you contribute to its success the better he can afford to compensate you for your services. He will be impelled by an enlightened self-interest as well as by a sense of justice to requite you for your services with a generous hand."

Pressmen Violate Agreement.

The printing pressmen of New York propose to violate all agreements and demand an eight-hour day.

The Typothetae, both national and local, made an agreement with the officials of the International Printing Pressmen's Union some time ago by which the eight-hour work day was to go into effect not sooner than January 1, 1909, but the pressmen have repudiated this agreement and want the eight-hour work day November 1, next. The New York Typothetae, it is believed, will stand by the agreement and will not grant the eight-hour work day sooner. This will mean a strike of the pressmen against the Typothetae.

Open Shops Increasing.

The National Association of Master Sheet Metal Workers, which has been conducting an active campaign for the open shop, has been successful to a marked degree since the organization of the inovement in Philadelphia in 1905.

The association now reports that at present the open shop is being maintained in Baltimore, Syracuse, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Boston, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Louisville and Ft. Wayne. Nearly all of New England is wide open, and also a large part of the South. There is practically no trouble with labor in any of these cities and both employers and employés are satisfied with existing conditions.

Antwerp Strike a Failure.

For several months the dockers at Antwerp have been on strike to the serious disarrangement of the steamships. The United International Shipowners, however, have continued to resist the demands of the strikers, and the latter have finally decided to resume work, making an unconditional surrender.

It has been a piteous struggle led by ignorant, selfish and ambitious agitators, who are responsible for the hunger and privation of thousands of persons for weeks. The shipping federation has won every point and given a lesson in economics to the shipping world at large.

Take Care of Time.

The young man who takes care of his mentality and physique by dividing his evenings between recreation and study is able to serve his firm in the highest capacity. When the chance offers, he knows how to go into business for himself, and there is no reason why he should not be successful even if he has to start without capital. He possesses what other people need, and what they will have to pay for. With so many men uneducated in the higher branches of their business, the man who knows has an absolute advantage.—[The Open Shop.

The Educated Mechanic.

Education is easy to get nowadays. It is cheaper than ever it was. In every trade today, with so much development, more knowledge is required in every branch, says the Open Shop. Manufacturers are turning out machinery and implements of all kinds, that are far more complicated and much superior to those of the past. So it becomes necessary to write more specifications, to have more drawings, and put fuller details into writing than formerly. It is this which makes the necessity for higher education.

The first-class mechanic who has turned out a good piece of work should be able to place his production on record, technically and clerically. Indeed, until he can do this he can hardly be called a good mechanic. It is for this reason, I believe, that so many of our successful men have given liberally for eductaional purposes. They know what is required. Young men with technical ability and educational advantages which have ben outlined are very few, even in this progressive country, and the big employers are constantly on the lookout for them. Education will not only bring a man higher in his daily occupation, but it will give him much better standing socially. Therefore, the young mechanic should overlook no opportunity which will enable him to equip himself for the responsible positions in his business.

Suppose a mechanic, skilled enough at his business but without any particular schooling, should stumble on an idea that was worth patenting. He would be unable to go through the necessary routine, to secure the benefits which ought to accrue from his brightness. With an education he would not only know how to go about this, but might develop the original idea into something that would not only make him wealthy, but bring him fame as well as fortune.

Learn to work and learn to think. Train your mind just as an athlete gets his body into perfect condition.

The Workingman's Interest.

It is important to every young man that he learn to love his country and to have its welfare at heart. His interest is the country's. It is a mistake for the workman to howl against capital, because it is always necessary and the work it does is entitled to its interest. Capital should never be discouraged from investing in business. At the same time, the man who does the really hard work, who uses his muscles and the skill of his fingers, the energy of his body and the keenness of his brain, who keeps at it from morning till evening, is justly entitled to a fair compensation, such as will enable him to live comfortably, to raise his family as he would wish, to educate his children and to have a dollar or two left for a "rainy day."

The motto should be "Live and let live." Labor and capital should learn to understand each other better. They need each other and our country needs both.—[The Open Shop.

William Piersol of Chehalis, Wash., was shot twelve years ago while on a hunting expedition, the bullet entering at the forehead and lodging against the skull at the rear of the brain. He has recently submitted to an operation for the removal of the lead pellet, and expects to be relieved from the occasional epileptic fits from which he has suffered.

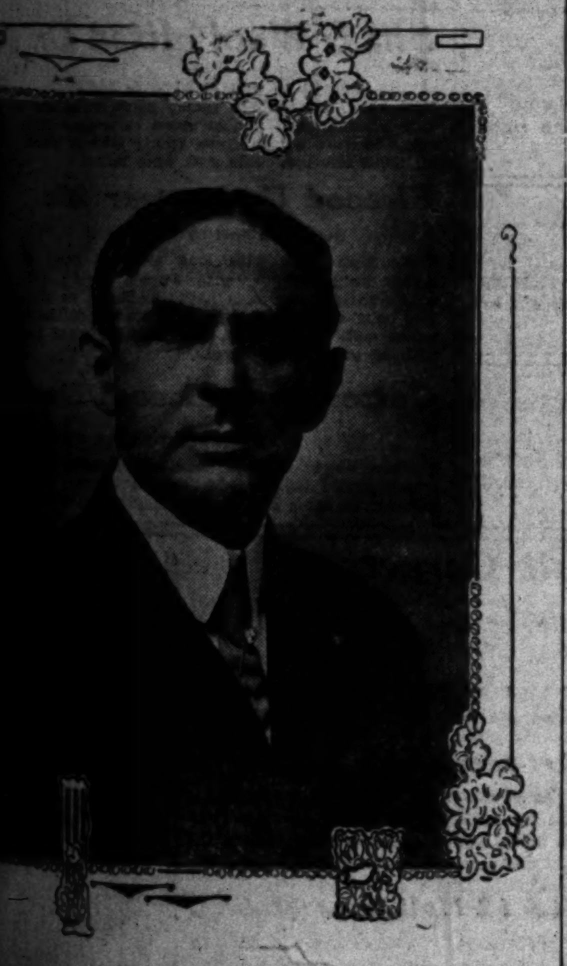
Perhaps better known, but little enough remembered, is President Roosevelt of the New York Police Commission, the man who set a standard of honesty which has not since been lowered without disastrous results to those responsible for it.



James Morgan,
[illegible] of "Theodore Roosevelt, the Boy and the Man."

These are the things which James Morgan tells in his book. It does not pretend to be an analysis of character, It does not advocate or criticize policies. The author has accomplished what he outlines in his foreword—"a simple, straightforward, yet complete biography of the most interesting personality of our day."

Wisely, indeed, Mr. Morgan has devoted a full half of his book to the early life of President Roosevelt. He tells there the marvelous heritage of blood to which the President is heir—on one side he comes from a long-established Knickerbocker family; on the other there is the first Governor of the State of Georgia; a major of the Mexican War, and two uncles who wore the Confederate gray, one of whom fired the last gun from the sinking "Alabama."

His early life, his college career, his political career, and his life as a ranchman of the West, Mr. Morgan has told clearly, dispassionately and fully. His life as President, more familiar to the public, is told as well, but more rapidly.

This is a book which every one who feels an interest in the approaching political situation would do well to read. It is fair, neither praising extravagantly nor attacking unjustly. Especially should it be read by young men, for it presents clearly the life of action of a man who still has the enthusiasm of a boy, a man whose energy and faith have impressed on the world the spirit of young America.

For the Business Man.

CORPORATION LAWS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA. Compiled by C. F. Curry, Secretary of State. W. W. Shannon, Superintendent of State Printing, Sacramento.

This, the fourth edition of this work, brought up to date by further citations. It includes matter as late as the one hundred and forty-eighth California Report, and California Appellate Reports 1 and 2.

The plan of the work has not been greatly changed. First are given those provisions of the Constitution which relate to corporations, and under each section are printed references to important decisions made under the section. The second portion of the book consists of extracts from the Civil Code—first those general provisions applicable to all corporations, and then those pertaining to different classes of corporations. Notes and decisions are appended. Sections from the Code of Civil Procedure are included in this division.

Next comes the Penal Code, from which it has been necessary to make but few citations. The extracts from the Political Code finishes this part of the work.

The remainder of the book consists of the various acts that have been passed relating to corporations, the fee bill of the Secretary of State and of County Clerks, the statutes enacted prior to the establishment of the Civil Code, and thirty pages of forms that may be used by a corporation.

An excellent index adds to the value of the compilation.

The New Language.

THE AMERICAN ESPERANTO BOOK. By Arthur Baker. Charles H. Kerr & Co., Chicago.

The aim of this book is to provide, in one volume, the means of acquiring a good working knowledge of Esperanto. It has been written with especial reference to the needs of American students, as the title indicates. It has been based on the "Ekzercaro" of Dr. Zamenhof, the inventor of Esperanto, and all the exercises have been taken from that authority. Other sources have been used for the grammar, and the vocabulary at the back has been summarized from three Esperanto dictionaries of standing.

In giving the grammatical rules, the first paragraph in each case is in English, and the next is the same statement in Esperanto. Thus the student is given examples of real Esperanto, which are much more valuable than the made-to-order sentences of the exercises.

The book does not claim to be a full course in the language, but it is a clear exposition of the method and grammar, with a good working vocabulary added.

Source and Division of Sovereignty.

POWERS OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE, CONGRESS, PRESIDENT AND COURTS. By Masuji Miyakawa. The Wilkens-Sheiry Company, Washington.

Masuji Miyakawa is a lecturer of the Law School of the University of Indiana, and the first Japanese attorney ever admitted to the American bar. This treatise has therefore, in addition to its purely scholastic qualities, the additional merit of an outside view of our institutions.

The scope of the work is best set forth in the author's preface. He says: "Theimpression has largely obtained among students of government and others in the Old World that because of its newness the American system could present little of interest or value to the investigator; it has been believed also by many that the American system was inimical to Old World systems. The fact that hitherto no convenient manual of instruction was to be had may have been largely responsible for such misconceptions, and if this work shall be the means of removing such impressions it will have accomplished its purpose.

"In preparing it, it has been the endeavor of the author to set forth the clauses of the Constitution upon which each of the four powers rests, as well as the construction that has been given them by the authoritative exposition of the Courts, or well established practice of the government of the United States."

It is the first section, that treating of the people of the United States and their power, that the author is most interesting and instructive. The prominent term, "We, the people of the United States," from the American standpoint means something entirely different from the same title used in European or Asiatic countries. Dr. Miyakawa explains this, and compares the power of the people in this country with the source of power in England, on the Atlantic side, and in Japan, on the Pacific side.

The remaining three sections are more in the form of a text book. The sections of the Constitution relegating power to the three divisions of government are cited and then explained in the light of practice and court decisions.

Concerning the President, the author says of the two term tradition, "But, as to the investiture of renewal, there is a time honored precedent, philosophised to it the unwritten understanding of the Presidential Constitution"—the only place in which the author allows the English language to get away from him. A little later, speaking of the eligibility of women to that high office, he says: "There are some among the American women who are advancing from a grade of development where they were only capable of loving and serving their own immediate relations, to a grade where they really care about their city, their State, and their country."

Dr. Miyakawa has written a book which is a convenient text-book, and a little more besides.

Compressed History.

MISSIONARY GROWTH OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. By H. K. Carroll. Jennings & Graham, Cincinnati. (Price 25 cents.)

The Missionary Society of the Methodist church was divided at the beginning of the year, and the cause of foreign missions entrusted to a special board, the home mission interests also being given a separate administration. The facts of missionary growth of the Methodist church up to the time of this change are compressed in this book to the briefest possible form. Nearly a century of effort and expansion are recorded. The main facts alone are given, but the volume contains all that is necessary for a general knowledge of the subject. An appendix and an index add to the value of the book.

A Nature Reader.

THE TRAIL TO THE WOODS. By Clarence Hawkes. American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati and Chicago. (Price 40 cents.)

This little volume is intended to give children a knowledge and an appreciation of life in the woods. A series of sktetches are offered, taking up the fox, moose, deer, wildcat, eagle, osprey, woodcock, trout, and the pasture lands in August. The stories are told in an interesting way. Illustrations, both from photographs and drawings, add to the book.

A Book of Sentiment and Humor.

THE LOVES OF PELLEAS and ETARRE. By Zona Gale. The Macmillan Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

To have created two characters entirely new to fiction is no mean achievement; and this is what Zona Gale seems to have done in "The Loves of Pelleas and Etarre." The most experienced novel reader is not likely to recall any figures in the whole realm of literature quite like the aged lovers of this story. It was a rather daring experiment to write a love story about a hero and heroine of seventy; but Miss Gale's attempt is justified by its entire success.

The story, although it has plenty of incident, is of the simplest as regards plot. Pelleas and Etarre, who have been married for half a century, are not only still ardently in love with each other, but they are also incorrigible matchmakers. Without children of their own, they adopt all the children of their friends, and make it their self-appointed task to smooth the rough edge of true love for every one they know. The book is merely the history of their successive adventures, encountered in the pursuit of this amiable occupation.

Now it is Pelleas who discovers in the raw clerk at the drug store the lover sighing for his mistress, and by the most conscienceless scheming brings the couple to the point of taking the most momentous step that insures their happiness. Now it is Etarre who shamelessly encourages a young fellow to defy his parents and marry the girl of his choice regardless of worldly consideration.

Of course, both Pelleas and Etarre are painfully conscious of their wickedness in challenging all the maxims of the prudent, and there is not little humor in the picture Miss Gale has drawn of these guileless old people furtively rejoicing in their desperate plots.

But the final touch of humor is in the character of their servant Nichola, a sour, crabbed, matter-of-fact, unromantic old Italian woman, who, under a pretense of serving them has terrorized them for years, and who, in the end turns out to be the most hopelessly romantic and soft-hearted creature imaginable. Nichola is constantly venting her scorn of the delightful benevolences indulged in by her master and mistress, and as constantly furthering them by every means in her power as soon as their backs are turned.

This is indeed the spirit of the whole book-half whimsically humorous, half sentimentally romantic, and wholly delightful in its own kind. It is full of happy touches.

Of Literature and the Drama.

INQUIRIES AND OPINIONS. By Brander Matthews. Charles Scribner's Sons. (Price $1.25.)

This, the largest book of essays and criticisms from the incisive and busy pen of Mr. Mathews, is a gathering together of articles contributed to the current magazines and of addresses delivered on divers important occasions. They deal with matters of interest to the literary man and to the lover of the stage.

The opening essay, "Literature in the New Century," is a paper that was read on September 24, 1904, in the section of belle-lettres of the International Congress of the Arts and Sciences, held at St. Louis. The second essay discusses "The Supreme Leaders," in literature, in art, in war, and the characteristics that made them supreme.

Other interesting essays and criticisms are: "An Apology for Technic," "Old Friends With New Faces," "Invention and Imagination," "Poe and the Detective Story," "Mark Twain," "A Note on Maupassant," "The Modern Novel and the Modern Play," "The Literary Merit of Our Latter-Day Drama," "Ibsen, the Playwright," and "The Art of the Stage Manager." All are written in Mr. Matthews's clear, unhampered style, and with his large and catholic sympathy, marred by only occasional touches of pedantry. He uses the "reformed" spelling, but after a few sudden and puzzling halts, we soon fall into measured step with him again. Mr. Matthews's dissertations on the stage and the drama are very helpful to one who seeks to understand dramaturgic needs and conditions, for he has studied them thoroughly and knows his subject.

In "Old Friends with New Faces," the author amuses himself and his readers by wondering how different writers would have told the story of "Romeo and Juliet," had the plot been given to them.

"How would this tale have been told in the eighteenth century by the author of 'Robinson Crusoe?' by the author of 'Clarissa Harlowe?' by the author of 'Tom Jones?' by the author of Tristram Shandy?' How would it have fared in the nineteenth century if Dickens had been attracted to it, or Thackeray? How would it be presented now in the twentieth century if it should be chosen again by Mr. Howells or by Mr. James? We need not ask what Mark Twain would do with it, because he has shown us in the Shepardson-Grangerford episode of 'Huckleberry Finn' that he could bring out its inherent romance, even though he intrusted the telling to the humorous realist who was the son of the town drunkard. Nor have we to inquire how it would have presented itself to Erckmann-Chatrian, because the Alsatian collaborators made it their own in the somber pages of the 'Rantzau.'"

PEOPLE AND THINGS OF LITERARY FAME.

Miss Elizabeth Luther Cary has prepared a book on Honoré Daumier, which will be published next month. It will be made up of a collection of the social and political caricatures of that eminent caricaturist, together with a careful essay on Daumier's art.

The chapter on Japan in Charles E. Russell's new book, "The Uprising of the Many," has been secured by the Japanese government, translated into Japanese, distributed in the public schools, and published throughout the country.

"The Wage Earner's Budgets," a study of standards and cost of living in New York City, will be brought out this week. The author is a Wellesley graduate who held the fellowship for two years, and the book is made up of the sociological investigations carried on by a social settlement on the lower West Side of the city.

One is reminded by the report of the six best sellers from Stratford, Canada, that there is no accounting for tastes. The list is headed by Charles Egbert Craddock's "The Windfall," a story of the Tennessee Mountains, although Ontario would be in some respects the antipodes, one would suppose, of the Great Smoky Mountains.

The announcement of a new Benson book is of special interest to readers of discriminating taste. "The Altar of Fire," which Arthur C. Benson will publish next month, is written in the form of a diary and tells the story of a young literary man who begins life with health and wealth, scores a great success as a novelist and marries happily. A series of misfortunes interrupt this propitious opening of his career. His spirit is broken, but peace of mind and spiritual consolation are found in ways which Mr. Benson's story relates.

"Whistler: Notes and Footnotes," and Other Memoranda, by A. E. G., contains essays on Whistler, while Leonardo da Vinci and Puvis de Chavennes as caricaturists, Bernard Boutet de Monvel, Beardsley, Everett Shinn, and Childe Hassam suggest the range of the other papers. Numerous plates of an unusual character enrich the volume, including two hitherto unpublished works by Whistler, one of which, a unique study of flowers, is reproduced in colors. John Lane Company announces this book for publication.

A book dealing with questions of communism, philanthropy and individualism in relation to historical philosophy from a thoroughly modern point of view will be published this month under the title "Janus in Modern Life" (Putnam,) by W. M. Flinders Petrie, D.C. L., F.R.S., F.B.A. Prof. Petrie is the foe of communism, socialism, and all forms of collectivism, and in analyzing the dangers to be feared in the latter he draws copiously from the historical experiences of the past.

Messrs. A. S. Barnes and Company, publishers of "Esperanto in Twenty Lessons," report that at the meeting of the third Esperanto Congress held at Cambridge, England, recently, the general opinion of the heads of the Congress was that the universal language has gained ground in the society circles. Princess Victoria of Wales is enthusiastic about it, and often converses with Charlotte Knollys in Esperanto when there are royal servants about. At Cambridge, England, the policemen have taken it up and have learned enough in three weeks to understand and speak the language.

Rosa Newmarch's work entitled "Poetry and Progress in Russia," covers a period extending from the first publication of Poushkin, in 1814, to the death of Nadson, in 1886, and consists of an introduction and six studies, as follows: Poushkin, the first and greatest of the Russian national poets; Lermontov, the meteoric poet of the Romantic School; Kositov, the Russian Burns; Nikitin, the singer of Russian rural life; Nekrassov, the poet of revolution; and Nadson, whose work is characteristic of the decadence of Russian poetry. These biographies are illustrated with full-page portraits.

"St. Elmo," after forty-one years of success as a novel, has just been dramatized and will probably be produced during the present season. The sale of this book during the last year has exceeded 150,000 copies. It has been translated into many languages and read in all parts of the world. Augusta Evans Wilson, the author, is a Southern woman, who was educated at home by her mother and began to write novels when she was 15. Her first novel was published in the '60s. Her latest book, "A Speckled Bird," came out in 1902. She lives in Mobile, and her favorite companions are her books, her recreations, her garden and hot-house.

E. V. Lucas, the London novelist, essayist and editor, has already shown himself a versatile and original literary worker; but he has never had a happier inspiration than that which is embodied in his forthcoming book, "The Gentlest Art." The art alluded to in the title is that of letter writing, and the volume is an anthology of the most entertaining letters in the language. Not only are the famous letter writers of England, such as Walpole, Chesterfield, Lamb, et. al., represented, but the great letter writers of fiction are also included. Mr. Lucas's aim has been to make the volume entertaining and amusing from beginning to end, and, considering the material on which he may draw, he would have little excuse if he failed.

The partial results of many years of historic study and research are contained in a volume entitled "British Colonial Policy, 1754-1765," by George Louis Beer, which the Macmillan Company publishes this week. In the study of these critical years Mr. Beer, who has been a lecturer on history in Columbia University, epitomizes the history of British colonial policy in the eighteenth century. The book is largely built upon material that has never before been investigated by students. The author has spent a great deal of time in the Public Record Office in London, and has unearthed a great number of official British state papers, many of which have been virtually undisturbed since they were filed away a century and a half ago in the course of departmental routine.

Hallie Erminie Rives, the author of "Satan Sanderson," is in private life Mrs. Post Wheeler, having become the wife of the poet and secretary of the American Embassy at Japan. Mrs. Wheeler, who is nothing if not picturesque, has become a great favorite with the picturesque-loving Japanese. Yone Noguchi, the poet, wrote recently: "There was a whisper abroad some months ago that Akenomyozin, or the Dawn God of Star, appeared early every morning enthroned in the shape of an American lady with a crown of yellow hair and with a rose in her breast, riding on a horse by the long moat of Tokogawa's feudal castle. We soon discovered that she was not a star lady, but a real American woman, and, more than that, a novelist, named Hallie Erminie Rives."

The popularity of Richard Hovey's "Stein Song," "Barney McGee," and the songs from Vagabondia written with Bliss Carman, as well as his splendid Dartmouth Hymn and Dartmouth Odes, have obscured the more important masques and dramas of his Arthurian series. Of the four finished books of this series, which he called "A poem in Dramas," "Taliesin," is the art poem, in the sense that Goethe's "Faust" and Dante's "Paradise" are such. Merlin is a masque of the evolution of metaphysics. The "Marriage of Guenevere" is a stage play, and presents a woman to be discussed in contrast with Tennyson's Guenevere. The "Birth of Galahad," another blank verse drama for the theater, contains one splendid act on motherhood. "The Holy Graal," with other fragments and completed parts of the later and unfinished plays of the series, edited by Mrs. Richard Hovey, and with a preface by Bliss Carman, published this month by Duffield & Co., contains the plan by which the underlying thought in this great work was to be wrought out.

MRS. BURNETT AN EDITOR.

And "Little Lord Fauntleroy" Becomes Part Owner and Manager of Magazine for Children.

Children the world over will rejoice to hear that the author of one of their favorite books—"Little Lord Fauntleroy"—is to edit a magazine for them. The announcement has just been made that Frances Hodgson Burnett has accepted the editorship of the Children's Magazine, and that her son, Vivian, who was the original of her famous "Fauntleroy," has become part owner and manager of the publication.

The Childrens' Magazine, which was founded by Katherine Newbold Birdsall, who is Mrs. Burnett's associate, is an illustrated monthly for young folks from three to thirteen, containing, in addition to stories, humorous verse, fairy tales, etc., departments dealing with nature, gardening, "making things," little pieces of music, a club of home makers, a Humane Society, picture stories for smallest folk, and other things for youngsters.

Mrs. Burnett will contribute to practically every number.

AMERICAN HUMOR POOR.

So Say English Papers, Accusing It of "Disassociation from Culture" and Buffoonery.

The English press has seized upon a Chicago professor's charge that Americans are losing their sense of humor in their pursuit of wealth and seems inclined to treat it as a true indictment. There is certainly an absence of all humor in their sad and cruel comments. Thus the Graphic says:

"It certainly would not be true to say that their best jokes are made by their richest men, but the silent characteristic of American humor is not its dissociation from dollars but rather its dissociation from culture.

"In England it is possible and not unusual for a man to be learned and yet to bubble over with fun. Matthew Arnold did so to such an extent that he was sometimes rebuked for flippancy. Andrew Lang furnishes a contemporary case in point.

"But in America it is otherwise. The humorists, amusing as one finds them, are mostly ignorant buffoons like Bill Nye and Josh Billings. The men who have got hold of culture make it hum with the unimpeachable solemnity of a top. There have been of course exceptions to the rule. The case of Oliver Wendell Holmes supplies one such exception, but the rule is as stated. There has never been an American Matthew Arnold; there is not now an American Andrew Lang. Instead we have the reviewers of the Nation and Prof. William James of Harvard."

And Mark Twain is not even mentioned.

Four Hundred Versions.

It will astonish many people to know that the Bible is now translated and read in 400 different tongues. W. G. Fitz-Gerald relates in the October Harper's Magazine how this vast undertaking has been accomplished. It has cost many lives and millions of dollars. In addition to the first cost of translating there is the expense of revising. The last revise of the Madagascar Bible cost $15,000, and $150,000 was paid to Dr. William Carey and his staff for the Serampore Version of the Bible in Hindostani. There are 2000 linguists continually employed by the British and American societies which have this work in charge. Mr. Fitz-Gerald explains how the translating is done, and what difficulties have to be surmounted by the heroic men who devote their lives to this labor.

SORRY HE WROTE THE POEM.

Whitman's Opinion of "My Captain" Hardly Coincides With That of General Public.

"Walt Whitman," says Horace Traubel in Appleton's Magazine, "was both jolly and serious about a squib he saw in a newspaper, saying: 'If Walt Whitman had written a volume of My Captains, instead of filling a scrap basket with waste and calling it a book, the world would be better off today, and Walt Whitman would have some excuse for living.' W. commented in this way:

"'I'm honest when I say, "Damn My Captain and all the My Captains in my book!" This is not the first time I have been irritated into saying I'm almost sorry I ever wrote the poem. It has reasons for being—it is a ballad—it sings, sings, in a certain strain with a certain motive—but as for being the best, the very best—God help me! what can the worst be like? A whole volume of My Captains instead of a scrap basket! Well, that's funny, very funny; it don't leave me much room for escape.

"'I say that if I'd written a whole volume of My Captains I'd deserve to be spanked and sent to bed with the world's compliments—which would be generous treatment, considering [illegible] a lame duck book such a book would have been! Horace, that fellow deserves a medal: he's given me a mad dig between the ribs.'

"W. was very vehement, as well as very good-natured about the matter. I looked for more but he added nothing. Gave me a couple of sheets of manuscript containing original draft of 'My Captain.' 'I ought to have destroyed it, but your face always hovers around to rebuke me when I think of destruction, so I laid it aside for you. After our talk about the poem the other day, I feel nasty enough to do anything with it. But if you will promise not to bring the manuscript back I will promise to let you take it away.'"

Brander Mathews,
essayist and critic, author of "Inquiries and Opinions."

James Morgan,
author of "Theodore Roosevelt, the Boy and the Man."

These are the things which James Morgan tells in his book. It does not pretend to be an analysis of character. It does not advocate or criticize policies. The author has accomplished what he outlines in his foreword—"a simple, straightforward, yet complete biography of the most interesting personality of our day."

Wisely, indeed, Mr. Morgan has devoted a full half of his book to the early life of President Roosevelt. He tells there the marvelous heritage of blood to which the President is heir—on one side he comes from a long-established Knickerbocker family; on the other there is the first Governor of the State of Georgia; a major of the Mexican War, and two uncles who wore the Confederate gray, one of whom fired the last gun from the sinking "Alabama."

His early life, his college career, his political career, and his life as a ranchman of the West, Mr. Morgan has told clearly, dispassionately and fully. His life as President, more familiar to the public, is told as well, but more rapidly.

This is a book which every one who feels an interest in the approaching political situation would do well to read. It is fair, neither praising extravagantly nor attacking unjustly. Especially should it be read by young men, for it presents clearly the life of action of a man who still has the enthusiasm of a boy, a man whose energy and faith have impressed on the world the spirit of young America.

For the Business Man.

CORPORATION LAWS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA. Compiled by C. F. Curry, Secretary of State. W. W. Shannon, Superintendent of State Printing, Sacramento.

This, the fourth edition of this work, brought up to date by further citations. It includes matter as late as the one hundred and forty-eighth California Report, and California Appellate Reports 1 and 2.

The plan of the work has not been greatly changed. First are given those provisions of the Constitution which relate to corporations, and under each section are printed references to important decisions made under the section. The second portion of the book consists of extracts from the Civil Code—first those general provisions applicable to all corporations, and then those pertaining to different classes of corporations. Notes and decisions are appended. Sections from the Code of Civil Procedure are included in this division.

Next comes the Penal Code, from which it has been necessary to make but few citations. The extracts from the Political Code finishes this part of the work.

The remainder of the book consists of the various acts that have been passed relating to corporations, the fee bill of the Secretary of State and of County Clerks, the statutes enacted prior to the establishment of the Civil Code, and thirty pages of forms that may be used by a corporation.

An excellent index adds to the value of the compilation.

The New Language.

THE AMERICAN ESPERANTO BOOK. By Arthur Baker. Charles H. Kerr & Co., Chicago.

The aim of this book is to provide, in one volume, the means of acquiring a good working knowledge of Esperanto. It has been written with especial reference to the needs of American students, as the title indicates. It has been based on the "Ekzercaro" of Dr. Zamenhof, the inventor of Esperanto, and all the exercises have been taken from that authority. Other sources have been used for the grammar, and the vocabulary at the back has been summarized from three Esperanto dictionaries of standing.

In giving the grammatical rules, the first paragraph in each case is in English, and the next is the same statement in Esperanto. Thus the student is given examples of real Esperanto, which are much more valuable than the made-to-order sentences of the exercises.

The book does not claim to be a full course in the language, but it is a clear exposition of the method and grammar, with a good working vocabulary added.

Source and Division of Sovereignty.

POWERS OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE, CONGRESS, PRESIDENT AND COURTS. By Masuji Miyakawa. The Wilkens-Sheiry Company, Washington.

Masuji Miyakawa is a lecturer of the Law School of the University of Indiana, and the first Japanese attorney ever admitted to the American bar. This treatise has therefore, in addition to its purely scholastic qualities, the additional merit of an outside view of our institutions.

The scope of the work is best set forth in the author's preface. He says: "Theimpression has largely obtained among students of government and others in the Old World that because of its newness the American system could present little of interest or value to the investigator; it has been believed also by many that the American system was inimical to Old World systems. The fact that hitherto no convenient manual of instruction was to be had may have been largely responsible for such misconceptions, and if this work shall be the means of removing such impressions it will have accomplished its purpose.

"In preparing it, it has been the endeavor of the author to set forth the clauses of the Constitution upon which each of the four powers rests, as well as the construction that has been given them by the authoritative exposition of the Courts, or well established practice of the government of the United States."

It is the first section, that treating of the people of the United States and their power, that the author is most interesting and instructive. The prominent term, "We, the people of the United States," from the American standpoint means something entirely different from the same title used in European or Asiatic countries. Dr. Miyakawa explains this, and compares the power of the people in this country with the source of power in England, on the Atlantic side, and in Japan, on the Pacific side.

The remaining three sections are more in the form of a text book. The sections of the Constitution relegating power to the three divisions of government are cited and then explained in the light of practice and court decisions.

Concerning the President, the author says of the two term tradition, "But, as to the investiture of renewal, there is a time honored precedent, philosophised to it the unwritten understanding of the Presidential Constitution"—the only place in which the author allows the English language to get away from him. A little later, speaking of the eligibility of women to that high office, he says: "There are some among the American women who are advancing from a grade of development where they were only capable of loving and serving their own immediate relations, to a grade where they really care about their city, their State, and their country."

Dr. Miyakawa has written a book which is a convenient text-book, and a little more besides.

Compressed History.

MISSIONARY GROWTH OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. By H. K. Carroll. Jennings & Graham, Cincinnati. (Price 25 cents.)

The Missionary Society of the Methodist church was divided at the beginning of the year, and the cause of foreign missions entrusted to a special board, the home mission interests also being given a separate administration. The facts of missionary growth of the Methodist church up to the time of this change are compressed in this book to the briefest possible form. Nearly a century of effort and expansion are recorded. The main facts alone are given, but the volume contains all that is necessary for a general knowledge of the subject. An appendix and an index add to the value of the book.

A Nature Reader.

THE TRAIL TO THE WOODS. By Clarence Hawkes. American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati and Chicago. (Price 60 cents.)

This little volume is intended to give children a knowledge and an appreciation of life in the woods. A series of sktetches are offered, taking up the fox, moose, deer, wildcat, eagle, osprey, woodcock, trout, and the pasture lands in August. The stories are told in an interesting way. Illustrations, both from photographs and drawings, add to the book.

A Book of Sentiment and Humor.

THE LOVES OF PELLEAS and ETARRE. By Zona Gale. The Macmillan Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

To have created two characters entirely new to fiction is no mean achievement; and this is what Zona Gale seems to have done in "The Loves of Pelleas and Etarre." The most experienced novel reader is not likely to recall any figures in the whole realm of literature quite like the aged lovers of this story. It was a rather daring experiment to write a love story about a hero and heroine of seventy; but Miss Gale's attempt is justified by its entire success.

The story, although it has plenty of incident, is of the simplest as regards plot. Pelleas and Etarre, who have been married for half a century, are not only still ardently in love with each other, but they are also incorrigible matchmakers. Without children of their own, they adopt all the children of their friends, and make it their self-appointed task to smooth the rough edge of true love for every one they know. The book is merely the history of their successive adventures, encountered in the pursuit of this amiable occupation.

Now it is Pelleas who discovers in the raw clerk at the drug store the lover sighing for his mistress, and by the most conscienceless scheming brings the couple to the point of taking the most momentous step that insures their happiness. Now it is Etarre who shamelessly encourages a young fellow to defy his parents and marry the girl of his choice regardless of worldly consideration.

Of course, both Pelleas and Etarre are painfully conscious of their wickedness in challenging all the maxims of the prudent, and there is not little humor in the picture Miss Gale has drawn of these guileless old people furtively rejoicing in their desperate plots.

But the final touch of humor is in the character of their servant Nichola, a sour, crabbed, matter-of-fact, unromantic old Italian woman, who, under a pretense of serving them has terrorized them for years, and who, in the end turns out to be the most hopelessly romantic and soft-hearted creature imaginable. Nichola is constantly venting her scorn of the delightful benevolences indulged in by her master and mistress, and as constantly furthering them by every means in her power as soon as their backs are turned.

This is indeed the spirit of the whole book-half whimsically humorous, half sentimentally romantic, and wholly delightful in its own kind. It is full of happy touches.

Of Literature and the Drama.

INQUIRIES AND OPINIONS. By Brander Matthews. Charles Scribner's Sons. (Price $1.25.)

This, the largest book of essays and criticisms from the incisive and busy pen of Mr. Mathews, is a gathering together of articles contributed to the current magazines and of addresses delivered on divers important occasions. They deal with matters of interest to the literary man and to the lover of the stage.

The opening essay, "Literature in the New Century," is a paper that was read on September 24, 1904, in the section of belle-lettres of the International Congress of the Arts and Sciences, held at St. Louis. The second essay discusses "The Supreme Leaders," in literature, in art, in war, and the characteristics that made them supreme.

Other interesting essays and criticisms are: "An Apology for Technic," "Old Friends With New Faces," "Invention and Imagination," "Poe and the Detective Story," "Mark Twain," "A Note on Maupassant," "The Modern Novel and the Modern Play," "The Literary Merit of Our Latter-Day Drama," "Ibsen, the Playwright," and "The Art of the Stage Manager." All are written in Mr. Matthews's clear, unhampered style, and with his large and catholic sympathy, marred by only occasional touches of pedantry. He uses the "reformed" spelling, but after a few sudden and puzzling halts, we soon fall into measured step with him again. Mr. Matthews's dissertations on the stage and the drama are very helpful to one who seeks to understand dramaturgic needs and conditions, for he has studied them thoroughly and knows his subject.

In "Old Friends with New Faces," the author amuses himself and his readers by wondering how different writers would have told the story of "Romeo and Juliet," had the plot been given to them.

"How would this tale have been told in the eighteenth century by the author of 'Robinson Crusoe?' by the author of 'Clarissa Harlowe?' by the author of 'Tom Jones?' by the author of 'Tristram Shandy?' How would it have fared in the nineteenth century if Dickens had been attracted to it, or Thackeray? How would it be presented now in the twentieth century if it should be chosen again by Mr. Howells or by Mr. James? We need not ask what Mark Twain would do with it, because he has shown us in the Shepardson-Grangerford episode of 'Huckleberry Finn' that he could bring out its inherent romance, even though he intrusted the telling to the humorous realist who was the son of the town drunkard. Nor have we to inquire how it would have presented itself to Erckmann-Chatrian, because the Alsatian collaborators made it their own in the somber pages of the 'Rantzau.'"

PEOPLE AND THINGS OF LITERARY FAME.

Miss Elizabeth Luther Cary has prepared a book on Honoré Daumier, which will be published next month. It will be made up of a collection of the social and political caricatures of that eminent caricaturist, together with a careful essay on Daumier's art.

The chapter on Japan in Charles E. Russell's new book, "The Uprising of the Many," has been secured by the Japanese government, translated into Japanese, distributed in the public schools, and published throughout the country.

"The Wage Earner's Budgets," a study of standards and cost of living in New York City, will be brought out this week. The author is a Wellesley graduate who held the fellowship for two years, and the book is made up of the sociological investigations carried on by a social settlement on the lower West Side of the city.

One is reminded by the report of the six best sellers from Stratford, Canada, that there is no accounting for tastes. The list is headed by Charles Egbert Craddock's "The Windfall," a story of the Tennessee Mountains, although Ontario would be in some respects the antipodes, one would suppose, of the Great Smoky Mountains.

The announcement of a new Benson book is of special interest to readers of discriminating taste. "The Altar of Fire," which Arthur C. Benson will publish next month, is written in the form of a diary and tells the story of a young literary man who begins life with health and wealth, scores a great success as a novelist and marries happily. A series of misfortunes interrupt this propitious opening of his career. His spirit is broken, but peace of mind and spiritual consolation are found in ways which Mr. Benson's story relates.

"Whistler: Notes and Footnotes," and Other Memoranda, by A. E. G., contains essays on Whistler, while Leonardo da Vinci and Puvis de Chavennes as caricaturists, Bernard Boutet de Monvel, Beardsley, Everett Shinn, and Childe Hassam suggest the range of the other papers. Numerous plates of an unusual character enrich the volume, including two hitherto unpublished works by Whistler, one of which, a unique study of flowers, is reproduced in colors. John Lane Company announces this book for publication.

A book dealing with questions of communism, philanthropy and individualism in relation to historical philosophy from a thoroughly modern point of view will be published this month under the title "Janus in Modern Life" (Putnam,) by W. M. Flinders Petrie, D.C.L., F.R.S., F.B.A. Prof. Petrie is the foe of communism, socialism, and all forms of collectivism, and in analyzing the dangers to be feared in the latter he draws copiously from the historical experiences of the past.

Messrs. A. S. Barnes and Company, publishers of "Esperanto in Twenty Lessons," report that at the meeting of the third Esperanto Congress held at Cambridge, England, recently, the general opinion of the heads of the Congress was that the universal language has gained ground in the society circles. Princess Victoria of Wales is enthusiastic about it, and often converses with Charlotte Knollys in Esperanto when there are royal servants about. At Cambridge, England, the policemen have taken it up and have learned enough in three weeks to understand and speak the language.

Rosa Newmarch's work entitled "Poetry and Progress in Russia," covers a period extending from the first publication of Poushkin, in 1814, to the death of Nadson, in 1886, and consists of an introduction and six studies, as follows: Poushkin, the first and greatest of the Russian national poets; Lermontov, the meteoric poet of the Romantic School; Kositov, the Russian Burns; Nikitin, the singer of Russian rural life; Nekrassov, the poet of revolution; and Nadson, whose work is characteristic of the decadence of Russian poetry. These biographies are illustrated with full-page portraits.

"St. Elmo," after forty-one years of success as a novel, has just been dramatized and will probably be produced during the present season. The sale of this book during the last year has exceeded 150,000 copies. It has been translated into many languages and read in all parts of the world. Augusta Evans Wilson, the author, is a Southern woman, who was educated at home by her mother and began to write novels when she was 15. Her first novel was published in the '60s. Her latest book, "A Speckled Bird," came out in 1902. She lives in Mobile, and her favorite companions are her books, her recreations, her garden and hot-house.

E. V. Lucas, the London novelist, essayist and editor, has already shown himself a versatile and original literary worker; but he has never had a happier inspiration than that which is embodied in his forthcoming book, "The Gentlest Art." The art alluded to in the title is that of letter writing, and the volume is an anthology of the most entertaining letters in the language. Not only are the famous letter writers of England, such as Walpole, Chesterfield, Lamb, et. al., represented, but the great letter writers of fiction are also included. Mr. Lucas's aim has been to make the volume entertaining and amusing from beginning to end, and, considering the material on which he may draw, he would have little excuse if he failed.

The partial results of many years of historic study and research are contained in a volume entitled "British Colonial Policy, 1754-1765," by George Louis Beer, which the Macmillan Company publishes this week. In the study of these critical years Mr. Beer, who has been a lecturer on history in Columbia University, epitomizes the history of British colonial policy in the eighteenth century. The book is largely built upon material that has never before been investigated by students. The author has spent a great deal of time in the Public Record Office in London, and has unearthed a great number of official British state papers, many of which have been virtually undisturbed since they were filed away a century and a half ago in the course of departmental routine.

Hallie Erminie Rives, the author of "Satan Sanderson," is in private life Mrs. Post Wheeler, having become the wife of the poet and secretary of the American Embassy at Japan. Mrs. Wheeler, who is nothing if not picturesque, has become a great favorite with the picturesque-loving Japanese. Yone Noguchi, the poet, wrote recently: "There was a whisper abroad some months ago that Akenomyozin, or the Dawn God of Star, appeared early evern morning enthroned in the shape of an American lady with a crown of yellow hair and with a rose in her breast, riding on a horse by the long moat of Tokogawa's feudal castle. We soon discovered that she was not a star lady, but a real American woman, and, more than that, a novelist, named Hallie Erminie Rives."

The popularity of Richard Hovey's "Stein Song," "Barney McGee," and the songs from Vagabondia written with Bliss Carman, as well as his splendid Dartmouth Hymn and Dartmouth Odes, have obscured the more important masques and dramas of his Arthurian series. Of the four finished books of this series, which he called "A poem in Dramas," "Taliesin," is the art poem, in the sense that Goethe's "Faust" and Dante's "Paradise" are such. Merlin is a masque of the evolution of metaphysics. The "Marriage of Guenevere" is a stage play, and presents a woman to be discussed in contrast with Tennyson's Guenevere. The "Birth of Galahad," another blank verse drama for the theater, contains one splendid act on motherhood. "The Holy Graal," with other fragments and completed parts of the later and unfinished plays of the series, edited by Mrs. Richard Hovey, and with a preface by Bliss Carman, published this month by Duffield & Co., contains the plan by which the underlying thought in this great work was to be wrought out.

MRS. BURNETT AN EDITOR.

And "Little Lord Fauntleroy" Becomes Part Owner and Manager of Magazine for Children.

Children the world over will rejoice to hear that the author of one of their favorite books—"Little Lord Fauntleroy"—is to edit a magazine for them. The announcement has just been made that Frances Hodgson Burnett has accepted the editorship of the Children's Magazine, and that her son, Vivian, who was the original of her famous "Fauntleroy," has become part owner and manager of the publication.

The Childrens' Magazine, which was founded by Katherine Newbold Birdsall, who is Mrs. Burnett's associate, is an illustrated monthly for young folks from three to thirteen, containing, in addition to stories, humorous verse, fairy tales, etc., departments dealing with nature, gardening, "making things," little pieces of music, a club of home makers, a Humane Society, picture stories for smallest folk, and other things for youngsters.

Mrs. Burnett will contribute to practically every number.

AMERICAN HUMOR POOR.

So Say English Papers, Accusing It of "Disassociation from Culture" and Buffoonery.

The English press has seized upon a Chicago professor's charge that Americans are losing their sense of humor in their pursuit of wealth and seems inclined to treat it as a true indictment. There is certainly an absence of all humor in their sad and cruel comments. Thus the Graphic says:

"It certainly would not be true to say that their best jokes are made by their richest men, but the silent characteristic of American humor is not its dissociation from dollars but rather its dissociation from culture.

"In England it is possible and not unusual for a man to be learned and yet to bubble over with fun. Matthew Arnold did so to such an extent that he was sometimes rebuked for flippancy. Andrew Lang furnishes a contemporary case in point.

"But in America it is otherwise. The humorists, amusing as one finds them, are mostly ignorant buffoons like Bill Nye and Josh Billings. The men who have got hold of culture make it hum with the unimpeachable solemnity of a top. There have been of course exceptions to the rule. The case of Oliver Wendell Holmes supplies one such exception, but the rule is as stated. There has never been an American Matthew Arnold; there is not now an American Andrew Lang. Instead we have the reviewers of the Nation and Prof. William James of Harvard."

And Mark Twain is not even mentioned.

Four Hundred Versions.

It will astonish many people to know that the Bible is now translated and read in 400 different tongues. W. G. Fitz-Gerald relates in the October Harper's Magazine how this vast undertaking has been accomplished. It has cost many lives and millions of dollars. In addition to the first cost of translating there is the expense of revising. The last revise of the Madagascar Bible cost $15,000, and $150,000 was paid to Dr. William Carey and his staff for the Serampore Version of the Bible in Hindostani. There are 2000 linguists continually employed by the British and American societies which have this work in charge. Mr. Fitz-Gerald explains how the translating is done, and what difficulties have to be surmounted by the heroic men who devote their lives to this labor.

SORRY HE WROTE THE POEM.

Whitman's Opinion of "My Captain" Hardly Coincides With That of General Public.

"Walt Whitman," says Horace Traubel in Appleton's Magazine, "was both jolly and serious about a squib he saw in a newspaper, saying: 'If Walt Whitman had written a volume of My Captains, instead of filling a scrap basket with waste and calling it a book, the world would be better off today, and Walt Whitman would have some excuse for living.' W. commented in this way:

"'I'm honest when I say, "Damn My Captain and all the My Captains in my book!" This is not the first time I have been irritated into saying I'm almost sorry I ever wrote the poem. It has reasons for being—it is a ballad—it sings, sings, in a certain strain with a certain motive—but as for being the best, the very best—God help me! what can the worst be like? A whole volume of My Captains instead of a scrap basket! Well, that's funny, very funny; it don't leave me much room for escape.

"'I say that if I'd written a whole volume of My Captains I'd deserve to be spanked and sent to bed with the world's compliments—which would be generous treatment, considering what a lame duck book such a book would have been! Horace, that fellow deserves a medal: he's given me a mad dig between the ribs.'

"W. was very vehement, as well as very good-natured about the matter. I looked for more but he added nothing. Gave me a couple of sheets of manuscript containing original draft of 'My Captain.' 'I ought to have destroyed it, but your face always hovers around to rebuke me when I think of destruction, so I laid it aside for you. After our talk about the poem the other day, I feel nasty enough to do anything with it. But if you will promise not to bring the manuscript back I will promise to let you take it away.'"

WILL MAKE MODERN MINING MACHINERY FOR ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD IN LOS ANGELES.

F. W. Braun has purchased about an acre of land in the industrial section of Los Angeles. This property has a frontage on Third street of ninety feet, and a track frontage of 280 feet on the Santa Fé Railroad. An alley extends across its entire width at the rear, and there is also a side street frontage of approximately 280 feet. The property is the southwest corner of East Third street and the Santa Fé tracks.

Mr. Braun plans to erect a plant for his extensive business in mining machinery. The illustration on this page shows, in a general way, the plan to be followed. The buildings are expected to be ready within twelve months, and will be of the highest class reinforced concrete construction.

A four-story and basement building, 90x100 feet, will occupy the Third-street frontage. The basement will be used to store commodities requiring a uniform temperature and moisture. The main floor will be about four feet above the grade, giving light and ventilation for the cellar. This floor will be finished as a counting-house and purchasing and sales departments. The second floor will be the assembling room. The third and fourth floors will be used for the manufacture of instruments of precision for physical laboratories, chemical and scientific apparatus, and for a scientific glass-blowing department.

Adjoining the main building in the rear will be a two-story warehouse, 158x116 feet, with a track frontage of about 150 feet. This building will be equipped on the east side with a loading platform, on the west side with a similar one for shipment of goods by wagon.

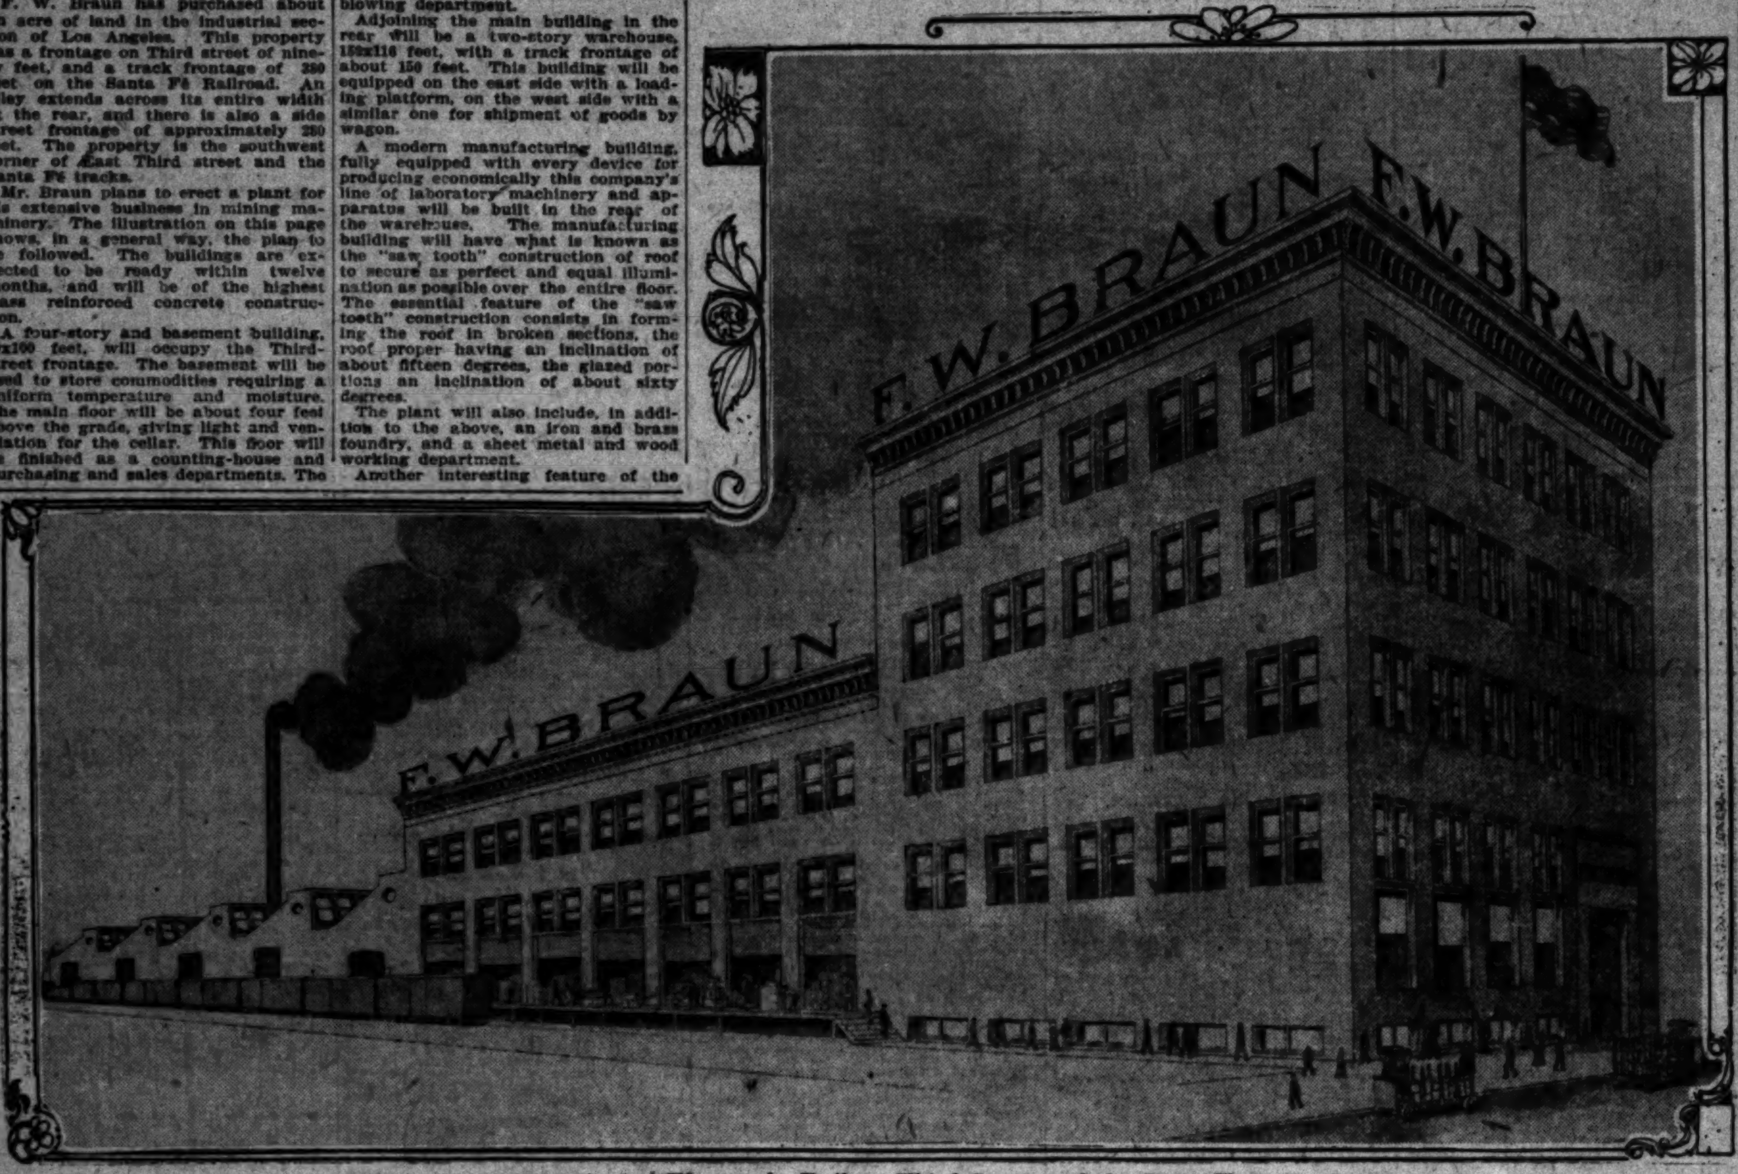
A modern manufacturing building, fully equipped with every device for producing economically this company's line of laboratory machinery and apparatus will be built in the rear of the warehouse. The manufacturing building will have what is known as the "saw tooth" construction of roof to secure as perfect and equal illumination as possible over the entire floor. The essential feature of the "saw tooth" construction consists in forming the roof in broken sections, the roof proper having an inclination of about fifteen degrees, the glazed portions an inclination of about sixty degrees.

The plant will also include, in addition to the above, an iron and brass foundry, and a sheet metal and wood working department.

Another interesting feature of the plant will be the installation of a series of fireproof chambers, with steel storage tanks, for commercial liquid acids and industrial alcohols and ammonia, making it feasible to bring these commodities from the place of production in tank cars, and transfer on arrival by pressure pipe service, directly into the storage tanks, reducing the cost of handling to a minimum.

Mr. Braun is the owner of valuable patent rights, covering useful and popular appliances used in chemical and metallurgical laboratory work, and he has developed a world-wide demand for his manufactures.

The building, land and the cost of equipment will, when completed, represent an investment of fully $1,000,000, and the plant will then be one of the most up-to-date of any in the world. There is a branch of the same concern in San Francisco.



Manufacturing Plant to be Built at Third Street and the Santa Fe.

was set forth. It is amazing to note the number of dwellings of moderate size, cottages of a single story and bungalows of a story and a half in the list of permits for buildings issued during the nine months. Out of about 7000 permits perhaps 4000 of them were for dwellings of these two classes. These buildings under these permits were not all for occupancy by their owners. There are more dwellings of these classes built for rental purposes than of any other class. Few property owners build houses of any pretentions with the intention of renting them. The investment is not a paying one. A dwelling with the grounds costing from $1500 to $5000 for the real property and $3000 to $5000 for the building, making $4500 to a possible $8000 or $10,000 in the investment, will not rent far above from $40 to $60 or $65 a month. For the cheapest dwelling of this kind the interest earned, after paying insurance, taxes, discounting vacancies, making repairs and again discounting the deterioration of the building, is not a tempting investment. For the costly dwelling the highest sum would not leave anything like the money that the same sum would earn on a note amply secured by mortgage, where there is no chance taken, no trouble incurred excepting to collect your interest from once to four times a year. On the contrary, the cottage costing from $1250 to $2000 on a lot costing from $500 to $1000, will bring in from $30 to $35 a month, making a very tempting form of investment to the person of means. All the same, a great many of these moderate cost dwellings were erected for the homes of those having been built. It is one of the most encouraging features of our civic life that so many of our people, wage earners and those living on salary, own their own homes. There is a large and increasing ambition on the part of our people of these classes to secure a lot and in due time erect a modest home.

Money Influence.

Now it is the conviction of the Fact and Comment man that all this is a wise business procedure on the part of the investors. It does not seem likely that real property will be cheaper in the city of Los Angeles or any of the high-class suburbs where all facilities for conducting housekeeping on modern lines are to be had, will be cheaper. The persons in closest touch with business conditions as they are today with the broadest view over the country are all agreed that even should very considerable business stagnation take place east of the Valley of the Mississippi River and of the Great Lakes, the effect west of the river would be very slight, steadily decreasing in its strength as it comes westward. There is no influence likely to arise, so far as we can see, which will cause any very great deression in our business or industries in the Southwest. Should there take place a great slackening in industrial activity in the busiest communities in the East, the result would be less demand for money and a consequent decline in rates of interest. The country is very intimately bound together at the present time and confidence in conditions in the West is so great that the interest rate on money is no higher in Los Angeles than in Chicago or New York for ordinary purposes. If the rate of interest on money falls because of slackened pace in industries in the country east of Chicago, there will come a similar decline in Southern California and with a steady demand for real estate and no pressure to sell, the result of cheaper money would be a higher real estate market.

—o—

The Inflow of Population.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company has announced that the cheap settlers' rates ruling for some time past during the months of September brought 16,000 people over that line into the State of California. The Santa Fé hardly brought less, and surely the Salt Lake route did not fail to half that number. Here then we have at least 40,000 people coming into the State during that month. It is a well-known fact that of such tourists much the larger portion of them drift to Southern California, more than half of them arriving here first, and during the last twenty years we have always got the lion's share of this new population. With such an inflow of new blood with the most of which is brought with a considerable amount of capital, the home building is sure to go on, accompanied by a necessary demand for building lots. From whatever point of view one surveys the subject, the conclusion of the Fact and Comment man seems borne out that property here is not likely to be cheaper for either central business parcels of realty or residence lots in districts of the city where car lines reach and gas, electricity and sewer lines are already established. The same conditions will maintain similar results in the choicest suburban property around the city.

Pomona Men Pay Ninety Thousand Dollars for Hundred and Fifty-two Acres.

Ninety thousand dollars cash is the reported purchase price of a 152-acre orange and hay ranch at La Verne, sold last week to Crookshank & Somers of Pomona, by M. L. Sparks. The place is regarded as one of the choicest of the section. There are three orange groves, aggregating fifty acres, with the remainder occupied by buildings and hay land. The orange trees range in age from six to seventeen years, and are in the prime of growth. It is said the total value of the orange crop from these fifty acres was $51,000 for the season just closed.

BUY TOWN OF WINCHESTER.

Nevada Capitalists Acquire Title to Old Boom Town on San Jacinto Branch of Santa Fe Railroad.

Arthur G. Munn reports the sale of the entire town of Winchester, located on the San Jacinto branch of the Santa Fé Railway, in Riverside county. The property sold consists of 260 town lots, 50x150 feet, lying south of the railroad depot at Winchester; several five-acre blocks, and an eighty-acre piece. A two-story brick block, 40x70 feet, and a livery stable are included in the deal. The price was $30,000.

Winchester, in the old boom days, was one of the thriving towns of Southern California, but, like all such towns, has been at a standstill since. The many eucalyptus trees, planted in the early days, have made a marvelous growth, and today the streets of the town are lined with these tall, stately shade trees.

With the Winchester property was included a first mortgage on high-class property in Los Angeles to the amount of $60,000. The above property was exchanged by Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Hagins of Riverside, for clear business property in Goldfield, Nev., paying a monthly rental of $575 per month on five-year leases, and bonds, totaling in all $90,000, which was given in exchange for Winchester and the first mortgage, by the Nevada Realty Company of Los Angeles. Mr. Munn acted as agent for both parties in the deal.

NORTHEASTERN ACTIVITIES.

Hill Section Adjoining Hazard Reservoir Scene of Wide Development. Oiling Many Streets.

The sightly hills lying between Brooklyn Heights and East Los Angeles are a scene of activity. For several months large grading camps have been stationed there, and streets have been cut through the heights surrounding the old Hazard reservoir. The building of the Pasadena "cut-off" and the electric line to Covina has given direct access to this hitherto somewhat isolated section.

The Pacific Electric Company has awarded to Perry Howard the contract for constructing the immense earth fills or approaches leading to the bridge over the railways at Charlotte street. This work will require 10,000 cubic yards of earth, which will be taken from the reservoir hill. The company is also to build a bridge across its right of way, so that Cosmo and St. Louis streets may be thus connected.

The Marengo Terrace Company, which has been carrying on the extensive street-making project in the hill district, has begun oiling three miles of streets, and will have them completed before the winter rains set in.

The county chain gang has been engaged some time in excavating for the large concrete drain to be placed under Griffin avenue, between Mission road and Wood avenue, and which will carry the storm waters past the County Hospital grounds. Griffin avenue is being improved and easterly from Marengo avenue is ready for oiling.

HUNTINGTON BEACH ACTIVITY.

General Demand for Lots in Town and Surrounding Country—Settlers Going Into Peatlands.

There has been more activity in Huntington Beach real estate during the past two weeks than for many month, according to reports, and the indications are that these winter months will be busy.

Real estate dealers report considerable inquiry for exchanges. While there are many cash offers, much property in other localities is offered in exchange for Huntington Beach property, improved and unimproved.

T. B. Talbert & Co. sold a five-room cottage on Sixteenth street to H. N. Livernash of Pasadena, who will make his home at the beach.

The Huntington Beach Realty Co. reports the following: Howard Hell of Sierra Madre bought a lot and will build a summer home. E. M. Hansbreugh sold three lots in the Vista del Mar tract to C. A. Brown. Mr. Brown also bought five acres of sediment land near the cannery and will cultivate it.

From all parts of the peatland country comes the report of a strong inquiry for acreage, both from residents of the neighboring country, and from newcomers from the East. The outlook is incouraging for an influx of new settlers into the section.

BUYS OIL LAND.

Arthur G. Munn reports the sale of 160 acres of oil land in section 18, in the San Fernando district, for J. N. Hagins to J. C. McCormick of Goldfield, Nev., consideration, $16,000. Mr. McCormick is a prominent mining man in Goldfield.

The reception hall, finished in antique oak is, like every other room in the house, floored with quarter-sawed oak. Large, bright and attractive, it is just the kind of a room to make your guest feel at home. The crowning feature of the living-room is the fine brick chimney, which with the commodious built-in seats and fine weathered oak beamed ceiling and paneled walls make an exceedingly attractive picture.

The dining-room has a beautiful built-in buffet with art metal and art glass doors, which with attractive casement windows and broad paneled walls and woodwork, finished in ebony, make a room all that could be desired. It's a fine up-to-date 8-room residence, situated on a beautiful, desirable corner among many other handsome homes. The lot is slightly elevated above the street, having a fine terraced lawn on two sides. The house was specially designed and has just been completed under the personal supervision of the owner.

There is a large, broad cemented porch with cement steps leading to an imposing oak entrance with cut-glass side lights. The finish of the entire lower floor is of selected handrubbed quarter-sawed oak, with a paneling in all of the rooms 5 feet 6 inches high. In the living-room there is a large brick mantel in old-gold finish, while the walls are of imported leather with a beamed ceiling. The side walls of the dining-room are hung with rich imported tapestries, and there is a wide plate rail, while the beamed ceilings are in a very heavy effect; there is also a fine built-in buffet. The attractive den has walls finished with velvet paper and a built-in writing-desk. The kitchen and pantry are complete and modern in every respect, with all the necessary appointments; the linoleum is already on the floor.

Upstairs are four charming sunny bedrooms tinted in restful soft colors. The floors are of rock maple, polished like a mirror. The bathroom is modern and convenient. This will make an ideal home for someone. Call and let us show it to you.

FOR SALE—ARE YOU ONE OF THE MANY who would like a home of your own, no matter how humble, but are prevented by a lack of ready money? If you are, we want to talk with you. We have a number of quarter and half-acre lots on electric line within 25 minutes' ride of the center of Los Angeles and within walking distance of grammar and high schools, stores, churches and postoffice; good soil and an abundance of artesian water. We will sell you a quarter acre for $150 or a half acre for $300 and you can make your own terms; if you will build at once we want no first payment down; all we ask is for you to build a home, no matter whether it costs $100 or $1000; no matter whether it is a tent or a brown-stone front; get started and when you are settled and have a little ready cash pay us a little now and then. Remember, you are within walking distance of schools, churches, postoffice, stores, in a settled community with good neighbors, not in a barren field; where you can have electric lights and telephones if you want them; where you can buy a quarter for $150, or a half acre for $300 on which you can raise anything that will grow in soil and where water is free and abundant, and best of all, where you can make your own terms; we will show you the property without expense to you; it will be to your interest to investigate; better act at once. FOR SALE—"WE SELL THE HILLS."
"Croakers" may croak and "knockers" may knock "big fellows," who are forced to comply with the law and to disgorge dishonest gains may try to destroy public confidence, but the facts are that we have fairly good crops all over the United States and prices are high. Manufacturers are generally busy with orders ahead to keep them at work for the next year, and those who desire work can usually get it at good wages. The whole United States is "back country" for Los Angeles, and the "Angel City" sharing in the general prosperity, is steadily marching "onward, right on." Sure to be the greatest city of the Pacific Coast. Work has just commenced on an enterprise of great importance to the city. The huge electric motor shovel of the Los Angeles-Pacific R.R. Co. is now eating right into the hill at the junction of North Hill st. with Sunset blvd., excavating the north entrance to the North Hill-street tunnel.

About the time the franchise was granted for these tunnels, Judge Pope, attorney for the L. A.-P., was quoted as saying—"Now, you'll see the dirt fly; we'll complete the tunnels in four months after we commence work." Looks now as if the company intends to "make good." The completion of these tunnels will bring the crossing of Sunset blvd. and Alvarado within 6 to 8 minutes, and Capitol Hill within 10 minutes from Fourth and Hill. Sunset boulevard, 100 feet wide, winding on easy grades through the beautiful, picturesque hills of the northwest to Hollywood, is to be paved with vitrified brick on concrete base from the Plaza to the city limits, and just as sure as time goes on, this close-in property, on and near this grand thoroughfare will double in value within the next 2 years. Those who CAN buy now, and DON'T do it, will very soon wish they had.

There is room for doubt whether it was wise to pay $1000 a foot for property on S. Main st. near Washington, as was done lately, and one may question whether it was good policy to go 6 to 8 miles out in the country and pay $600 to $800 for an ordinary-size building lot, on ground that ought to be growing alfalfa and potatoes for the next six to eight years, and some of them wish they hadn't. It's a GOOD PLAN to use GOOD SENSE in making investments anywhere. When one buys property on a splendid street like Sunset blvd. within 1¼ to 3 miles from the Courthouse, at from $25 to $50 a front foot, he is taking no chances; can't possibly lose, and is sure to make from one to several hundred per cent. profit if he holds it for just a few years.

We have some nice lots, 50x150, on Lakeshore ave. near Echo Park, at $1250 to $1500, on easy terms; good location for flats. Just for a few days, we can offer a splendid corner, 72 ft. front, on Sunset blvd.; both streets graded, for $1800. We have 74 ft. frontage on Sunset blvd., corner of Alvarado; splendid business property for $4000; and a fine business lot, 50x150, on Sunset, only 130 feet from Alvarado for $2500. We have residence lots from $250 to $2500, and houses and lots at all prices. We are HEADQUARTERS for property in the northwest. Glad to have you call at our office, 137 N. Main st. Phones Main 3707, A7781.

THE HISTORY OF A GREAT RESIDENCE SECTION.

THE SOUTHWEST, TOLD BY VICTOR G. KLEINBERGER CO.

Four years ago you could buy lots in the Charles Victor Hall Tract, which extends from Adams to Jefferson and Brighton to Western avenue, for from $900 to $1200; now they range from $2000 to $2500. Two years later Hopper & Son put on their tract west of Western avenue, between Jefferson and Flint; about the same time M. E. Johnson & Co. put on the 29th Street Tract, extending from Flint to 27th st., all west of Western ave. These lots cost from $500 to $800; now they range from $1200 to $1800. Later Tyler & Co. put on their two tracts, both west of Arlington with prices from $300 to $600; these lots are now selling from $800 to $1200.

All these tracts are beautifully improved with homes, being nearly solidly built up to 7th avenue and Jefferson, where the Victor G. Kleinberger Company have put on the West Jefferson and Seventh Avenue Tract, and where they are selling lots from $350 up; but just think of the terms, $50 down and $10 a month, with interest at 6 per cent. All the streets are completed, wide oiled streets, artistic bungalows have already been built and more are planning to build.

A SNAP A SNAP A SNAP
I will sell you 17 of the finest located lots in beautiful Huntington Park; 8 facing west, and 9 facing east. Two corners 57x150, 7 inside lots 57x150 and 8 inside lots 50x150 to a 15-foot alley, making a frontage of 456 feet on two streets, and 315 on another. This property is now improved with a full two-story strictly modern 8-roomed house, built on a solid concrete foundation 12 inches thick up to floor joice. Has concrete basement, and steam heat in all rooms and bath, artistically laid out grounds, well set lawn, worlds of fruit, shade, and flowers, good barn, electric lights, telephones, piped for gas. Finest water in the world, exceptionally fine soil. Everything grows here like magic, (no mud in wet season) as the soil is of a sandy loam. These lots are all piped with 2-inch pipe, and 2-inch openings for subirrigation. This is an exceptionally fine place for someone to build houses to rent, or sell on the installment plan as there is a great demand for houses there right now. From the fact this property is only one block from the new $22,000 school house, or this property would make a fine lemon ranch or truck garden, from the fact it is so well watered. If you are looking for something good see this at once. The price is right. Prof. GEO. A. GARLOW, owner, room 426 Citizens' National Bank.

A LITTLE MONEY
Goes a long ways just now. If you'll plant your dollars in a desirable lot under favorable conditions and surroundings, you are not only sure your money is safe, but unless all signs fail your savings will increase and beat the best savings bank for returns. All of our wealthy men made their money in real estate, and will continue to do so, ninety-nine times out of a hundred. Real estate, yes, lots. It's the backbone of all securities. The banks make their money by loaning your money on real estate. Sure. The man who has the real estate makes money too by borrowing your money. Why don't you make the money yourself in a lot or more? Hundreds, yes, thousands, have made money in over a hundred tracts sold by us.

FOR SALE—
WHAT WILL YOU GIVE for a big bunch of rent receipts, which my friend has accumulated in the past twenty years until he woke up and bought an acre at BELLE VERNON?
He paid only $50 down, moved on the place, and will raise enough vegetables, berries, chickens and eggs to pay for the land; besides, he is saving his rent and water bills and has a home of his own. After a while he will cut his acre into six lots and sell each lot for the price he paid for the whole acre, $650. That is the way fortunes have been made in this city, and the opportunity today is better than it ever was, because the future of the city is assured and it is growing faster than it ever did.
Belle Vernon is only 20 minutes from 6th and Main sts.; five car lines pass it.
THE WATER IS FREE, piped to your door in large steel mains. You can use all you want; it don't cost one cent. Long Beach boulevard, destined to be the finest driveway between the city and the ocean, intersects it. The city is rapidly growing out that way. It is near three schools, five churches, two banks, public library and all kinds of stores. Look the city over and you can not find anything like it for double the price.
Thirty-five families are already living at Belle Vernon and cultivating their gardens, and more are coming daily. Why not come and see it yourself?

FOR SALE—
HOW ABOUT THAT HOME PLACE?
Now is the time of all times to get busy and secure an ideal lot on easy terms of $50 cash and $10 monthly if desired, and if you're ready to build will give a discount on the lot that'll help pay the carpenter bill. Lumber being cheap, now's a good time to build. An immense amount of building is being planned and as soon as the country's crops are marketed, which is now nearly done, we'll see plenty of money and cheap rates. Money is getting cheaper now. Going begging in Middle States at 5 and 6 per cent, they say. Now I am going to get some of you homeseekers started on a lot on very easy terms if necessary.

FOR SALE—

"A great alfalfa ranch bargain." It's one of the best improved and best paying alfalfa ranches for the money in Southern California today, there is 108 acres in the ranch, 74 acres in fine alfalfa; this ranch adjoins a nice little town, less than 25 miles from Los Angeles, with fine car service; the improvements alone on this ranch cost over $10,000, and they consist of a good 8-room 2-story house, a neat wagon-house and horse barn and a mammoth new hay barn, holding over 700 tons; this is a fine building on a solid cement foundation, and near by is a fine new and up-to-date electric pumping plant that pumps 100 miner's inches of water; and the water is conveyed all over the alfalfa fields by two large cement underground pipe lines with headgates close together; this ranch is now paying 15 per cent. on its present valuation, and would pay much more if all in alfalfa, but the owner is an invalid, and cannot give it his personal attention, and has now offered it for a quick sale for only $250 per acre, and will give terms on part of that; at this price and with those fine improvements and only a few miles from Los Angeles, it's the greatest ranch bargain on the market today. Let me show you this tomorrow.

FOR SALE—
are related differently to the city than they used to be. Telephones, trolleys and rural mail and daily papers and fine schools make country life the best life. It is the most profitable, too. What is happening all around us here in California? Why, some of the very best lands have laid idle because of sparse population.

The big interior valleys have had thousands of acres waiting for the arrival of men to farm them. This day is passing. The big tracts that are desirable are getting scarce. Prices are advancing.

The Home Extension Club plan provides a way to buy in a large tract with hundreds of other families at low wholesale rates, to start your own town and sail forth. All done with greatest care as to details, skill and integrity.

Now forming the big Seventh Home Extension Colony. Come down and talk about the other six and don't miss investigating this Seventh.

Open day or evening.
CALIFORNIA HOME EXTENSION ASSOCIATION.
Ground Floor Chamber of Commerce Bldg. 13

FOR SALE—
GOOD LAND $17.
Two years ago we organized the First Home Extension Colony, at Greenfield Clark Colony, Monterey County. It cost our members only $17 and $27 an acre, average $22. It now sells from $80 to $125 and acre.

One and a half years ago we organized Alpaugh. We have not finished all the irrigation work yet, but got the water and enough to insure the deal, and it now sells at $40 to $60 an acre. It cost our members $18 an acre.

Last February, only eight months ago, we put on Wasco to club members at $22.50. It now actually sells at $40 to $60 an acre and some held at $100 an acre.

There is only one crop of land and what is the use of coming west to grow up with the country if you don't have some of the country in your possession to grow up with?

Open day and evening. We are waiting to discuss the subject of the big Seventh Home Extension Colony (now forming) with you. Better look into it.

FOR SALE—A FINE 15-ACRE ORANGE GROVE NEAR COVINA. ADDRESS OWNER, BOX 31, DOWNEY, CAL. 13

FOR SALE—
Lemon and Orange Groves.

FOR SALE—THIS IS THE VERY BEST BUY in an orange and lemon grove in the State and that is certainly saying a good deal.
The property consists of 37½ acres, in a foothill district. There are 1000 navel trees, 700 Valencias and 900 lemons (a fine combination;) 17 acres are 6 years old and 20 acres are 7 years old; so you will see that the grove is not yet in full bearing.
The owner of this place has carefully kept a record of every cent received from and paid out on this property, which he planted himself.
For his first crop he received $250; second, $1100; third, $4200; fourth, $6700; fifth (last season,) $9000. By arithmetical progression, the present crop should bring at least $11,000 and the fruit is on the trees to justify this estimate. The location is ideal. Absolutely no danger of frost.
The orchard is flumed for irrigation in such a way that a boy could do the work. The water right is the best and the cost of irrigation does not exceed $72 per year (less than $2 per acre.) How does this suit you?
The grove is absolutely free from scale and is in perfect condition. One man can easily take care of this place, and the entire cost of all work, including pruning, irrigation and fertilizing, does not exceed $1500 per year.
The price of the property is $25,000 (less than $1000 per acre)—$20,000 cash. I can get you a loan of $5000 on the present crop, so if you have $15,000 cash you can handle this grove, which, as before stated, is the best in the State. Too much cannot be said in favor of it and it must be seen to be appreciated.
Now I am going to tell you something that may sound a little fishy, but it is a fact that I can prove to you, the same as all other statements in this ad.
A man who owns ten acres of Valencias near this grove recently sold his crop for $16,000, sixteen thousand dollars. This, remember, was for a single crop—not for the place.
If you have been looking for an orange grove of this size be sure and see this before purchasing any other. No exchange considered on this place. If you want a smaller place I have them at all prices, but I do not handle anything but bargains in groves in good condition.
Fifteen years' practical experience in the business of growing and shipping oranges should make my services valuable to you and you are welcome to them.
A. J. WILKINS (Orange and Lemon Groves Exclusively,) 503 Delta Bldg., 426 S. Spring st. F2865. Broadway 2494. 13

FOR SALE—
No. 460. 20 acres, beautifully located at Ontario, this is one of the best groves in the State, the trees are large and in the very best condition; the grove produced better than $7500 last year, and this year's crop is heavier than last year's; fine buildings; free water; price $25,000; one-half cash, balance to suit. This property is better than a 20 per cent. investment; the owner is 73 and wants to retire or you couldn't get a price on the grove.

No. 634. 10 acres at Cucamonga, all in full bearing Washington navels, good water, buildings are very fine and modern; this property is well located, the grounds are artistically laid out in drives and parks, making the place a very desirable home; income $2300; cash price $15,000; terms to suit.

No. 2356. 40 acres near Porterville, 18 acres in 5 to 8-year-old navels; cheap water and good buildings; income better than $3000 a year, and this will go to $5000 when the younger trees are in full bearing; cash price $15,000; we consider this property a great bargain, and the owner will take a home in West Los Angeles or Long Beach up to $5000 as part payment.

FOR SALE—

Cock-a-doodle doo,
We've more business than we can do.
Whilst others are growling
And dealers are howling,
We've got all the bargains, too.

Our city buyers were kept busy the past week buying about everything worth buying. Eleven completely furnished homes besides hundreds of smaller lots, all of which will be placed on our floor Monday, in most cases at less than half original cost.

COEUR D'ALENE MINING & DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

A party of five, composed of directors and stockholders of the Whipple Mountain Gold & Copper Mining Company, visited the property located in San Bernardino county, and on their return expressed themselves more than pleased with the results of the development work thus far.

The shaft is down 110 feet and we have passed through several stringers 18 inches wide, the assay return running $118 gold and $46 copper. It is our intention to continue the shaft down another 100 feet where level will be opened and the five parallel veins of the system tapped by cross-cutting, drifting on the several veins and the blocking out of ore will follow, so that when the Santa Fe cut-off now building is completed the mine may be in a position to begin and sustain production.

This week we shipped to the property a 15 H.P. Fairbanks & Morse hoist together with car, trackage and other necessary machinery to push the work on the property vigorously to this end.

We also shipped 25,000 feet of lumber for bunk houses, blacksmith shop and shafting.

We have a splendid force of men on the property.

The first ledge of importance entering into the calculations of the management is expected to be encountered is the next 40 or 50 feet. This ledge on the surface shows a width of 12 feet and when opened at that depth should afford in itself a large body of shipping ore, carrying as it does on the surface high values in copper and gold.

After a personal visit to the property and workings we feel very sanguine over the outlook for the property. We should like to show the specimens of ore which we brought home with us.

THE BON MARCHE:

Le Sage Bros Co.
Shoe Stock.

SOLD TO THE MAMMOTH SHOE HOUSE

The Trustee of the Bon Marche, Le Sage Bros. Co., found it too slow work retailing the enormous shoe stock of Le Sage Bros. The Bon Marche opened with at least $70,000 worth of shoes, undoubtedly the largest shoe stock on the Pacific Coast. The quantity sold at retail by the Trustee did not make an impression, so large was the stock. A buyer was sought, one with ready cash, and an outlet for such an immense lot of shoes. The Mammoth Shoe Store was the only local concern that could swing a deal of such huge proportions, and having practically no competition, secured the stock for less than half price.

They will begin a shoe sale in a few days that will eclipse any former event of the kind ever held in Los Angeles, offering thousands thousands of dollars' worth of high-grade shoes and prices so low as to be almost unbelievable.

Le Sage Bros. were shoe men through and through, and made a reputation by selling first-class footwear. The Mammoth will make an effort to clean this stock up in a hurry and will continue this sale until every pair of Le Sage Bros. Co. shoes are sold.

Watch the daily papers for the announcement of the biggest shoe sale ever held in Los Angeles.

MURDER.

ANOTHER DEAD FROM BULLET.

Celestial Assassins' Work Is Well Done.

Bloody Revenge Is Expected at Any Moment.

Ante-Mortem Identification Not Definite.

Lem Sing, who with Wong Goon Kor, was shot by highbinders, Friday night, died at the Clara Barton Hospital, yesterday afternoon. Kor died soon after he was shot.

Charged with the murder of Kor, three Chinese were taken before Lem Sing, before his death, and identified as the men who renewed the tong war. But this identification is not considered definite in view of the fact that Friday night, after the shooting, Lem Sing described as the assassins other men than those he accused yesterday.

Charles Wing, otherwise known as Wong Wing, was one of those identified yesterday. Wing is a Portland highbinder. He is part white and part Chinese and was brought into Los Angeles at the beginning of the Chinese troubles.

The "Bakersfield Kid," who was arrested on suspicion, but not identified as connected with the shooting, is half Mexican and half Chinese. Wong Chong, who is charged with having fired the fatal shots, and Charles Sing, are both under arrest.

The police are looking for Charles Hong, former president of the Hop Sing Tong, who according to rumor, was responsible for the renewal of the Chinese trouble. He may be in hiding in Los Angeles, or he may be in San Francisco.

After the shooting, Friday night, Chinese witnesses say, two of the assassins threw away their revolvers as they ran into the street. They dashed rapidly west on Marchesault street, through a narrow alley, known as "Stab-in-the-back," to Apablasa street, where they got into a waiting vegetable wagon and were driven away. It is believed these fellows are imported hatchet men who had been kept at some outlying ranch until their services should be needed.

The police say that the danger of another outbreak in Chinatown is very great. A new tong has recently been organized as an aid to one of the other tongs. Its members are chiefly orange packers and Chinese who have lived long among Americans, and who drink a great deal of whisky. These men are likely to create trouble on the slightest provocation.

Two members of the Hop Sing Tong have been killed and one badly wounded in the present trouble and two of their men have been sent to the penitentiary. Bloody revenge may be taken at any moment.

LAST ACT.

BRYSON BURIAL HELD SECRETLY.

FAMILY GUARDS AGAINST ANY SURPRISE BY "NURSE."

Prayers and a Song Make Up Simple Service for Pioneer and Woman Companion of Many Years Fails to Appear—Company Controlling Estate to Meet Tomorrow.

The body of the late John Bryson was laid to rest in the family vault yesterday afternoon at Rosedale Cemetery, following a short service secretly held at the Orr & Edwards undertaking rooms at 2:30 o'clock. Only the immediate members of the family were present.

Secrecy was maintained to thwart any possible plan of Mrs. Gladys L. Lamberton, the "nurse," to cause a scene or attempt to gain possession of the body.

Rev. Hugh K. Walker offered a prayer, and a duet by two young women of the Immanuel Presbyterian Church choir, comprised the services at the house. Prayer also was offered at the cemetery.

The funeral arrangements were made yesterday morning at Mrs. Evaline Bryson's home, No. 1011 South Flower street. Her three sons and daughter and their children were notified to be at the chapel sharply at 2:30. The family went to the cemetery in carriages.

A meeting of the John Bryson Company has been called for Monday afternoon. It will be held in the offices of the corporation in the Bryson Block, to elect officers and to meet any issue which may arise through Mrs. Lamberton. Mrs. Bryson will be elected president, it is stated, in the vacancy caused by Bryson's death. Isaac H. Bryson will succeed his mother as vice-president, and John Bryson, Jr., will fill the office of secretary and treasurer. The affairs of the family corporation are said to be in good condition. It is feared that an effort will be made by Mrs. Lamberton to secure part of John Bryson's interest in the company.

URGES UNIFORM TREES.

Ninth Ward Improvement Association Opposes Variegated Arbors Along Curb and Sidewalk Lines.

The Ninth Ward Improvement Association is endeavoring to interest property owners of Boyle Heights in shade trees. It is the hope of the association that, in time, the residents of the different streets will reach agreements among themselves and adopt a uniform tree for each street.

At a meeting of the association last week the matter was brought up for discussion and the committee on trees announced that steps were being taken to carry out the project. The members are working in conjunction with City Forester Harper and hope to interest land-owners sufficiently to induce them to try the experiment of limiting the trees within a given block at least to one variety.

R. F. Norman, chairman of the committee on trees of the Ninth Ward Improvement Association, is one of the prime movers in the "uniformity" ranks of Boyle Heights and he has been doing considerable campaigning on his own account. He has given the question of shade trees careful study and believes that only by adopting a uniform tree for each street or block can the residence districts be made the most attractive.

SOCIETY PREPARES FOR BRILLIANT SHRINE EVENT.

The new Shrine Auditorium, at Jefferson and Royal streets, is nearing completion, and this week the furnishings will be placed in the building. Comfort and luxury will mark every detail, and no expense is being spared to make everything of surpassing excellence and beauty.

The opening ball, designed to be the greatest event in Los Angeles society, will be given on the evening of Thursday, the 24th inst., and invitations accepted to the present time cause the managers to make arrangements for seating 2000 guests. They estimate their expenses at more than $15,000.

In addition to the vast ballroom, such as cannot be duplicated anywhere on the Coast, there are two large reception rooms for gentlemen and three for ladies, all furnished with exceptional richness, and which will be in care of a corps of expert attendants and ladies' maids.

Nobles of Al Malaikah Temple throughout Southern California are enlisted in the success of the ball and large delegations will attend from all the surrounding country. Following is the complete list of patronesses:

In a collision between an East-bound Arcade depot car and an automobile, owned and driven by C. W. Robinson of No. 141 Central avenue, yesterday morning at Central avenue and Fifth street, Robinson, though uninjured, barely escaped death. His machine was badly wrecked. Robinson was approaching the corner from the south, his runabout going so fast that he was unable to stop when he sighted danger. He was hurled ten feet, but escaped without a scratch.

COLD WATERITES GET GLAD HAND.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION BODY IS URGED TO MEET HERE.

Assured That Los Angeles Has Better Facilities Than Rival Cities for Entertaining Crowds—Two Monster Auditoriums, Extensive Electric Service Expected to Win Fight.

Prohibitionists of Los Angeles and of the whole State of California are engaged in a united effort to bring the national convention tc this city in 1908.

The Chamber of Commerce took the matter up Friday and by unanimous vote of the board of directors, extended an invitation to the convention, pledging coöperation in every way, and outlining the superior advantages of Los Angeles as compared with rivals.

There are already eleven cities fighting for the honor of entertaining the great Prohibition body—Los Angeles, Denver, Kansas City, Chicago, Indianapolis, Detroit, Dallas, Atlanta, Saratoga, Atlantic City and Long Branch.

Fred F. Wheeler of this city, a member of the National Prohibition Committee, will leave for the East in a few days. On November 20 the committee will meet in Chicago, hear the inducements held out by the several cities, and make a decision.

Mr. Wheeler says that at least three cities have volunteered to pay all local expenses of the convention in order to secure it.

Los Angeles has never had a national political convention, and it was not until now that she was equipped for handling one. The Auditorium and the new Shrine Auditorium are both amply large enough for a national assemblage.

"We have entertained many great conventions, notably the general conference of the Methodist church, the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, and the general convention of the Dunkers," said a business man recently. "If the Prohibitionists have any fears that we cannot stow them away comfortable in our hotels, including their sisters, their cousins and their aunts, and never know they are here, they have not kept posted about our unequaled facilities for handling crowds. This, coupled with the greatest electric, interurban and street-railway service in the world, makes the advantages offered by Los Angeles superior to those of other cities.

"Then, too, we can promise the Prohibs a sunshiny time, many glorious and unique attractions, and the most courteous of treatment."

TROOP D ELECTION.

Promotions All Along the Line, and Boys Enthusiastic for Future of the Cavalrymen.

Troop D, N.G.C., held an election on Friday night, at which Maj. Charles H. Howland, engineer officer of the First Brigade, was detailed to act as presiding officer. The troop now has fifty men, well drilled and interested in their work, and under the new officers they expect to make marked progress. Since the resignation of Capt. T. C. Walrous, several months ago, Lieut. James Gunn has been in command of the troop, and at the election on Friday night he was rewarded by being named for the captaincy. Jesse McComas was advanced to first lieutenant, and Louis Allison to second lieutenant. There is great enthusiasm among the boys for the future.

The man who buys a Crestmont lot before the completion of that tunnel (which is now in actual course of construction) will reap a big reward. There is no speculation, no risk—it's a simple proposition, as bright and clear as sunlight. The present opening prices are so low that they must double and treble.

LUXURIOUS DEN RAIDED.

Young Man of Good Family Arrested in Opium Joint Provided With Sofa Pillows.

In a raid on an opium den in the Chinese quarter, yesterday afternoon, Paul Greenwood, a member of a well-known Los Angeles family, and Frank White were arrested.

The den, situated in one of the vilest holes in Chinatown, had been fitted up as a clubroom. Handsome posters were on the walls and sofa cushions were arranged so that the smokers could enjoy their ease.

Both men were dressed in the latest style and both were partially under the influence of the drug, it is alleged, when the officers, who had been watching them through a crack in the door, suddenly disturbed their pleasant dreams by hitting them sharply on the soles of their feet.

A fine opium layout was captured and will be exhibited in the Police Court Monday, when the two young men are arraigned.

A Modern Way of Saving Gas Has Been Found After Thirty-Five Years of Experience.

There are more people using gas, and desiring to use it, in Southern California, if they could get it, than in any other part of the United States where it is manufactured. We will soon have in operation three first-class gas companies, and we believe that they will all do a good business, and all make the best gas that can be made from an oil product. The consequence is that almost every make of gas ranges are sold in this city. Some of these makes are made to catch the buyer by the price; some are made to catch the buyer by the looks, and all are represented by the salesman as being strictly first class. The consequence is that a great many people buy a gas range that is, in almost every way, an undesirable article to use. Many are made of common sheet iron, which is full of slag, and either varnished over by a black varnish or painted over with a black enamel to hide this defect from the proposed purchaser.

There are no two makes of gas ranges that are made just alike. Many honest manufacturers are still manufacturing a product that up to this time is an experiment with them; the consequence is they are poor bakers or else use too much gas in the oven to heat with, or else so arranged that they either burn on the top or the bottom, and often do not bake in the front and the back alike.

One of the principal features of a gas range are the burners. Seven-eighths of the burners are so made that they do not give the best results in combustion. Not many are made so as to concentrate the heat under the center of the kettle. A great many are made so that by turning on excessive gas the cold air rushes in the center of the burner and pushes the fire from under the kettle. You will notice the results of these defects if you will notice the average housewife's kettles. You will find them black and sooty on the outside, which is a sure indication that their gas ranges do not burn all the gas.

Again, you will see hundreds of people in this city who have supposedly high grade gas ranges, who have abandoned their ovens entirely on account of the expense and poor work, and have resorted to a gasoline oven placed on top of the range. A great many people in selecting gas ranges look for quantity and price rather than results and the lasting qualities of the range.

Now, suppose you buy a gas range for $19.00; it looks all right; it bakes fairly well; if you keep your fire down low it is not apt to smoke the kettle very much, although it has a cold air center. When you got it it was a glossy, shining black; of course, the black has peeled off now. You have only used $3.00 worth of gas per month so far. Now, suppose your neighbor has the same size stove. It has the latest modern burners for concentrating heat under the center of the kettle. There are no fumes of escaping unburned gas from it. It is made of the best quality of Wood's refined blued steel, the highest grade in the United States. It is a fine baker, much better than the cheap range, and with gas and heat saving devices it costs your neighbor $2.25 per month in the consumption of gas; this is a saving of 75 cents per month, or $9.00 per year. Your cheap stove may last you three years, or some longer. In three years there would be a saving of $27.00, besides the satisfaction of having a range that produces the best results. Now, suppose this range has cost your neighbor $25.00, against your $19.00. This range is practically indestructible, because every lining in the oven can be removed, even to the outer wall, in from 10 to 15 minutes, and a new one replaced at a minimum charge. Again, there is more difference in the saving of gas and foodstuff in a high grade range than there is in the average cheap one, from the fact that the food is cooked more thoroughly. The ovens use generally from a third to a half of the gas, and the burners 20 per cent. less in the very latest modern gas ranges. In fact, we have known gas bills in this city to have been cut in two, time and again, by the use of a modern range over what was used before. A high grade gas range does not mean the highest priced gas range, necessarily, but a high grade gas range in comparison with inferior ranges are called high grade, from the fact that they save the greatest number of units of heat. They have the best combustion. No smoked-up kettles. No fumes of escaping unburned gas. They have adjustable gascocks that can be adjusted by oneself. They are made of highest grade steel, to last. They have air space walls, with asbestos lining between to protect the outer walls of the stove, and to retain the heat in the oven.

The Detroit Jewel gas ranges are recognized by all dealers, and all gas companies, as being the highest grade range made. Many people thought they had a genuine Jewel range in their house, but the Detroit Jewel is the only one entitled to that name, which has been decided officially by the United States government.

The Detroit Jewel gas range for years has been sold by all gas companies, where other fuel, wood and coal, were cheap; it being the only gas range that could successfully compete with cheap fuel, and an official test having been made in Detroit, where coal was $4.00 per ton and gas $1.00 per M., and the average saving by gas over coal was 33 1-3 per cent.

There are over 5000 of these celebrated ranges in use in this city, and we have the first person to advise us, yet, that they are sorry they installed a Detroit Jewel gas range.

These ranges are sold for from $19.00 to $70.00, inclusive; the regular pattern, elevated ovens and cabinet ranges. One of these celebrated ranges is now on exhibition at McWhorter Bros., with all its parts removed, which can be replaced in a few minutes. Fifty-eight styles and sizes are on exhibition in their salesroom, and people contemplating using gas and buying gas ranges will do well to inspect this celebrated line—the Detroit Jewel—before placing their order.

THE MARKET.

BY OWNERS AND DEALERS.

INCREASED ACTIVITY IN LOCAL REALTY CIRCLES.

Sales of Lots Numerous—Completed Dwellings in Demand—Suburban Property Attractive—Buys on Commonwealth — Newcomers Purchasing.

Considerable increase in the sale of all classes of residence and semi-business property is reported by the various real estate men of the city. Buying for improvement with homes, or flat and apartment buildings, is a feature, and the purchase of completed dwellings in the best residence sections of the city indicates in almost all cases an influx of newcomers, who are settling in Los Angeles, and are calling the city their home. Sales reported by the agents follow, and tell the story in terse terms:

Buy on Commonwealth.

Richard Dillon has purchased a plot, 80x170 feet, on the northwest corner of Fifth street and Commonwealth avenue, for a consideration of $6400. Daniel G. Grant has purchased the adjoining 60 feet on Commonwealth avenue for $3600. Both properties will be improved with handsome residences in the near future.

In the Southwest Section.

Reynolds & H. Johnson have sold for J. W. MacMillan a house and lot on West Twenty-second street, adjoining on the west a corner of Arlington avenue, 50x150 feet, improved with a handsome, six-room bungalow, for $6000. The buyer is Col. E. BEGINNING.

PROPERTY IN MORE DEMAND.

INFLUX OF EASTERNERS BRINGS INCREASED INQUIRY.

Thousands Coming With Result That Real Estate Men Are Busy Showing Properties — Owners of Downtown Locations Will Not Sell. Talks by Agents.

The influx of many thousands of people from the Eastern States during the period from September 1 to October 31 is having its effect on the realty market; and there is a notable increase in inquiries for properties in all lines.

This is the evidence which comes from the realty dealers, both large and small. They look for an activity in both town and country property during the ensuing months, which will at least equal that of the past season.

The colonist rates this year have brought, and are bringing, to Los Angeles, and Southern California, a class of visitors who are far above the average, say the railroad officials. Many of these new comers are people of means from the Middle Western States, who have made their money on the farms and who take advantage of the saving in railroad fares.

Officials of the Salt Lake Railway estimate that this road will haul to Los Angeles fully 10,000 during the period of the colonist rates, and it is the conservative estimate of railroad men that from 50,000 to 60,000 people will be brought here by the various transcontinental lines.

Not only are many of these visitors making inquiries for real estate, but many of the resident investors are resuming their activities, and great confidence is expressed by the various agencies as to the volume of business for the next few months.

W. W. Mines of Mines & Farish says that his firm has had an especial demand the past two weeks for first-class residence properties, and that, in fact, it has been hard to secure the class of properties demanded.

Robert Marsh reports a substantial increase in inquiries and calls for all classes of realty. He has just returned from piloting a party of investors over lands in the San Joaquin Valley, and says there appears a special demand just now for partially improved ranches and small tracts. He looks for an era of marked activity in ranch lands, and much development of the "back country" during the ensuing year.

G. R. Hoyt of the Jones & Ryder Land Co. says that there has been a decided increase in demands for country property during the past two weeks, and that yesterday's mail brought in letters from would-be investors from Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, New York and several of the New England States. This firm has been making numerous sales of ranches and alfalfa tracts in Tulare and Kings counties, and has had considerable demand during the past week for small tracts close to Los Angeles.

W. B. Merwin of W. B. Merwin & Co., who operates solely in high-class business properties, reports a gratifying number of seekers for downtown investments, but says that there are few who are willing to part with their holdings. He notes a marked increase in the number of people making inquiries for realty since the beginning of October.

Julius Black of Black Bros. says his firm has been meeting a demand for all classes of property, and that the change from quietness to special activity is apparent.

J. A. Fitch of Fitch & Co., who make a specialty of ranch lands in the vicinity of Pomona, says that his firm has sold lands to the amount of more than $10,000 in the past two weeks, and that there is a demand for small ranches which shows the people are going in for an era of country development that will keep pace with the city's growth.

R. A. Rowan of R. A. Rowan & Co. states that he has done more business during the past month than at any other time this summer, and that the outlook for the ensuing few months of this year is particularly encouraging. Mr. Rowan handles business property exclusively, and says that the demand for high-class income propositions is more than can be supplied, as the owners of such property are chary of letting go a good thing with conditions so promising for the future of Los Angeles.

The firm of Bryan & Bradford reports that inquiries for high-class residence and apartment-house property are numerous, and that there are no snaps on the market, each owner firm in the belief that conditions are better in Los Angeles than at any other time in its history.

Robert Mitchell of the Robert Mitchell Company has a number of important deals "stewing," and reports an increasing number of inquiries for semi-business property, good flat building locations and residence sites. The demand for dwelling-houses, according to Mr. Mitchell, is firm, but he is more encouraged by the continued purchase of vacant lots by newcomers, as it indicates the inflow of new people and the upbuilding of the city.

In fact, the sale of new building sites in all sections of the city is one of the best signs for a growing city as most of the purchases are made with the idea of at once improving with cozy homes. Homes mean a population, and population means increased business activity, which, in turn, is the basis of prosperity.

Smaller real estate dealers in Hollywood, Colegrove, Garvanza and other suburban sections have the same reports to make as those which come from the larger concerns. They say that especially within the past two weeks there has been a noticeable increase in the number of people looking for lots in improved subdivisions near to car lines.

IN BUNGALOW STYLE.

Handsome Home on Three Lots Represents Outlay of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars.

Occupying three large lots on the southwest corner of Normandie avenue and Santa Barbara street, the new home of L. L. Bowen is one of the prettiest in the section. The lot is 134x157½ feet in size, thus giving ample yard room about the house, which is laid out in lawns and artistic flower gardens.

The house is of the typical bungalow style, although two stories in height. Wide verandas and a porte cochere, supported by columns of the blue-burned brick, and floored with cement, are distinctive features. The foundation to the first floor level and the outer wall about the lot also are constructed of the blue hard-burned brick.

On the first floor is a living-room, 18x30 feet, at one end of which is a den, 12x18 feet, while at the opposite end is a sun parlor with glass partitions and doors. The dining-room, back of the living apartment, is 14x18 feet, with a large kitchen and pantry adjoining. Servants' quarters, reached by a long screen porch, are in the rear.

The second floor is arranged with five large bedrooms and two baths. The floors throughout are of hardwood, while the trim and finish are of slash-grained Oregon pine. Three large mantels, one of Santa Barbara sandstone, are features of the house.

There is a large cement cellar under the house, in which a hot-air furnace is installed. The house covers a ground area of 60x76 feet. It represents a total outlay, with the land value, of about $25,000.

CEMENT BLOCKS FOR CHURCH.

First Presbyterian of Covina Will Be Handsome Building—Lay Corner-stone Today.

The corner-stone of the new First Presbyterian Church at Covina will be laid at 3 o'clock this afternoon, and will mark the growth of a small army of church people to a prominent place in the Presbyterian fold of Southern California. The building, an illustration of which appears herewith, was designed by H. M. Patterson of Los Angeles.

The building occupies five lots on the northeast corner of Second and Italia streets, 100x150 feet in size. The building, including the Sunday-school annex, will be 120 feet long and 65 feet wide. The main portion of the church is 65x73 feet, while the Sunday-school annex is 50 feet square. There will be a lecture-room 20x32 feet, three vestibules, a choir gallery, secretary's room and a pastor's room. Above the main auditorium will be a balcony seating 150. The auditorium seats 300, this total being increased 250 by the Sunday-school annex. There will be twelve classrooms, six on a floor, and a primary-room, in the Sunday-school portion.

A basement, divided into a dining-room 36x36, a kitchen 14x26, with plenty of pantry and store room, are features of the plan also.

The Building Committee in charge of the work is composed of Rev. P. G. Stevens, pastor; B. L. King, R. W. Douglass and A. Carualean.

The main part of the building will be completed first, and will cost about $16,000. The Sunday-school section will bring the total cost of the building up to about $22,000. Cement blocks are being used in the construction, and are being made on the land, from river sand. It is planned to complete the building by the first of the year.

SELLS INTEREST IN MILL.

Vice-President Kohlmeier Takes Fullerton Ranch as Part Payment for Half of Atlas Milling Property.

One hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars was the price for which C. C. Kohlmeier sold out his half interest in the prosperous Atlas Milling Company, to Valentine Kratz, last week. The plant is located at No. 507 South San Pedro street and is valued at $200,000. There is a stock of grain on hand estimated to be worth $100,000, and there are book accounts which bring the gross total valuation on the assets of the company up to $350,000.

Mr. Kohnmeier, who has been vice-president of the concern since it was founded about sixteen years ago, took as part payment a 150-acre ranch at Fullerton, which is set to oranges and walnuts, and has some hill land, which is used for raising hay. The ranch is valued at $100,000. It formerly was the property of 'Bob' Northam, who considered it one of the choicest of any in the fertile Santa Ana Valley. The remaining $65,000 is said to have been paid over in cold cash by Valentine Kratz, the president of the company. H. P. Ernst made the deal.

FIREPROOF CLUBHOUSE.

Clay Tile and Cement Plaster Used in Construction of Women's Building for Eagle Rock.

Eagle Rock soon will boast a handsome woman's clubhouse. An illustration is printed on this page today showing the design of Architect H. Alban Reeves for the Twentieth Century Club of Eagle Rock. It is a handsome building, partially mission in outline. It will occupy the southwest corner of Stanley avenue and Virginia streets, near the center of the little burg. The lot is 50x140 feet. The building will sit back a space from the road. It will be eighty feet long and about as wide as the lot. It will contain a club-room, 30x50 feet. The parlor off this main room will be 14x21½ feet. There will be a kitchen 9x14 feet, with spacious pantry room, etc., and a fully-equipped stage, 14½x14 feet, with dressing-rooms for ladies and gentlemen adjoining, each 12x14 feet.

A pergola with a cement floor is a feature of the Stanley-street front. The foundation will be of concrete, with walls of hollow fire clay tile, and the roof of mission clay tile. The building will be plastered. A large boulder mantel will occupy one end of the club-room, the ceiling of which will be of open timber work. Provision has been made for lighting and heating.

RAPIDLY GROWING DISTRICT.

Transportation Facilities of Wilshire Boulevard Section Bring Development.

One of the most important factors in the rapid development which is taking place in the Wilshire boulevard district, is the splendid street-car facilities which are now afforded residents of this district. The new "West Sixth street" line of the Los Angeles Railway Company, which runs out Broadway and Seventh street to Alvarado, thence over to Sixth street, and directly out Sixth street to Grammercy Place, where it turns north to Fourth street, was placed in operation the 10th day of last April, being the first car line to give service beyond Sunset Park.

Cars on this line are operated on a six-minute schedule, and a passenger is brought from Fourth street and Grammercy Place to Seventh and Broadway in about thirty minutes. This line is now being extended out Fourth street, thence west to Colegrove and toward Hollywood.

The "West Sixth street" car line of the Inter-Urban Railway Company runs directly out Sixth street to Berendo street. This is a standard gage line and the rails to carry these cars have already been laid to Fourth and Grammercy streets, following the same line of the Los Angeles Railway Company's "West Sixth street" car.

The new extension of the Los Angeles Railway Company's "Bimini Bath" line, which will extend from Bimini Baths directly west to Fourth street and Western avenue, where it will turn north, is now being built as rapidly as a large force of men can push the work. The railway company now has the poles on the ground to Western avenue, the ties and the steel of the double track are laid as far as Fourth and New Hampshire streets. The ties and rails of one of the double tracks are down as far as Normandie avenue, and the grading completed nearly to Western avenue.

PERSONAL—
THE OCCULT WONDER,
THE GREATEST OF ALL PSYCHIC PALMISTS AND LIFE READERS.
J. FRANCIS BALDWIN,
J. FRANCIS BALDWIN,
309 S. HILL ST.—309
THE SIGN OF THE DRAGON.

THIS WONDERFUL MAN—THIS LEADER AMONG OCCULT SCIENTISTS OF THE AGE — CONFOUNDS EVERY SKEPTIC AND UNBELIEVER AT ONCE—AS HE GIVES A SUPREME AND CONVINCING TEST OF HIS GIFTS BY TELLING YOUR NAME WITHOUT ASKING A SINGLE QUESTION.

In his profession Mr. Baldwin stands alone, possessing a force of power, a gift, call it what you will.

LOW FEE, 50c.
NO MAN
Can explain these things. They exist, and that is as far as man's knowledge extends. And thus it is with Mr. Baldwin. He possesses these psychic gifts of nature in a greater degree than any other living man. Thousands have acclaimed his greatness. The press of the country, without exception, have lauded him as the one flawless master of occult science, and have awarded him the palm as the one occult wonder of the age, and the one whose gifts had reached the highest pinnacle of perfected power. And the press, ever critical as it is, yet has placed upon his brow a laurel wreath, and crowned him king among earth's life readers.

LOW FEE, 50c.
PROF. BALDWIN
Has appeared before scientists and before scientific societies, before societies for psychological research, and has delved deeply into the hidden recesses of the past and of the future under such auspices, but never once has he been found wanting, even though he has been weighed by every test that could be devised. His marvelous powers were always demonstrated as being invincible and invulnerable. He can look into your future as surely as one can look into a mirror—and in the mirror of your future he sees reflected the array of deeds which will go to make up your life. Would you avoid the rocks and shoals upon which you may be wrecked?

LOW FEE, 50c.
THEN CONSULT
Mr. Baldwin, that he may point them out to you. Are you struggling against fearful odds, and do the fates seem to be against you in life? Mr. Baldwin can tell you how to direct your efforts that order will come from chaos, method from confusion, and success from failure. 'Tis but a step from failure to success, did you but know it. But one link missing in the chain of events leading from one to the other. Mr. Baldwin can supply the link. Why be numbered among the unsuccessful? Why not write your name upon the tablets of fame, fortune, and success? Arise from your obscurity and come forth into the world arrayed in the garments of fortune, and take your place among the favored ones of the earth. Mr. Baldwin places all this within your reach should you place yourself within the radius of his
MARVELOUS INFLUENCE.
The most important step in a man's or woman's life is marriage. Marriage, which may means so much happiness or so much misery. He can point out to you the true path of matrimonial happiness. He can tell you whether the one you are about to marry will become a constant inspiration to help you over the rough places of life, or millstone about your neck, dragging you down to the depths of despair.

LOW FEE, 50c.

PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
205½ S. SPRING ST., near Third.
THE CELEBRATED RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.
A resident of Los Angeles for 31 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, and who has made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that HIS REMARKABLE READINGS AND PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS IN THEIR LIVES ARE UNPARALLELED.
PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate, unreliable humbug palmists, astrologers, psychics, fortune tellers, and those who, THROUGH TRICK METHODS, CLAIM TO TELL YOUR NAME, etc., etc., after you yourself have written the information—who scarcely know one line or mount from the other, and who, by their disgraceful readings, drag these useful sciences into the mire of fortune telling and fraud. PROF. ALTHOUSE is not actuated by any feeling of ill-will toward any reader who may be GENUINE (for he believes all RELIABLE readers should be encouraged;) but he will—in the future, as in the past—denounce humbug work whenever and wherever he can.
A SATISFACTORY AND ABSOLUTELY CORRECT reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of these wonderful sciences, through years of critical study of planetary influences on the lines of the hand and in the Horoscope, combined with large experiences, trained judgment, etc. The palm shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.
WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.
PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read—FROM LIFE—more celebrated people than any other reader. He does not deceive the public in this respect. HIS READINGS, TOO, MUST IN NO WISE BE CLASSED WITH THOSE OF ANY OTHER READER NOW OPERATING IN THIS PART OF THE COUNTRY, AND HIS SKILLED WORK HAS NO COMPARISON WITH THEIRS WHATSOEVER.
MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK, THE GREAT SINGER, WHOSE HANDS WERE READ AND HOROSCOPE CAST BY PROF. ALTHOUSE, writes and says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."
PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "Everything has turned out just as you predicted when reading my hand and horoscope. I think YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL TRUE READINGS."
DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL, editor Swastika Magazine, writes and says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides, and I feel certain that you are able, through your accurate and scientific knowledge of these sciences of human life and culture, to guide and direct to the best possible advantage, the lives of those who apply to you for advice. I wish you every success in your work."
FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading of my hands was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more exalted idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained." LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, Gen. Chaffee, [illegible] Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Sousa, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Creatore, Caruso, Huntington, Susan B. Anthony, Nance O'Neil, Lillian Nordica, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, Adaberto, Sembrich, Gadski, Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Anna Held, Lillian Russell, William Desmond, Blanche Hall, and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people being read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR.
Intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reader.
ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.
PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of critical study to, and is an experienced practitioner in, the science of MODERN ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, all kinds of diseases, the constitution, how best strengthened, when weak; tells all about love—whom to marry and when, describing the marriage partner, shows deaths, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs, and when to hold on to what has been gained; your talents, what best adapted for; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when one will be in danger, of limbs, accidents, death, losses, troubles; also of your good periods coming—giving dates of these events for the future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.
SCIENTIFIC PREDICTIONS ON ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE, for the present, and future events up to the close of life—made by these sciences—with most complete primary and secondary directions (arcs, etc.)—through the trained judgment of PROF. ALTHOUSE—will stagger the senses. BEWARE, HOWEVER, OF UNRELIABLE READERS.
PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in hand reading and casting of horoscopes has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.
Readings by mail; send for circular, etc.
Daily and evenings, Sunday 10 to 2.

MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17.)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.
The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.
PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.
Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.
MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.
HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
(Daily and evenings; Sunday, 9 to 2.)

RETURNED FROM HIS SUCCESSFUL EASTERN TRIP, THE GREAT, ONLY & ORIGINAL HENLEY, 335 SOUTH HILL.
The marvelous tests he performs proves the magnitude of his strange and wonderful powers. He looks so far away into the dim, mysterious future—the great beyond—across the dark chasm which separates the human body from the flitting soul—and that which is to be is told. The mist is brushed away from business ventures. The hand is so guided that failures are averted. The earth's surface is explored; its treasures laid bare to his mysterious perceptive mind, and while he gives dates, facts, and figures, his visitors sit dumfounded at the revelations he makes to them. He guarantees to help you or make no charge.

PUT ME OFF AT BEAUMONT.

BEAUMONT.

BEAUMONT.

THERE IS MONEY THERE FOR ALL.

EVERY LIVE MAN AND WOMAN SHOULD PROFIT BY THIS.

This is not a boom, but a discovery. Beaumont has been "discovered" at last and the activity is not surprising. It has the most fertile soil, the purest water, the best railway facilities and the finest climate on earth.

EVERY ARTERY OF BUSINESS THROBS WITH ENTHUSIASM.

There's room for every enterprise at Beaumont.

Good chance for a bank, newspaper, drug, jewelry, notion stores, ladies' and gent's clothing stores, contractor and builder, abstract and insurance, agricultural implements, music teacher, attorney, doctor, dentist, bicycle store, cannery, confectionery, ice cream parlor, cigar maker, dairy, feed yard, furniture, photo gallery, plumber, lumber yard and planing mill.

BANK AND NEWSPAPER COMING.

Both will be established at an early day. Clothing store already contemplated. Confectionery and ice cream parlor and other stores almost ready to start. A hundred other opportunities awaiting the man or woman wise enough to grasp the chance. The greatest possibilities confront the early birds at Beaumont.

NOT A NEW CITY, BUT A REJUVENATED ONE.

Remember that for many years the banks had Beaumont tied up hard and fast, so that not a foot of the great territory surrounding it, or of the embryo city could be sold. This whole country advanced and prospered, leaving Beaumont, with all its wonderful possibilities, chained hand and foot. Now the whole aspect of Beaumont is changed. The banks have released it and it springs forward like a hound unleashed, eager to take its place in the van of progress. No matter what your business may be, if you want an opening you can find it at Beaumont.

SUPREME IN RAIL FACILITIES.

ON THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC.

EVERY TRAIN STOPS THERE.

You can't go anywhere without stopping at Beaumont. Wages paid by the railway now amount to $8000 monthly and growing still. Great improvements under contemplation by the railway company will compel the expenditure of over $80,000.

Residents of Beaumont have bought $10,000 worth of property. They have lived there for years, and know the present and future value of it. They realize its great prospects—its certain success. They predict a city as big as Redlands or Riverside. This form of "Missouri Proof" has induced friends of Beaumonters and other discerning investors to buy $5000 more of the property. The list includes bankers, business and professional men whose names we will cheerfully furnish you. The unanimous support of the press in Los Angeles and throughout Southern California has been accorded generously to the Beaumont enterprise. The town must grow and the district must prosper, for it is fully up to the claims so enthusiastically made for it by press and public. What the eye sees the brain believes, and if you want visual proof of Beaumont's greatness go and see it for yourself. Take the Southern Pacific at 9:45, 10:30 or 1:00 o'clock at the Arcade depot. The time to Beaumont is 3½ hours. The fare for the round trip on Sundays is only $2.45, just 40 cents more than to Redlands. You can make the round trip in a day, and have three hours and a half on the ground.

WILL PAY SALARY, $50 PER MONTH OR better, and make you secretary of the industrial corporation, and a director on the board, and give you a one-third interest and ownership in the company, if you can take $6000 worth of the stock of the corporation. The company is in business in this city on one of its close-in business streets, and the business has grown so rapidly that it has gone beyond the present cash capital of the company, and the present owner's ability to do the work of the business. The company does not want an employee, but a co-owner and co-worker, one who can do the office work, including keeping the books of the company and help to build up the business, so it will pay big dividends. PREP. TEAM STRONG.

U. S. C. IS HELD TO ONE SCORE.

'Varsity Eleven Fortunate to Beat L. A. High.

Sorenson's Men Show Strong Against Champions.

Mitchell's Kicking Is the Strong Feature.

U. S. C. scored once against L. A. High yesterday, in the first big American football game of the season at Fiesta Park. The score of 6 to 0 fairly represents the merits of the two elevens. Both teams were slow in executing their plays, and frequent fumbles and misjudged punts showed the players to be still unused to the game.

Yesterday's contest was attended by about 2000 spectators. Both teams were in good condition, and but one player, quarterback Berryman, of the High School team, was forced to leave the game from injuries. In the second half he was called to the side lines by Coach Sorenson, and fainted just after he had stepped from his place on the field. He was soon revived. Cass took his place in the game. Both teams made other changes, trying out different men.

U.S.C. made the only touchdown of the game at the opening of the second half, on a cleverly executed play at the kick-off. Burek caught the ball on the 20-yard line, and returned it to Bosbyshell, the U.S.C. end, who had moved forward when Mitchell put the ball in play. Bosbyshell then had a clear field for a touchdown, as the L. A. High players had all followed the ball down on the kick-off. With three U.S.C. men as interference, he ran seventy yards and touched the ball down between the goal posts. Bridwell kicked an easy goal.

DISPUTE ARISES.

In the first half the High School claimed two points on a safety, when Mitchell punted over the U.S.C. line. In an argument between halves it was decided that the play was not a safety, but a touchback, as a U.S.C. player fell on the ball, and no points were allowed.

The work of the High School ends was not as good as was to have been expected. Capt. Mitchell repeatedly punted for forty yards, and sent the ball high, giving plenty of time for the ends to get down. Geissler and Brandt were rarely on the spot when the U.S.C. backs caught the punts. Fumbles were frequent, and had the L. A. High ends been faster, they could often have recovered the ball. Geissler's work in carrying the ball, however, was exceptional.

Because of the early stage of the football season, rests were frequent, especially in the second half. Most of the time taken out was allowed at the instance of U.S.C. players and the High School lads seemed to wear better than the collegians.

U.S.C. did much more line bucking than L.A. High, and had the most success with the pet twist buck of the coach. On tackle back and end runs both sides were unable to make their yards, and punting was resorted to after almost every down. Mitchell's booting was far superior to Bridwell's, the latter often kicking to one side, and for but a very small gain.

U.S.C. men were greatly impressed with the showing made by the High School team. For U.S.C., Burek at fullback and Bridwell, at right half, were the particular stars, although both were prone to misjudge Stan Mitchell's punts. Burek excelled in running-in the punts which he succeeded in catching, and did some very clever dodging through scattered fields.

MITCHELL PLAYS WELL.

Mitchell did the best work for the High School, and in the first half was given the ball for almost every buck. His kicking was the feature of the game. Berryman played a heady game at quarterback, and was in every play until taken from the game.

The High School team showed a bigger variety of plays, and seemed to possess a better knowledge of the game. U.S.C. used mass play to a great extent, and did not show up well in kicking or handling punts.

The High School goal was in danger several times in both halves. Soon after the kick-off, Bridwell punted to the High School five-yard line, and the preps were formed to punt out of danger, after a few ineffectual gains by bucking. This play was followed by a bad break on the part of the U.S.C. center, Crall, who passed the ball high over Bridwell's head, for a punt. The U.S.C. kicker ran back and recovered the ball in time to make a short kick, which Lull fumbled, but recovered for the High School. Mitchell and Geissler, the High School end, then executed a pretty play, in which the prep captain carried the ball as fars as he could on an end run, and then passed to Geisler, who bucked straight ahead for five yards. Following this came the play on which the High School claimed two points on a safety.

Twice more in the first half U.S.C. threatened the High School goal. U.S.C. punted for thirty yards, and Stookey fell on the ball on the High School 25-yard line. Failing to gain by bucking, Bridwell tried a place kick, but failed to lift the ball high enough, although he had an easy chance to score. High School punted from the two-yard line, Bridwell fumbled the catch, and Berryman fell on the ball. After another punt, U.S.C. took the ball and punted over the High School line, but Berryman ran it in five yards.

KICKING DUEL.

A kicking duel followed, and then U. S.C. made the only real bucking gain of the day, sending Burek out from one of their peculiar twist formations for a gain of ten yards. U.S.C. then tried to drop kick for a goal, but it was blocked, and Geissler carried it thirty yards down the field as the half closed.

In the second half, the High School team got near enough to the U.S.C. goal twice to try place kicks, which missed the posts. U.S.C. seemed to have the better enduring power, and made gains through the High School line. The work of Burek and Bridwell in running-in punts was especially good in this half. High School tried a place kick, which was blocked, but the ball was recovered by Mitchell.

High School was penalized at two critical points. The first penalty of 15 yards followed a beautifully-executed forward pass of 15 yards from Mitchell to Brandt. Referee Traeger called the team back because High School had too many men in the line. Late in the game, Mitchell punted, but the side was called back and U.S.C. given the ball, because of an off-side play by High School. U.S.C. then carried the ball near enough to try a place kick, which went wide, and was carried in 20 yards by Cass. Mitchell punted to the center of the field, and Burek ran back 25 yards through the L. A. High players, just before time was called.

MOTORING IN COUNTRY TOO NOISY FOR "CHARLEY."

Son of John W. Gates Says Next Time He Travels by Motor in the Rural Districts, It Will Be at Home. French Cows and Dogs No Respecters of Persons.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "No more motor-car tours in France for me," exclaimed Charles Gates, son of John W. Gates, the Chicago and New York multi-millionaire, to your correspondent today.

"Charley," who was educated by his father in all manner of activities from poker and the races to Wall street plunging, is essentially a child of urban luxuries. He has just returned to Paris from a trip which he took in a fast and costly automobile to Havre with his wife and mother.

"For real comfort," said "Charley," "give me a room in a New York hotel. On this trip I hardly slept a wink. Talk about the turmoil of a city—it's peace and quiet compared to the uproar of the so-called quiet and restful rural districts.

"It is impossible to get a night's repose in this country. They anchor a whole stockyard full of uneasy mooley cows under the window of your room in one of these 'peaceful' inns. The cows begin to roar before daybreak. That's the innkeeper's little dodge to make you get up early. Then they let all the curs in the village have a free right of way up and down the corridors, and get up a dog fight exactly opposite your door. The servants talk all night long, too.

"The other night in a village near Havre, a herd of cows was driven past our windows at exactly midnight, while I was trying to go to sleep. Every cow in the bunch was complaining about something. It sounded like a mass meeting in Cooper Union. They complain that our motor cars make a noise. This racket was more disturbing than an equal number of autos going by with all horns honk-honking.

"After we had tried vainly to sleep in such towns, we gave up our journey in disgust and returned to Paris. Paris is really noisier than New York, but at that it is heavenly quiet compared with the rural districts, which are far noisier than the real 'country' in the United States of America. Next time I travel by motor, it will be in my own country."

SISTER BEATS SISTER.

Miss Margaret Curtis Takes Golf Honor from the Champion by Overwhelming Score.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—Miss Margaret Curtis of the Essex County Club won the woman's national golf championship today from her sister, Harriet Curtis, the present champion, by the overwhelming score of 7 up and 6 to play.

The weather was partly cloudy and too chilly for comfort, except for the players. The sisters are members of the Essex Country Club of Manchester, and have been prominent factors in national golf for several years.

The champion played below her standard and was pitted against almost unbeatable golf, and succeeded in capturing only one hole of the twelve that were played, and this was the tenth. Margaret's total of 44 for the outward journey has not been excelled in the tournament, in which there were sixty-three starters. The score:

Miss Margaret Curtis—Out: 5, 3, 5, 4, 5, 5, 7, 4, 6—44; in, 6, 5, 3, x, x, x, x, x, x.

Miss Harriet Curtis—Out: 7, 4, 6, 6, 6, 7, 7, 4, 6—53; in, 5, 6, 4, x, x, x, x, x, x.

BATTLE OF BABIES.

CALIFORNIA DEFEATS STANFORD FRESHMEN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] California freshmen 19, Stanford Freshmen 0, was the way the score stood at the end of the fifteenth intercollegiate freshmen game between the two institutions, played on California Field, this afternoon, before an audience of 5000. Playing Rugby from start to finish, dressed in regular English Rugby togs, the California team completely outclassed the Stanford men both in knowledge of the game and in speed.

Only once in the entire contest was Stanford within the California 5-yard line, while California threatened the Cardinal goal continually. Stanford did not know what to do with the ball when it was secured, while the California play was a succession of passes and kicks. Lanagan's men were prone to hold the ball when tackled and were penalized for it several times. The Blue and Gold babies dropped the ball as soon as tackled, but suffered from off-side penalties due to overeagerness.

California made three tries and one penalty goal in the first half, but in the second Stanford bucked up and allowed her opponents but one try. Stanford's only opportunity to score came in the first half on a penalty. Reid made a nice attempt, but kicked just under the bar.

Had it not been for the kicking of Browin, the Cardinal fullback, the score would have been much larger, but time and again he sent the leather away from the danger line by finding touch from 20 to 40 yards down the side. To Cline of Los Angeles, M. Carden of Santa Ana, Dole of Riverside, and St. John were due the majority of Stanford's gains.

The California fifteen was remarkably well balanced, but Dwiggins at three-quarters was easily the star of the team. His touch kicking, accurate passing and running won much ground. Capt. Hatch, Renouf, Solinsky and Montgomery of Los Angeles were also notable, as was the unselfish playing of Jackson, who fed continually to Dwiggins. McFie of Los Angeles, and Jordan and Munn were the men most noticed in the scrum.

California danced her first serpentine on enlarged California Field, while the Stanford rooters held their bleachers and cheered their team. The blue and gold is cleberating tonight with a football show at Idora Park.

With Stanford defending the south goal, Renouf kicked off to touch, and from the throw-in California demonstrated that Taylor had successfully instilled Rugby in them. From a scrum Hatch started a passing rush to the Stanford five-yard, whence Dwiggins carried to touch. Dwiggins secured on the throw-in and passed to Swartz, who went over for the first try, which Renouf converted. California, 5; Stanford, 0.

From a beautiful kick-out of Brown's, Montgomery carried down to the 35-yard line, where the ball was scrummed. Munn secured from the ruck passed five yards to Hatch, who in turn passed to Stetson, who immediately shot to Jordan, and he charged ten yards for the second try. Renouf easily converted. California, 10; Stanford, 0.

Play changed to California territory, and the Cardinal took the ball to the California five-yard, but was held. Stanford's one chance to score came here from a California off-side, but Reid failed to convert. Dwiggins punted out, and play immediately went to the other end of the field, where on a long run and pass by Hatch to Solinsky, the third California try was made, but Renouf did not convert. California, 13; Stanford, 0. Stanford was almost immediately penalized for holding, and Renouf kicked the goal. California, 16; Stanford, 0.

Stanford rallied and held the ball in California territory until the end of the half.

The second period brought Stanford many free kicks from penalties, and Brown, who was one-half the team, made good use of every opportunity. The style of play was much the same as in the first period, Dwiggins, Hatch, Solinsky and Jackson making many long runs and passes, the longest being run pass of Dwiggins and Hatch for three-quarters of the field. Montgomery scored the only try after securing from a 5-yard scrum. Renouf failed to convet the try. California, 19; Stanford, 0.

California made three touchdowns in this period, which ended after a strong Stanford rally with the ball on California's 35-yard line. Referee Jenkinson of Vancouver gave complete satisfaction.

The line-up:

California: Full, Hotchkiss; three-quarters, Dwiggins, Renouf, Solinsky; half, Hatch (captain;) five-eighths, Montgomery, Jackson; wing forward, Stetson; forwards, Munn, Jordan, Paulsey, Parmer, Swartz, McFie, Langstroth.

Stanford; Full, Brown; three-quarters, Cline, Reid, St. John; five-eighths, Carden, Fletcher (captain;) half, Turner, Wing, Towne; forwards, Dole, Visel, Arnold, Woodville, Nolan, Evans, Woodcock.

Referee, Jenkinson, Vancouver., Touchmen, Cameron, Nevada; Howard, Santa Clara.

HOLLYWOOD WINS.

WALKS AWAY WITH SOLDIERS.

Hollywood High defeated the Los Angeles Military Academy at football yesterday afternoon by a score of 65 to 0, on the Hollywood grounds.

Good playing was done by both teams, but the Military Academy lacked weight and experience. The foothill boys' team work was excellent.

In the last half, the Academy boys played harder than in the first, but their opponents gained more from them. Hollywood made several gains by their forward passes and their interference was good.

Taylor, of the Academy eleven, did some splendid tackling, as did Bailey, McGahey and Minnett.

Taylor, Candee, Slaughter and Brower were the best players for Hollywood, while Peders, Eastman, Knowles, and Wallace did excellent line work.

The success of the Hollywood team is largely due to the training of Coach Sellen, who has done good work with the boys.

Hollywood High will play Pasadena High next Saturday at Hollywood.

The line-up was as follows:

L.A.M.A.		Hollywood.
Bailey	r.e.l.	Candee
McGahey	r.t.l.	Priester

MEETING FIZZLES OUT.

NO PEACE IN SIGHT.

Of the three remaining colleges, Prof. Sumner of Pomona and two Occidental students were the only representatives to put in an appearance and the meeting was postponed by the president of the conference.

GAME OF THEIR LIVES.

CASTAWAYS BEAT SAN BERNARDINO.

HIGH SCHOOL BOYS HOLD TEAM TO EIGHT POINTS.

Pat Higgins and Edwards Score Tries, but They Are Not Converted Into Goals—High School Boys Give Veterans a Scare by Taking Ball Close to Goal Line.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In one of the hardest and fastest games of Rugby football ever played in Southern California, the Los Angeles Castaways today defeated the San Bernardino High School team by a score of 8 to 0.

From the first sound of the whistle until time was called, the 500 spectators present were in a great fever of excitement, rushing onto the field at stages of the game, until time was called and the field cleared.

Although the Los Angeles team outweighed the local lads by at least fifteen pounds to the man, the High School boys played the visiting team one of the hardest games ever seen in this locality.

The Los Angeles team arrived late, and as soon as possible the game was called, without either team receiving any practice. San Bernardino took the kick-off. Forker kicked, and before the ball could be returned the local lads had the ball downed on the Castaways' 10-yard line.

It looked for a few moments like the San Bernardino team would score in the first few minutes, but a clever kick by Edwards landed the ball in touch at the 25-yard line.

From here on the heavy scrum of the Los Angeles team worked the ball to San Bernardino's 10-yard line, and then Pat Higgins made one of his remarkable runs, landing the ball safe over the goal line. The try was not converted.

San Bernardino again kicked off and from that time on until the half was called the ball remained in the center of the field.

At the opening of the second half San Bernardino advanced the ball to within two yards of the Castaways' goal when a foul was called and Los Angeles received a free kick, placing the ball in the center of the field. After several dribbles Edwards succeeded in making the second try, but Tom Higgins failed to kick goal, making the score 8 to 0.

When the whistle sounded for the end of the game the High School boys had the ball within two yards of the goal and seemed bent on making a try butall hopes died as the whistle sounded.

The line-up:

New Rack Track.

A. S. Webster of Santa Monica is authority for the statement that a race track company has been organized to hold forth at Santa Monica, and that the papers will be signed tomorrow. He says that this means that the buildings now at Ascot Park will be moved to the beach town, but this is probably only conjecture, although it is rumored that "Curly" Brown, a well-known eastern horseman, has had a track in view for some time between here and the ocean.

WANTED—JOB FOR A WOMAN.

A Professional Chauffeuse Turns to West for Help.

Discriminated Against at Home Because of Sex.

She Can Run and Repair Motor Boat or Auto.

Does any one in Los Angeles want a careful, considerate, competent, cautious, clean and cheerful chauffeur—who is also a woman?

The automobile editor of The Times has received a letter from Miss Kathryn Lockwood of Chicago, who is a professional chauffeur. She feels that she is being discriminated against in her own city, and wants to come West. While a woman driver is something new, Miss Lockwood pleads the advantages of her sex so well that she should get a job from some one very quickly. In part she says:

"I am only waiting an opportunity to demonstrate to the public in general that women will be as great a success in the automobile trade as we have proven to be in other lines of business. The advantages in having a woman driver are:

"Cautiousness—A natural quality of a woman, and the first requisite of a good chauffeur.

"Cleanliness—A clean machine will last twice as long as one which is allowed to go with only the sides and tires washed. In cleaning a machine thoroughly every day, bolts and nuts just working loose are found and tightened, saving the chance of breakdown. Cleanliness is a prime natural quality of women.

"Frugality—A natural quality of women, very helpful to the owner of the automobile.

"Good Habits—Many more reasons could be named, but none which would be better recommendation than this. Men drink and smoke, and both are against a chauffeur.

"Why is it that I am discriminated against, simply because I am a woman? If I can do the same work and give more satisfaction than a man, why not give me a trial?

"I am willing to go on any tour, or ride in any race—I will, in fact, go any place on the globe that an automobile will go. I am a good talker, a good saleswoman, and I can repair and run both automobiles and motor boats. I would prefer a position as a demonstrator with some firm, but I will take work in a public garage, in a private family, or I will drive a commercial truck. I will take entire charge of my car, keep it clean, and do all my own repairing. I am not afraid of hard work.

"All I want is an opportunity to prove my ability in my chosen profession. I am ready to furnish references. Is there any one in California who will give an energetic, ambitious woman a chance to make good?"

Is there any one in Los Angeles who will give Miss Lockwood a job? If there is, the automobile editor of The Times will on request either forward letters to Miss Lockwood, or furnish her address.

Incidentally, Miss Lockwood strenuously denies that she will discard her skirts for men's raiment. "I have no intention whatever of discarding my own apparel," she says.

AUTOMOBILE, AHOY, SIR!

Lookout Men on Motor Cars the Latest Wrinkle Developed by English Millionaire Driver.

Even a landsman knows that ships have lookout men—but whoever heard or dreamed of lookout men for automobiles?

Yet in England they have become a fad, and will probably occasion lots of sport. Owners of motor cars in England experience a great deal of trouble owing to the many sharp turns in English roads, which are nearly always concealed by tall hedges or walls. Efforts have been made to have the hedges cut down, but only a storm of protest has resulted. Then a London millionaire solved the problem by having a "lookout" erected on the top of his car, and placed a man with a megaphone there. Others took up the fad, and now in passing through rural England you may at any time hear, as two autos approach:

"Car on your starboard bow, sir."

Tour to Bay City.

Norman B. Abrams of Los Angeles will leave on Tuesday for San Francisco. He will take his family, and will drive his Stoddard-Dayton touring car. He expects to be absent about four weks. He will also visit points outside of San Francesco.

READY FOR BOX SPRINGS MEET.

ANNUAL HILL CLIMB PLANNED FOR THANKSGIVING.

Course is Being Put in Perfect Condition—Turns Widened, Tops of Peaks Cut Off, and Roadbed Graveled and Oiled—Road from Riverside Also Improved.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 12.—Preliminary plans are in progress for the annual automobile hill climbing contest up the Box Springs grade on Thanksgiving Day, and autoists are anticipating the most successful climb that has taken place over this course. This will be the third Thanksgiving Day contest that has been held under the direction of Riverside automobilists. In the first meet there were ten entries, in the second there were seventy-six, and this year it is expected that even more machines will make the climb.

The four-mile course will be put in perfect condition for the event. Some of the short turns have been widened, the tops of two of the sharp peaks have been cut off to avoid the uncertainty of the blind turns, and the roadbed will be made as smooth as a race track. It has been graveled and will be oiled at once and thoroughly rolled, eliminating any possibility of mud. The road between Riverside and the foot of the grade has also been put in excellent condition. Timing will be done over a private telephone wire.

On account of the improvements in the course, it is believed that the best time over the four-mile grade this year will be five minutes or less. Last year the fastest time was 5:41½, made by A. B. Daniels of San Diego in a six-cylinder Stevens-Durea. Mr. Daniels thus holds the big cup put up by the Automobile Dealers of Southern California last year for the best time up the hill, regardless of price of machine or its horse power. The cup is a perpetual one, and must be won three times in succession to become the permanent possession of the holder. The boast has been made by some of the dealers of San Diego that they are going to hold the cup.

In addition to this trophy, ten or a dozen other cups will be offered. The classes, which will soon be announced, will be arranged to cover all makes of machines. Two classes for motorcycles will probably be included, one for single-cylinder machines and the other a free-for-all.

The contest will be held under the auspices of the Riverside Automobile Dealers' Association, of which C. A. Dundas is chairman and secretary. Mr. Dundas will answer any correspondence in regard to the meet, and the condition of the roads.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL.

Sometimes a Motor Car Will Go Through a Disastrous Accident, and Come Up Fresh.

It is a constant source of amazement to those who handle automobiles, to see them go through the most disastrous accidents with no vital injuries. What a motor can stand is really an unknown quantity. Sometimes a car will go to pieces with apparently little reason for it, but generally the case is the other way round—the car will refuse to be consigned to the scrap heap, when by all the laws of torsion and stress it should be in little bits of pieces.

An illustration of this recently occurred in San Diego, when a Reo car owned by Mr. Harrison did a lofty tumbling act that should have sent it to the refuse pile. Mr. Harrison accidentally put on the reverse when near the top of a hill. The car, obedient to the push of the pedal, slid gracefully off the top of a hundred-foot embankment. It rolled over and over, bumped a few times, and came to rest down in the little valley, looking like the remains of a boiler explosion.

When the mechanics came to look at it, however, they simply put it on its wheels, connected up a few damaged rods, fixed a leak in the gasoline tank—and drove the battered wagon back to the garage on its own power.

SHETTLER CHANGES TACTICS.

Exponent of One Car Agency Breaks Away from His Established Precedent by Taking on Wayne.

Leon T. Shettler, long the champion of the one car agency, has changed his policy of handling one car exclusively. He has felt the need of having a four-cylinder line to supplement the Reo, and now has taken the Wayne agency. He says that in one year he will make the new acquisition as popular as he has made the Reo.

The principal model of the Wayne for 1908 is the "Thirty." Its chief mechanical feature is the selective type transmission, which is placed on the rear axle. It was stated that the Wayne people would abandon this feature, but they state that they are perfectly satisfied with it. In other features the Wayne is constructed along the lines of standard practice for a medium-powered car. This year an accelerator pedal has been added, so that the control is now fashioned after the dictates of advanced practice.

The new Wayne model has the reputation of being more powerful than its rating would indicate.

MITCHELLS SOON HERE.

Few Changes from 1907 Type, Mainly in Increase of Power and Lowering of Frame and Body.

The Greer-Robbins Company are anxiously awaiting their Mitchell demonstrator, which will arrive the end of the week, if the railroad company is kind. The Mitchell this year will be seen in three models, as last year, but instead of two touring car models and one runabout, as was the case in 1907, there will be one touring car and two runabouts. One of the runabouts will have a rumble seat, and the other a beetle-back.

The principal changes in the car have been to increase the power of the 20-horse-power moled, by adding one-fourth of an inch to the bore of the cylinders. The car will, however, be rated the same. All the models will be hung lower, and will have longer springs. The seats are nearer the ground, and the whole frame nearer the center of gravity, without lowering the clearance.

One or two mechanical changes have been made. The design of the walking beam valve action has been changed a little, to make it quieter, and in the runabout, the rear ractos have been changed to secure better hill climbing qualities on the top gear.

In the runabout, the frame has been made longer, so that the radiator sets squarely over the front axle.

OFFERS HANDSOME CUP.

A. Kelly of the Del Monte Hotel has offered a handsome cup for a 1000-mile race, to be pulled off on the track near the big tourist hostelry. The offer was made yesterday to Murray Page of the Success Automobile Company, after Mr. Kelly learned of Page's defi. The Locomobile man has offered to race the Pierce Arrow any distance for a side bet of $1000. A race of from 500 to 1000 miles is preferred. E. E. Calster, manager of the company, offers to race any American-built car.

Autoists are anxious that such a race should be pulled off in Los Angeles. The course at Agricultural Park is adapted to a twenty-four-hour run, and already several have expressed a desire to enter. In such a race the White, the Locomobile, the Pierce Arrow and the White could be counted on to enter. Several others are almost persuaded.

The Del Monte offer is alluring; now it remains for a Los Angeles man to come forward with an even better offer. Page is willing to race anywhere in the State that a contest can be arranged.

May Take It to England.

Capt. A. Northcott Winter, an officer of the English army on furlough, has just arrived at Victoria in a model "K" Tourist, with which he started some time ago from Los Angeles. Capt. Winter first went down to Mexico, and then made the long run from Mexico to Canada. He says that if he cannot get his furlough extended, he will take the car back with him to England, to use there. If he does, it will be the first Tourist in England.

REACHING.

DEALERS ARE AFTER PLUMS.

DESIRABLE AGENCIES SOON TO CHANGE HANDS.

Race for Prizes Interests Many. Changes Will Affect Gasoline Row. Tendency is to Specialize on One Car—Outlook for Business Particularly Good.

The automobile dealers are scrambling for plums. It is known that at least a half dozen desirable agencies will be placed and replaced before the new year. The eagerness of a few has caused considerable interest in the race for the special prizes.

The Lord Motor Car Company will direct its attention exclusively to the Studebaker car. This will leave the Kissel Kar and the Cleveland open for takers. The former is a plum desired by several of the dealers. Leon Shettler is in the van of the running and will probably get this agency.

The Wayne will leave Gasoline Row for Grand avenue. Shettler has closed the contract for this car. There was some scrambling for this agency, though no one came out into the open in the race.

The Pierce-Racine people are winding up their affairs and ere long will go out of business. They are not quitting under fire, as they have sold all the cars placed in their charge. Other lines of effort will occupy the attention of the men who have had charge of this car for the past year.

The Winton agency will change hands. A San Francisco man will have charge. The Success Automobile Company, because of stress of business, cannot handle the car next year. They will devote their entire energy to the Locomobile.

At the last dealers' meeting nineteen answered the roll call. This will probably be low-water mark. One by one men who have figured in the automobile game have dropped out, but others are taking their places. According to those who are keeping a line on local trade, affairs are now on a more solid basis. There is no apprehension on the part of those who remain.

Business is picking up, say those who are foremost among the dealers. There is no desire to cry hard times, and the present rather dull season is to be succeeded by a steady demand for both touring cars and runabouts.

OPEN NEW CLUBHOUSE.

Motorcyclists Branch Out With Increased Membership—Plan Run to San Fernando Mission.

The Los Angeles Motorcycle Club have removed to their new clubhouse, No. 120 West Thirty-third street, and will have their opening Monday night. All the club members and friends are invited. The quarters are spacious and are fitted up in first-class style, having billiard halls and other amusements that are entertaining as well as instructive. The occupying of new quarters was necessitated by constant growth in the membership.

It has been decided to have each third Friday of every month set aside as an evening of entertainment for lady friends of members. The opening event for the fairer sex will be on Friday night, when there will be a reception and ball at the clubhouse.

The club will enjoy a pleasure run today, leaving the clubhouse, at 8:00 this morning and running to San Fernando and return, with side trips to the San Fernando Mission, and to Newhall via Fremont Pass. Luncheon has been arranged for at the Fernando Hotel. All motorcyclists of the city are invited. Within a half mile of Newhall, in the Placerita Cañon, wild California cherries are found this season in abundance, and no doubt many will have their first taste of this delicious fruit.

FENNER PREPARING TROPHY.

Winner of North Baldy Race Will Offer Gold and Silver Medal for Next Year's Contest.

F. C. Fenner, who has been the winner of the 100-mile race to North Baldy Peak for two years, is now anxious for stronger competition in this race. He intends to make it an annual event and is therefore having a $250 gold and silver trophy made to be conferred on the winner of the 1908 race. It will be in the form of a medal suspended from several bars, to be worn on the breast like a decoration. Reproduced in colored enamel is a scene at finish of the last race, and on the bars, held together by the various chains, and on the large medallion are the proper inscriptions, telling of the race, distance, time, etc.

Mr. Fenner reserves the right to enter a car again, but will, he says, use a 1908 White steamer, instead of the 1905 White runabout he has used in both previous races. Capt. Ryus will again drive the Fenner car.

The entry fee will be $500 for each car or possibly half that sum if contestants think best. The entry fees will form a purse, all of which will go to the winner in addition to the splendid Fenner trophy.

Harry Mason a Diamond Man.

H. S. Mason, who has been the resident manager of the Fisk Rubber Co. for several years, in charge of the branch house here, has resigned to go with the big branch house of the Diamond Rubber Co. here and will travel all Southern California.

BACK TO LOS ANGELES.

William Ruess Returns from Trip to Factories With Increased Respect for California Buyer.

William Ruess, sales manager for the White garage, is one of the local automobile men who has recently returned from a trip in the East. He is, like all Californians who journey to the other side of the continent, glad to be back again and he states that he brings back with him a much better idea of the judgment and general knowledge of automobiles shown by owners in Los Angeles than he took away with him. "I find," said Mr. Ruess, "that people in the East have nothing like the intimate knowledge of the automobile that our people have in California which only goes to show what the manufacturers are beginning to discover, that California, especially the southwest section, is the greatest section of the country for the automobile industry."

From Los Angeles Mr. Ruess went to San Francisco. He stayed there a few days and then went on to Sacramento, where he acted as starter at the race meeting. Here he introduced a new method of starting which proved wonderfully effective. Instead of standing at the starting line with his flag, he employed a light and very quick-starting machine driven by an expert chauffeur. In this machine he accompanied the starters back to the three-quarter pole, where all entries lined up for the flying starts. At the word all the cars started and Mr. Ruess being on the outside and in a light machine was able to run up to the starting point with them and keep them in line until he waved his flag. Only once did he have to make a restart, owing to one car going ahead before the starting line was reached. He cautioned the offender and had no trouble thereafter, every single race being started at the first attempt.

Mr. Ruess saw the accident to Kelly, the driver of the Dragon car, which resulted in his death later. Naturally, it cast a gloom over the rest of the meeting. The track at Sacramento was very fast, but dreadfully dusty, which made it bad for spectators and competitors who did not have the front place.

From Sacramento Mr. Ruess went to Chicago where he stayed just long enough to change cars, for Toledo, where the factory of the Pope-Toledo Company is situated.

The Pope-Toledo people have awaked to the fact that California is the greatest market for automobiles in the country and they have gone so far as to consign the first shipment of 1908 cars to Los Angeles. The first car to leave the factory will be a big-power runabout and will be shipped to the White Garage. Mr. Ruess will use it as his demonstrator. He says that this one car will actually be the proverbial sixty miles an hour on the road.

In Hartford, whither Mr. Ruess went after leaving Toledo, he had an amusing experience. He was running along at a fair speed through the streets, when he noticed a policeman working the block system which they have in use in that city to enforce the speed ordinance. There was no number on his car, so he was enabled to elude the officer at the next signal station. However, the make of car was recognized and the police made inquiries at the Pope-Hartford factory to find out the name of the driver. Two days later another Pope-Hartford agent was driving the same car over the identical route taken by Mr. Ruess, he was stopped by the policeman and arrested for the Los Angeles man's offense. By that time the latter had left Hartford and the victim of the mistake had quite a time to clear himself.

"Everybody in the East is talking about the coming shows," said Mr. Ruess, "in fact they are pretty nearly automobile show mad. I would like to have stayed to both shows but had too much business to attend to in Los Angeles, which little old burg is quite good enough for me."

NIGHT FOR EVERY ONE.

Merchants, Officials, Engineers and Military Men Each Have Date at Automobile Show.

Special nights for special classes that are interested in the development of the motor car industry will be a feature of the eighth annual automobile show of the Automobile Club of America, and the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association.

Following the private view of club members on Thursday afternoon, October 24, there will be what is known as "Merchants' Night" on October 25, when the prominent merchants of New York and vicinity together with the heads of their delivery departments will be invited to attend and view the machines exhibited, particularly those of the commercial type. October 26 will be known as "City Officials' Night," when invitations will be extended to all heads of departments in New York City to view the cars in their autumnal setting.

Monday night, October 28, will be known as "Engineer's Night," when the members of the principal engineering clubs, societies and associations will be asked to visit the show. Invitations have been extended to the Engineer's Club, the Society of Automobile Engineers, the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the New York Electrical Society and last, but not least, to the members of the Mechanical Branch of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers, the technical sharps of the rival show which will be held the week following. Tuesday night, October 29, will be "Society Night," while Wednesday night, October 30, will be known as "Military Night," when the heads of the Army and Navy and National Guard will be the guests of the club.

Hamlin Going East.

Ralph Hamlin, Franklin agent and air-cooled exponent, leaves Tuesday for a trip to the East. He goes first to San Francisco, to see conditions there. Then he is going direct to St. St. Louis, to watch the balloon race, which starts on October 21. From the aeronautic meet he will hurry to the factory. After finding out all that John Wilkinson knows, Hamlin is going to take one of his 1908 allotment of Franklins, and drive to New York by way of Boston. In New York he will visit both automobile shows, and then he will return, perhaps by way of the factory at Syracuse, to little old Los Angeles.

POPE TOLEDO REDIVIVUS.

Experience of Past Year Utilized to Turn Out Car Modeled on European Practice.

In the leading automobile factories in this country there is a steady trend for uniformity in most parts, but the individuality of some makes is preserved, while others throw aside one design and try new plans occasionally. This was the case in the Pope-Toledo factory last year. For several years the designers were collecting points of European practice, and these was embodied in the 1907 model, but a great strike put the factory in bad condition, and with strike-breakers and careless workmen the new car met with many small difficulties. There was but one thing to do—to correct every weakness and improve any detail that had ont been perfect. Needed information was easily gained, for agents everywhere reported the weak points—generally in emphatic language—and also suggested changes that would be of advantage in their respective localities.

The 1908 model of the Pope-Toledo, of which the makers are most proud, is the Type XVII. It has a wheel base of 126 inches, and 36-inch wheels. It is rated at fifty-horse-power at a medium speed. The makers guarantee a speed of fifty-two miles an hour with a full load, which means seven persons and baggage.

A double system of ignition is used, with two sets of spark plugs, one connected with a Bosch magneto, and the other with the storage battery and coils, each system having separate switches. Nothing but chrome-nickel steel is used in the car, and the frame itself is said to be four times ass trong as it was formerly.

Three sets of brakes are used on the Pope-Toledo, an external contracting-band brake between the transmission and the jack shaft, operated by a foot pedal, and two sets of external expanding brakes on rear wheels, one operated by a foot pedal and the other by side lever, used as an emergency brake.

The transmission is the same as introduced in the 1907 car, four speeds forward and reverse, selective. Every bearing in the car is D.W.F. imported.

The factory will, during 1908, guarantee each Pope-Toledo from from repairs, replacements, adjustments and similar troubles.

GOHEEN'S GOOD TEAM.

OVERWHELMING IS THE SCORE.

Occidental 'Varsity Defeats Whittier State Boys.

Academy Team Loses to the Throop Eleven.

Rush's Long Run Is Bright Feature of Game.

In a football double-header yesterday afternoon on Occidental campus, the Presbyterian 'varsity defeated Whittier State School by the score of 41 to 0, and Throop Polytechnic Institute walloped the Occident Academy eleven, 7 to 6.

The State school team was no match for the Presbyterians, and the Occidental backs and tackles advanced the ball at will. The Presbyterians made all their tallies in the first half. In the second session the scrub team was substituted, and the Whitier boys held them for no score.

The game demonstrated the fact that the Presbyterians are strong in offensive play. B. Merrill, F. Thomson, Collins, Wieman and Crane are hard men to stop, and with Rush at quarterback the team has a man who is expected to distinguish himself before the season is over.

Although outclassed, the State school boys put up a plucky game. The men in the line met the onslaughts of the heavy Presbyterians without flinching, and took the heavy drubbing without a murmur.

The one feature of the game was a pretty 70-yard run by Rush for a touchdown. He received a punt on Occidental's 50-yard line, and with good interference, picked his way through the opposing team for the longest run of the contest.

Willoughby, the big center and guard, played a strong game in the line, and in following the ball.

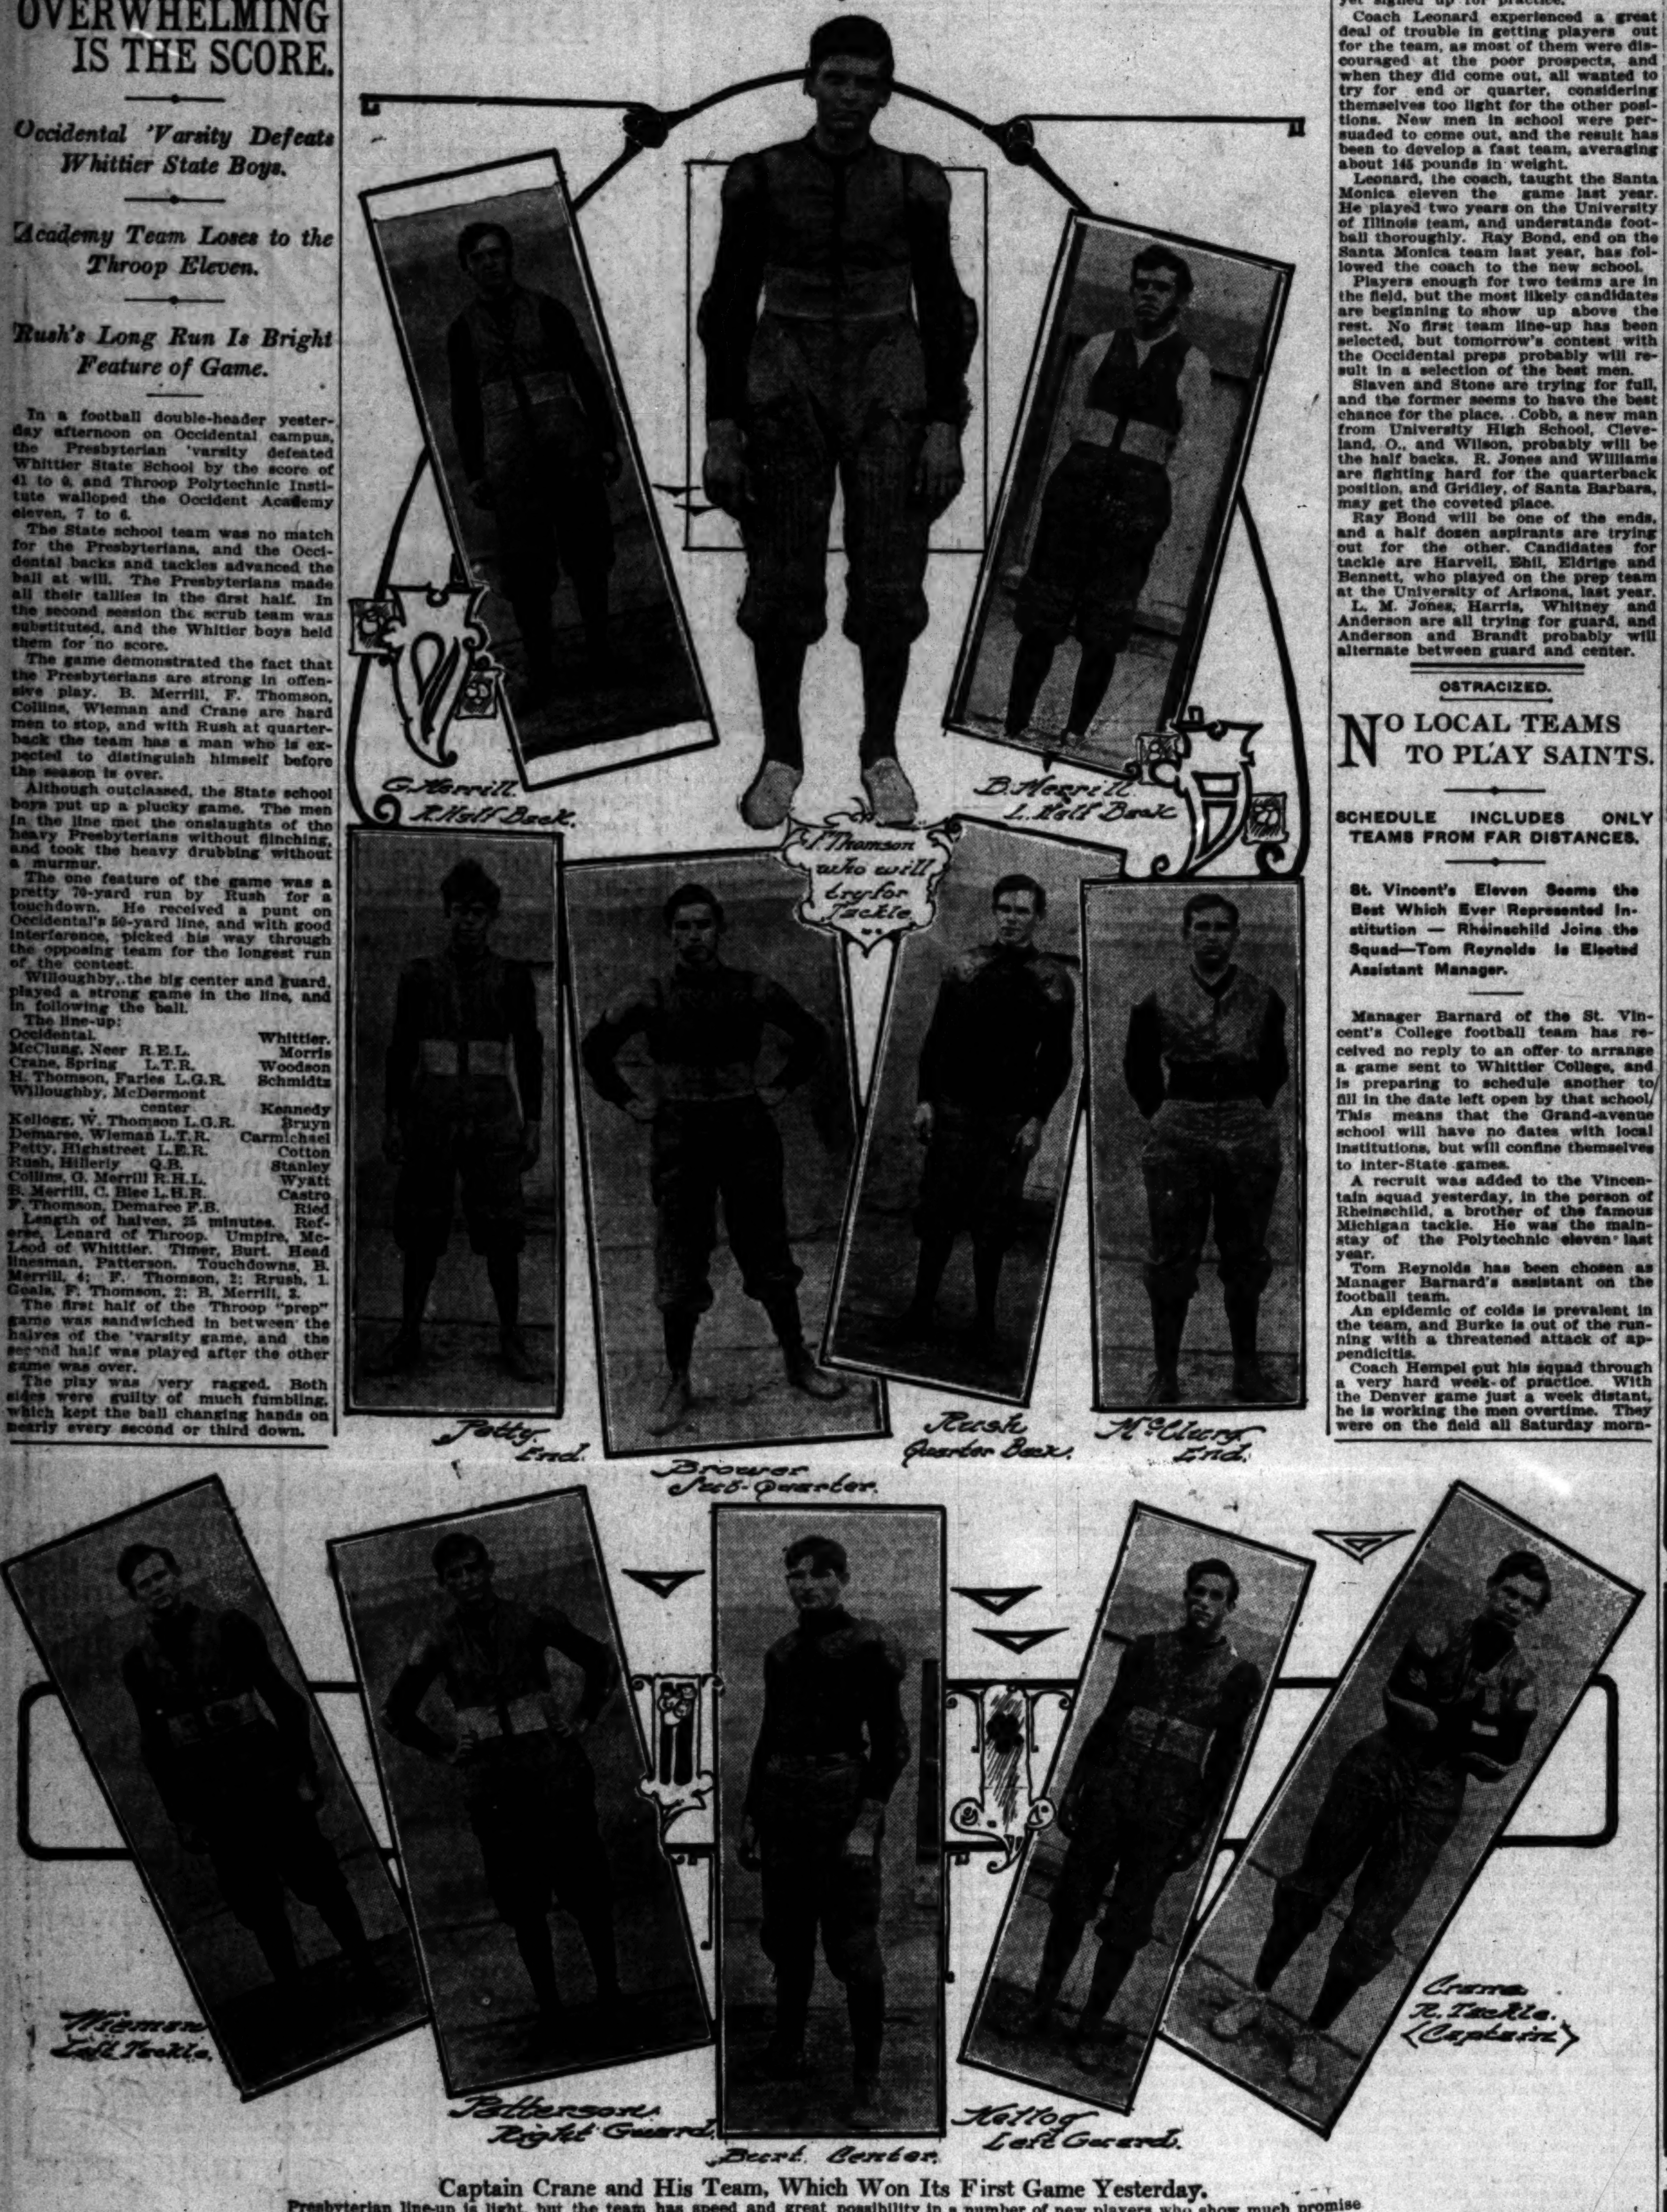
The first half of the Throop "prep" game was sandwiched in between the halves of the 'varsity game, and the second half was played after the other game was over.

The play was very ragged. Both sides were guilty of much fumbling, which kept the ball changing hands on nearly every second or third down.

OCCIDENTAL FOOTBALL SQUAD SHOWS NEW FACES.



Captain Crane and His Team, Which Won Its First Game Yesterday.

Presbyterian line-up is light, but the team has speed and great possibility in a number of new players who show much promise

Throop scored in the first half as a result of securing the ball through a fumble on Occidental's 5-yard line. Brandt carried the ball across the goal line.

In the second half the "preps" took a decided brace. Carver, the best footballist in the academy, got in the game for the first time this season and seemed to inspire confidence in his associates.

The "preps" scored in the second half on a spectacular run of 80 yards by Bradbeer. Carver kicked the goal, and the score stood 6 to 5 in favor of the academy team.

With the score against them, the Throop players increased their pace, and finally succeeded in pushing the Presbyterians back over their own line for a safety, making just even points to cinch the game.

L. Jones and Williams played a good game for the Pasadenans. Burke, Bradbeer, Moore, Gilmore and Carver showed up well for Occidental.

STANFORD QUARREL ADJUSTED.

Cardinal Team to Play University of Nevada—Castaways Are Being Overlooked.

Stanford has patched up the quarrel with the University of Nevada, and the two Rugby teams will play at Stanford October 23. Several weeks ago Nevada cancelled, without any explanation, the game which Manager Knupp had scheduled to play at Reno.

Stanford was incensed at the action of Nevada, and intended to ignore the Sagebrushers on their trip to the Coast. The difficulty has been patched up, however, and Nevada will meet the Cardinal fifteen as well as the Blue and Gold, and a comparison of the rival California teams will be possible before the month is closed.

Manager Knupp has also scheduled two more games with the Barbarians, October 19 and 26. These are the dates originally planned for the Castaways on their northern trip, but Knupp has said nothing more about a return game for the Los Angeles players.

Teams Fail to Score.

One of the hardest-fought football games ever played by a grammar school football team came off at Whittier State school, between the Whittiers and the Hoover-street team of this city, yesterday, the score being 0 to 0. One of the features of the game was the playing of Harry and Ralph Harlow of the Hoover team.

WORK BY THEORY.

PASADENA BOYS MAKE PROGRESS.

VETERANS MAY BE DISPLACED BY NEW MATERIAL.

Last Year's Team Intact, but New Students Work Hard for Regular Places—Gibbs Unable to Play Because of Parental Objections—Capt. Kern Goes to Fullback.

Pasadena High has two teams in the field working every afternoon under the direction of Coach M. Parker, a former big league baseball player. Parker is a good deal of a theorist in football, as his actual playing experience was confined to a prep. school near Cornell, but he has ideas, and is getting good results with the Pasadena material.

All of last year's eleven but two are out for the team, but the prospects are that some of the veterans will be beaten out for places by new men. Gibbs, half-back last year, cannot play this year because of objections raised by his parents, and Blick, the fullback, has left school.

Capt. Kern, end last year, will take Blick's place, and Brownell, from South Dakota, is apparently slated to replace Gibbs's loss.

Hollywood High will be the first team Pasadena will meet, on October 19. On November 2, the Santa Ana eleven will be encountered. November 9 is an open date; Los Angeles High will be played on November 16; no game has been scheduled on November 23, and on Thanksgiving Day Throop will be met in the final game of the season.

Prominent candidates for the various positions on the team are: Ends, Millsap, Smith and Hill; tackles, Card, (manager) and Bennett; guards, Landreth, formerly of Harvard, and Stimson; center, Laughery; quarter-back, Rice, who has filled the position for three years.

Two sets of half-backs are being worked out. Ross and Brownell make up one pair, and Smith and Wachob the other. The team averages about 155 pounds.

LIGHT, BUT FAST.

THREE VETERANS AT THROOP POLY.

COACH LEONARD MUST BUILD UP NEW FOOTBALL TEAM.

Early Troubles and Disputes Cause Poor Beginning, but the Eleven Is Being Developed Rapidly—Boys Are Light, but Promise to Produce Great Speed.

Throop Polytechnic is developing a football team about a nucleus of but three veterans. The first game will be played tomorrow at Occidental, with the prep team. Santa Ana will be played on the following Saturday, and Manager Wilson hopes to arrange a game with San Diego High on October 26. Hollywood will be played November 16, Los Angeles High November 23, and Pasadena in the big game of the season, on Thanksgiving Day.

Of last year's team, Wilson, half, and Tyler and Jones, the ends, are back in school. Jones will play quarterback, this year, and Tyler probably will be one of the backs, although he has not yet signed up for practice.

Coach Leonard experienced a great deal of trouble in getting players out for the team, as most of them were discouraged at the poor prospects, and when they did come out, all wanted to try for end or quarter, considering themselves too light for the other positions. New men in school were persuaded to come out, and the result has been to develop a fast team, averaging about 145 pounds in weight.

Leonard, the coach, taught the Santa Monica eleven the game last year. He played two years on the University of Illinois team, and understands football thoroughly. Ray Bond, end on the Santa Monica team last year, has followed the coach to the new school.

Players enough for two teams are in the field, but the most likely candidates are beginning to show up above the rest. No first team line-up has been selected, but tomorrow's contest with the Occidental preps probably will result in a selection of the best men.

Slaven and Stone are trying for full, and the former seems to have the best chance for the place. Cobb, a new man from University High School, Cleveland, O., and Wilson, probably will be the half backs. R. Jones and Williams are fighting hard for the quarterback position, and Gridley, of Santa Barbara, may get the coveted place.

Ray Bond will be one of the ends, and a half dozen aspirants are trying out for the other. Candidates for tackle are Harvell, Ehil, Eldrige and Bennett, who played on the prep team at the University of Arizona, last year.

L. M. Jones, Harris, Whitney and Anderson are all trying for guard, and Anderson and Brandt probably will alternate between guard and center.

OSTRACIZED.

NO LOCAL TEAMS TO PLAY SAINTS.

SCHEDULE INCLUDES ONLY TEAMS FROM FAR DISTANCES.

St. Vincent's Eleven Seems the Best Which Ever Represented Institution — Rheinschild Joins the Squad—Tom Reynolds Is Elected Assistant Manager.

Manager Barnard of the St. Vincent's College football team has received no reply to an offer to arrange a game sent to Whittier College, and is preparing to schedule another to fill in the date left open by that school. This means that the Grand-avenue school will have no dates with local institutions, but will confine themselves to inter-State games.

A recruit was added to the Vincentain squad yesterday, in the person of Rheinschild, a brother of the famous Michigan tackle. He was the mainstay of the Polytechnic eleven last year.

Tom Reynolds has been chosen as Manager Barnard's assistant on the football team.

An epidemic of colds is prevalent in the team, and Burke is out of the running with a threatened attack of appendicitis.

Coach Hempel put his squad through a very hard week of practice. With the Denver game just a week distant, he is working the men overtime. They were on the field all Saturday morning running signals, bucking a dummy, and having hard scrimmages.

The result of the week's work is a noticeable improvement. In the High School practice game the line did not charge, and the back field played high. Hempel has been working to overcome these deficiences by having the men play straight football against the second eleven. In operating the bucking dummy, a board was nailed across a set of parallel bars, about the height of an opposing line, and covered with a mat. This was hauled out on the campus, and for added weight men stood between the bars. The players lined up and were sent against the dummy in squads of three, the idea being to hit low with the shoulder, force the machine back two steps, and fall in position to block a line play. It is a hard test, and the man with the strength is easily picked.

It is Hempel's policy never to pick his line men before a game. No man has a cinch on his position, and every one has a fighting chance. The Vincentian bunch have been keeping strict training rules. Coach Roesch sees that all men are in their quarters by 8:30 o'clock, and the door is locked.

The daily routine begins with an hour and a half signal work in the morning, a half-hour blackboard talk at noon, practice from 3:30 o'clock until dark, with a second lesson on the board. The players have entered into the spirit of the game and are physically fit for a gruelling contest.

The Saints will have another afternoon of scrimmage work with L. A. High Tuesday. It will be the last of the hard work in that line before the big game, October 19. Hemphill will have the eleven play straight football until Thursday. The remaining two days will be devoted to a further perfection of the forward passes and new trick formations.

Stoney will be given the first try at right half with Galt and Whit Nast completing the first set of backs. Had Klem not injured his ankle in all probability he would have filled this position. Huppert will do the punting. He uses a pretty spiral averaging close to 50 yards. Stoney is quite capable in this line, but has not been on the field long enough to insure accuracy.

NO LOCAL SHOW THIS YEAR.

Dealers' Association Decides Expense and Difficulties of Housing Both Too Great.

At the last meeting of the Automobile Dealers' Association of Southern California, it was unanimously decided that the association would not hold an automobile show this fall or winter. The main reason advanced for this action is the lack of any building large enough to house the exhibit. The growth of the trade since last year has been so great that there would be no room for visitors if every exhibit was given place.

The association also feels that the expense of a show is too heavy for the local dealers to carry. In the eastern shows, a large part, if not all, of the expense is borne by the manufacturers. In the case of Los Angeles, the local dealers have to bear nearly every bit of the expense, and when it becomes necessary to bring cars by express, as it was last winter, the cost is very great.

NOT PACK HORSES.

TIMELY TIPS FOR HUNTERS.

SUGGESTIONS TO THOSE WHO WILL SEEK QUAIL.

Mistakes of Overloading With Needless Junk—Light Guns, and Not Too Many Shells—Clothing and Canteen—Proper Footgear a Necessity—Care of the Dog.

Outfitting for the quail season is monopolizing the attention of hunters. Quail hunting in California necessitates a great deal of walking under conditions that frequently are very unfavorable. The experienced hunter pays particular attention to his feet and the lightness of his apparel. Other considerations are of less importance.

The value of carefully selected, perfectly-fitting footgear to the quail hunter cannot be overestimated. It may make or mar the entire trip. Sore feet are the most persistent displeasure imaginable.

Good hunting shoes of soft leather, not waterproof—all such sweat and draw the feet—liberally nailed on the soles, are requisite. The soles should be thick to prevent stone bruise. The nails are put on in a sort of wedge outline with the tip to the toe, and about four nails in the heel will suffice. Some like heels; others prefer the flat-footed sole. It has the advantage of protecting the ankle.

A small canteen is a necessity, and it should be filled with water fresh the night before, the outside wet, and the whole affair hung in the breeze overnight. Pleasant, cool draughts are thus assured.

A light sixteen or twenty-gauge gun is the best weapon for quail shooting. It necessitates a good shot, but either arm is deadly when pointed by an expert. The gun is lighter; the shells are less bulky; great weight is saved. The importance of this detail is such that experienced men calculate carefully just how many shells they want to kill the limit, and carry no more. Few take over two boxes, or fifty. When they do, the extra boxes are cached somewhere in the line of march, left with the lunch to save lugging weight.

A thin skeleton coat aptly described by a veteran sportsman as a "string of pockets," with just enough cloth between to hold them together, is a universal favorite for quail hunting. Corduroy is hot; most men prefer light khaki, which is as enduring in the brush.

The quail hunter may expect to perspire and should dress with this idea in mind. It is well to take along a good warm coat to wear going and coming; it may be left with the rest of the cache, and often saves stiffness the next day, rheumatism, or worse. The body, hot, wet, tired, is particularly susceptible to severe colds, having lost some of its resisting power in the fatigue incidental to vigorous exercise in quail hunting.

A broad-brimmed felt hat to shade the eyes is excellent; a bandana neckerchief protects the neck from sunburn and the chafing of the clothing, which is no inconsiderable element in a long, hard tramp.

By saving bulk and weight in every possible way the quail hunter will add materially to his comforts. If he uses a dog, he should carry a good-sized canteen and water the dog every half hour or so, giving him a few laps from the crown of the hat if nothing better offers.

Whisky is a bad thing on a quail hunt; it stimulates the heart to an unnatural degree and enables a man to perform perhaps a little more for a time, but the reaction is infinitely worse, and in hill hunting, likely to result in lasting damage to the heart. Cold tea or coffee with milk and plenty of sugar added are infinitely preferable if a stimulant be needed at all. Sweet bar chocolate is a good thing to carry, and the all-around hunter has a few pieces of jerked venison or other meat in his pocket to gnaw on at times, often getting along without lunch by such measures. With most, lunch is a welcome rest, and a part of the day's fun, however.

New Auto Club for Pomona.

The coming week the motorists at Pomona will organize an automobiling club. This with the two Good Roads Clubs in Orange county, a Good Roads Club in Bakersfield and the automobile clubs in San Diego, Santa Barbara and Riverside, will make seven small automobile clubs in Southern California. Pasadena had a small automobile club several years ago but little has been heard of it recently.

Chauffeurs Getting Plentiful.

With the beginning of winter chauffeurs are arriving from all parts of the East, expecting to find work in Southern California on the big cars that are usually shipped here from the East by the winter tourists. In Europe it is said that chauffeurs are now so plenty that fairly good ones can be secured for $50 a month, where a few years ago they received as high as $250 a month.

Taxicabs Now in Use.

Taximeter motor cabs have at last been installed in New York. The service from the new Plaza Hotel was started last week, when that great hostelry opened. This cab inaugurates a new régime in New York, for the occupant of the cab pays for only what he gets and the driver may not hold him up for any amount. The dial shows a charge of 30 cents for any distance of a half-mile or less, for from one to four people, and 10 cents is added by the recording dial for every additional fifth of a mile. For each six minutes of waiting there is a charge of 10 cents, and when a cab is ordered from a stand by phone there is a charge of 20 cents for each mile or fraction of a mile. The dial shows the charge at all times.

LEXINGTON (Ky.) Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Without a bit of trouble, the good colt Tempus Fugit today won the $2000 Johnston Stake at the local trotting meeting. He took three straight heats and the race from a good field. The 2:10 trot was unfinished from yesterday, and was trotted today in two additional heats, Icon taking them both in easy fashion.

Tempus Fugit in winning the Johnston, equaled the world's record for that race, 2:09¾, made here in 1902 by chase, and in 1906 by Lillian R. The first heat of the third race was trotted in a blinding hailstorm.

LOS ANGELES TEAM WINS.

Basketball Five Defeats the Azusa Team by One Point in Very Close Contest.

The Los Angeles High School boys' basketball team yesterday defeated the Azusa five by a score of 14 to 13. The Los Angeles team played a strong game, and until the close of the contest the score remained even.

Bristol played his usual good game, and scored several times for his team. Carter, the other forward, defended his goal with good success.

The Citrus Union team had a better five than the Los Angeles High expected to meet. Compton and Lee of the Azusa team did the star playing for the Citrus five. Lee threw the ball for a basket from the center of the field. This was the only long basket made in the game. The men held the following positions:

L. A. High School		Azusa
Bristol	forward	Cassin
Carter	forward	Beardslee
Major	center	Carpenter

Pomona Basketball.

CLAREMONT, Oct. 12.—Miss Marjorie Kinney of Portland, Or., has been elected 1910 basketball captain for the interclass series of 1907-8. Miss Kinney is a tall, well-built girl and put up an exceptionally strong game as center on the freshman team last year. She likely will play the same position on this year's team. Practice will begin next week. Miss Rosamond Norman and Clara Bissell are clever forwards, while for the guard positions Miss Jean Walden, Mildred Jenks and Beth Gore will put up a strong game.

'Varsity practice will not begin until the class games have been played off, which will be the last of December. The 1910 and 1908 classes have the best chances for winning the interclass pennant.

POLY BOYS WIN.

DEFEAT SAN FERNANDO FIVE.

Polytechnic's basketball five defeated the San Fernando High School team on the local high school's court by a score of 32 to 2, yesterday. This is the opening game of the County League basketball contests, and the Poly boys proved to have a superior team. Most of the last year players are on the Polytechnic five this season, and they appear in better form now than last year.

San Fernando has not as good a team as last season, as most of the old men have left the school. The two teams lined up as follows:

Poly		San Fernando
B. Blair	guard	Hollister
N. Manning	guard	Roberts
M. Blair	forward	Lawrence
C. Rickerhauser	forward	Lardner
Kalmeyer, McKenzie	center	Wilson

Thirty-two Qualify for the First Round of the Match Play, Which Must Be Finish by End of Present Week—Jevne and Roscoe Divide the Sweepstakes Prize.

Forty-three players finished in the qualifying rounds for the president's cup tournament at the Los Angeles Country Club yesterday. Of those finishing thirty-two qualified for the cup play, the highest scores being 90.

On the whole the play was good, though some of the steadiest players were a bit off form and did not make the scores expected. This was made up for by the good work of the large number of handicap men, however, and the general run of the scores was quite satisfactory.

Under the rules governing competition for the president's cup, the first match round must be played off on or before Sunday, October 20; the second match round on or before the Sunday following, and the third match round on or before the Sunday after that. The order of play was announced at the close of the qualifying rounds yesterday and many of the contestants will be on the links today.

The scores of the players who qualified were as follows:

J. A. Jevne, gross 81, handicap 4, net 77; D. L. Roscoe, 91-14-77; Joseph Ball, 86-8-78; J. B. Lumquair, 85-6-79; S. S. Parsons, 87-8-79; Dr. W. H. Spinks, 88-8-80; J. S. Carroll, 92-12-80; F. H. Edwards, 83-2-81; J. A. Brown, 87-6-81; J. B. Ellis, 91-10-81; W. H. Holliday, 89-8-81; Frank Griffith, 90-8-82; W. B. Walton, 84-2-82; C. A. Henderson, 96-14-82; J. L. Kirkpatrick, 94-12-82; P. R. Wilson, 90-8-82; West Hughes, 96-16-82; D. K. Dickinson, 99-16-83; R. H. Ingram, 92-8-84; S. P. Hunt, 90-6-84; E. O. Robinson, 92-8-84; J. S. Henton, 97-12-85; Henry Menton, 92-6-86; J. E. Cook, 95-8-87; W. E. Waddell, 101-14-87; M. L. Graff, 101-14-87; F. N. Coffin, 95-8-87; V. E. Howard, 96-8-88; Capt. A. A. Fries, 96-6-90; C. F. Ellis, 108-18-90; J. J. Mellus, 94-4-90; A. F. Morlan, 100-10-90.

In honor of the opening of the tournament the usual Saturday-afternoon concerts and hops, which were discontinued during the summer months, were commenced again yesterday. A goodly company gathered to watch the play and the occasion was made a pleasant one socially as well as from the standpoint of sport.

The sweepstakes were divided between J. A. Jevne and D. L. Roscoe, who tied for first place with net scores of 77, Joseph Ball with a score of 86, net, and S. S. Parsons with 87, net.

For the first match round the players are paid as follows:

Brown and Cook, Walton and Fries, Kirkpatrick and Mellus, Roscoe and Dickinson, Lumquair and Ingram, Spinks and Henton, Holliday and Waddell, George B. NELSON OUT WITH NOLAN.

Bat Throws Poor Billy Out in the Cold.

Has Made Many Enemies by Manager's Actions.

Wants to Fight Gans for a Big Side Bet.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Battling Nelson, who reached San Francisco last night from Salt Lake, announced that he has absolutely broken with his former manager, Billy Nolan, and in the future will paddle his own canoe. Nelson reasons that Nolan has been the direct cause of his making many enemies and losing many matches. Better late than never is his argument. He went to Larkspur today to pack his trunks and say good-by.

"It was after the last fight that I concluded that I would quit Nolan," said the Dane last night. "I have made a good deal of money for Billy, about $50,000, but it will be a good thing for me to go alone. He has made me many enemies and I will be better off if I look after myself. I haven't told Nolan yet, but I will go to Larkspur in the morning, get my trunks and tell Billy that I am going to call it quits."

Nelson is making a wise move. Shrewd as he is, Nolan has overreached himself in many instances. By himself, the Dane is well liked, but linked with Nolan, who was forever demanding his pound of flesh, he was cordially despised.

Nelson will leave Monday or Tuesday for Red Lodge, Mont., where he will meet a couple of local scrappers in two-round exhibitions. The entertainment takes place October 19. Then he will move to Minot, N. D., where he will join the Elks and also take part in a sparring match. After that he and his friend, Clarence Parker, will go for an extended hunt.

"When will I fight again?" said Nelson. "Certainly I would like a fight with Gans, but I will not go a step out of the way. I know I am a has-been, but I can beat Gans and will meet him, winner take all and bet him $10,000 on the side. A lot of people would like to see a match between myself and Packy McFarland, but there isn't a chance. Packy and I are pals and I don't want to fight him. He is a tough fellow and I would have a hard time beating him, even if I could win."

BIG 'UNS BITE.

LIVELY SPORT WITH SPOTFINS.

LOWENTHAL FAMILY REVERSE PRECEDENT AT PEDRO.

Land Three Big Fellows After a Late Start, and Father Gets the Biggest—Campbell Boat in Luck Again—Big Smelts Biting and Mackerel Feeding at Redondo.

The annual fall croaker picnic, as predicted last Sunday, seems to have set in at San Pedro, with characteristic determination to run up to its old-time form.

A week ago today the wharves were lined with anglers, and in the bay were dozens of boats, bearing from one to four sinker-shiers, who were, in most cases, having fair sport, although the general average of the fish continues small. Enough big ones have been taken to assure the angling cult that not all the patriarchs of the tribe are dead, and in consequence several hundred have planned to make the bay their headquarters again today.

Of the anglers who were afield last Sunday, the Lowenthal family carried off the palm. Taking up their position on the North Pacific Steamship Company's wharf at San Pedro, they caught three immense croakers. Max Lowenthal caught a seven and three-fourths-pounder, which would have won the Rod and Reel tournament had it been caught a few days sooner. Paul Lowenthal got one about a pound smaller, and the younger member of the combination had a five and one-half-pounder. They caught all the fish in an hour, from 10 o'clock on. The tide was high at 8:40, and the fish bit well on the turn of the flood, as usual. Today the tide comes in from 8:55 a.m. to 2:38 p.m., which indicates good sport all afternoon.

Robert Campbell, Charles V. Barton and Walter A. Geft occupied a boat which rambled all over the bay, from Mormon Island to the outer harbor, with satisfactory results. Campbell landed three fish, the best weighing six pounds. Barton got a five-pounder, as did Geft, who tried single-gut leaders, with rather hard luck, losing two good fish by the guts breaking.

Harry Kister fished from the San Pedro Lumber Company's wharf and landed 100 big smelt and a seven-pound spotfin, which gave him a terrific tussle, and finally was gaffed by going after it in a boat. Styman and his partner all filled baskets with smelts.

Eugene Elliott, Smith Warren and a number of others fished at the cannery. Elliott got a pair of croakers weighing five pounds apiece in the morning, and in the afternoon Smithy had his innings, but his fish were rather smaller. In all, half a dozen good-sized spotfins were landed at the cannery. Too many fishing there for comfort.

SAN PEDRO WHARF.

"Bronco Joe" Spear fished off the San Pedro wharf with excellent success. This angler is proverbially lucky. He manhandled a pair of five-pounders, and got them both, and also had a China croaker of good size, and a number of bass. Ed Germain landed one China croaker and a bagful of smelts.

Simon Spier and W. S. Skeel fished from a boat in "Spier's Hole" off Mormon Island, where they exchanged pleasantries with Frank Garbutt, who was fishing for sharks with a steel rod from his yacht. They caught two good-sized ones. Spier and Skeel caught sixteen fish between them, Spier having his usual big bass of three pounds' weight, together with a number of smaller ones, a few China croakers, a black croaker, rather rare inside, and other varieties. Skeel had two croakers for his share.

Abe Greenbaum and his partner fished from a boat near the cannery without much success.

Tommy Prizgint and Oscar Willumsen caught the customary mess of big fish at the cannery.

S. Nordlinger put in the day casting from F. A. Walton's houseboat in the upper bay. He landed bass, small croakers and an all-around assortment.

E. L. Hedderly and wife landed four croakers, three of the China variety, and one spotfin, all of rather small size.

J. B. Winston and son fished off the Morgan Oyster wharf in a boat and landed five spotfins, of which the best scaled 2½ pounds.

During the week a number of good catches have been made, and the prospect for today is considered fair. The tide filling in the afternoon is not entirely favorable; tides rising in the late morning generally have contributed heavily to the anglers' baskets, but since the bay was dredged out the anglers believe the tides do not make as much difference as they once did. The currents do not have the sweep and the weight they once did. This is laid to the dredging operations cleaning out the waterway and allowing the tide a larger passageway. A man can use a three or four-ounce sinker and keep the bottom fairly well now, where a seven-ounce lead was not enough five years ago. The fishing does not seem to have suffered materially; the large shell fish beds around Mormon Island are undisturbed, and it is largely to feed upon these that the spotfins enter the bay.

SURF RESORTS.

Not very encouraging reports are heard from the surf resorts along the coast. The sea has been rather rough at intervals for several weeks, and most of the fish are driven out of the breakers. Occasional catches of "nippers" are reported, but the game is not worth following, as a rule. At Redondo Beach some fun has been enjoyed, particularly off No. 3, and casting from the shore at Clifton.

The large jack smelts have begun to take bait at many alongshore points, and fishing for them has become popular. A long cane rod, with light line and good-sized reel, is used by most anglers in this fishing. They make up a ten-foot leader of single gut, with hooks every six inches, attached by shortened single snells, as otherwise, if the full length snell is employed, the leader will become fouled, one hook with another. This contrivance has a sinker at the lower end and a seine cork at the upper, being arranged thus to float. The smelt run near the surface.

The long leader requires a rather long rod to cast conveniently, and the whole affair is allowed to drift off down the wind until it comes across a school. They hook themselves pulling on the cork, and one fish calls more until the angler decides he has enough hooks filled, or believes the bait is gone, when the performance is repeated. Smelt fight well, and as they attain a size of eighteen inches once in a while, they afford interesting sport.

Mackerel are feeding at Redondo again. Occasional good catches are being made. Last winter the fish bit all through, at intervals.

The sewer wharf at Hyperion is affording many fish. Seiners have been at work supplying local markets with the polluted product, spreading the germs of typhoid fever around and sowing the seeds of other contagion. The sewer broke above their camp, last week, and the Japs were literally inundated with stinking sewage up to their necks, many of their effects being swept away by it. Sportsmen believe such fish should be condemned. The anglers who fish there do so for sport, and generally throw back their catches alive.

TENNIS AT STANDSTILL.

Midwinter Tournament Planned—Private Matches Being Played at Country Clubs.

Tennis in Southern California at present is at a standstill, and with the exception of the San Gabriel tournament on October 19, there will be very little to attract the lovers of the racquet game until the midwinter tournament, in February.

The midwinter affair, as the plans of the Southern California Tennis Association now stand, will be played either at Coronado or at the Central courts in South Pasadena.

Private matches are being played from time to time on the courts of the many country clubs, but no tournaments of great importance have been run off since the Santa Barbara and Del Monte meets in September.

The San Gabriel tournament is for members of the Country Club only, and will include no other matches than men's doubles and mixed doubles, for which handsome prizes have been offered.

ROUNDING TO SHAPE.

HARVARD SCHOOL TEAM IMPROVES.

NORTHERN TRIP TO BELMONT MAY BE UNDERTAKEN.

Few Veterans Left, but New Material Gives Promise of Developing Into Varsity Timber—First Game to Be Played Against Hollywood Team Next Saturday.

Harvard School will play its first football game of its season, October 19, against Hollywood High School. The team is rapidly rounding into shape, and in spite of the gloomy outlook at the first of the season, promises to be one of the strongest factors, outside of L. A. High, in deciding the interscholastic championship.

Manager "Shorty" Davids, who is playing halfback on the team, has not completed a schedule for the eleven, but has arranged games with Pasadena, October 26; Throop, November 2, and Santa Ana, November 16. It is expected that soon after the Santa Ana game, the Harvard team will go north to play Belmont.

Belmont, when the team visited Los Angeles a year ago, promised the local military school a return game this season, and they will soon be called upon to make good their agreement. No arrangements have yet been made, but in all probability the northern trip will be taken late in November.

No games have been scheduled with L. A. High by the Harvard manager, who says that last year the High School canceled a date with the Harvard team in order to play another school.

Coach Borsn has had both the first and second teams doing signal practice since Tuesday, and on the past two Saturdays has lined the two teams up for practice games. He has developed some good material from green players, but most of the linemen will be benefited by more experience.

Although no regular first team has been selected, the contest for places has narrowed down so closely that a good line on who will make the team can be had.

Capt. Brown will play full, and do the kicking. He has been practicing punts all week, and shows improvement over his old-time form. Lane is also a candidate for full, but will probably be shifted to halfback, alternating with Phinney. Davids, who played end last year, will undoubtedly fill the other halfback position. Levy also is making a good try for the back field.

The fight for quarterback has narrowed down to Thorpe and Otis, with the former doing the best work, and apparently qualifying for the place. Vallely, the miler, dropped out of the game, after practicing a week.

In the line, Keller seems to be sure of the center position. Bretherton probably will be one tackle, and Heath and Newman are likely candidates for the opposite side. Meserve and Ringe are filling the guard positions very acceptably, and probably will make the team in these places.

Proctor, the third veteran, and Fyffe will, in all probability, be the ends. Proctor is playing a great game this year. Fyffe was the second-team end last season.

Ken Brown, a new student from San Diego, has developed into one of the best tacklers on the squad, and will probably make the team. His position is undecided, but either a half or an end will be displaced by him, from the present outlook.

GENTLEMEN: This is a statement that can not be successfully contradicted. There are a number of people in Los Angeles who have gone into the Automobile Top business under the impression that it is a fortune-making undertaking. I do not think that I am painting the lily for my ability, or method of doing business, in this line, but I can successfully state that I have been able to keep steadily employed my full complement of help without having to make any sacrifices either in price or quality of work. By following this course and producing an article both in quality and price that has appealed to common sense people. I have been able to attain this position. Thanking my friends and customers for their assistance in this matter, I am, yours respectfully, M. L. MORAN,

Live All Your Yea

A Perfect

MAN

The human body is most wonderfully and perfectly constructed. Each part is built equal to its task. Unless overburdened or attacked by disease, no organ falters. Nature intended that every man should live all his years a perfect man. Few men do. Most men can.

All men make mistakes. Some make mistakes in youth. Others make mistakes after they have grown to be men. Still others are merely unfortunate. Practically all diseases and disorders are the result of mistakes or misfortune.

The problem of living a perfect man is simple. Undo the injury that mistakes or misfortune have wrought. Then avoid both—live as nature built you to live.

DR. TAYLOR,
The Leading

Undoing the Injury

I do not know how many thousands of men I have treated. I have been a specialist of men's diseases for seventeen years. During the most of that time my practice has been the largest of its kind upon the Pacific Coast. For several years past it has been fully double that of any other specialist in the West treating men's diseases.

I have met with but few incurable cases. I have failed in but very fewer cases. In recent years I have failed in none. This is because I undertake to cure only those cases that I feel confident I can cure, and as my experience has grown I have become able to determine curable and incurable cases with certainty. It is also because my skill in curing has grown and my methods of treatment have been perfected.

The following mention of ailments that come through mistakes or misfortune is necessarily brief. I will gladly explain them further and describe my original, scientific and certain methods of treating them to all who call or write.

I Am Always Willing to Wait For My Until a Cure Is Effected

Weakness

No matter in what form these functional derangements, commonly termed "weakness" may appear, the causative conditions are, in fully ninety-five per cent of cases, very similar. I have given the closest possible study to this prevalent ailment and find that in practically every case of [illegible] there existed at some vital point of the pelvic system, a state of chronic inflammation, or congestion. My first step is a thorough examination to determine the exact location and nature of the disorder, after which by a system of directed local treatment, I restore the affected part to its normal condition. This promptly results in full and complete return of power. In perhaps [illegible] per cent. of the cases do I find general impoverishment, lack of [illegible] any other condition or complication requiring constitutional treatment. I may safely assert that not more than one case in fifty can be benefited by the use of tonics, stimulants, electrical or mechanical appliances. Fully forty-nine cases in fifty will be aggravated by such methods of treatment. My cures are positive, complete, thorough and permanent, because by [illegible] the real and only cause of the functional weakness is totally removed. I have gained, by close study and observation in thousands of cases, the [illegible] the exact requirements and treat accordingly, and in years, I have not [illegible] a single instance to accomplish the desired results.

Varicocele

Varicocele affects the veins of the spermatic cord. An average of one man in [illegible] suffer from the affliction. The muscular walls of the veins [illegible] valves cease to perform their functions and local stagnation of the [illegible] The first evidence of varicocele is usually a thickening, dilating [illegible] ing of the veins on one or both sides, most frequently upon the left side [illegible] panied by pains in the back, legs, thighs or chest, and a sense of [illegible] groin. Owing to the impaired circulation, a wasting away of the [illegible] by partial or complete loss of power almost without exception [illegible] where treatment is neglected, and even slightly developed cases [illegible] a damaging influence upon the organs involved as well as upon the [illegible] Safety in all instances demands a prompt cure, for varicocele is a [illegible] crease that increases in severity the longer it is neglected.

I cure varicocele without pain and without detaining the patient from [illegible] have cured over two thousand cases without a single failure or [illegible] My treatment is original and has been developed through seventeen years [illegible] experience. It restores the lost tone and elasticity to the weakened [illegible] vessels, while results in normal circulation and re-establishes the [illegible] of waste and repair throughout the vital system.

My special practice also includes Hydrocele, Stric[illegible] tracted Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, Nerv[illegible] bility and all Reflex Ailments.

Consultation Free

To men whose years are being lived in physical imperfection as a result of mistakes or misfortune, whose lives are less than full and perfect [illegible] be the man that nature meant them to be, I extend an earnest [illegible] offer of consultation and advice. My experience among men is [illegible] places me in a position to be helpful to you. In consulting me you [illegible] no foolish and embarrassing questions. All information given you [illegible] and vital bearing. If your symptoms are of no consequence I will [illegible] treatment is needed, I tell you its cost, and the time that will be required to effect a complete cure. If I feel any doubt as to my ability [illegible] I will not take your case at all. I will not urge my services upon [illegible] see fit to place your case in my care, every promise I make shall be [illegible] do not, you will be welcome to the information and suggestions given [illegible] invited to call for further consultation absolutely free at any time.

Those finding it inconvenient or impossible to call in person [illegible] write a full and complete description of their symptoms and their [illegible] my prompt and careful attention. All consultations strictly [illegible]

[illegible]CAGO WINS FROM DETROIT WITH EASE.

[illegible] championship series be[illegible] Chicago National Cubs and [illegible] American Tigers, came to [illegible] afternoon in Detroit [illegible] Cubs shut out their oppo[illegible] four of the five games [illegible] a twelve-inning tie [illegible] game.

[illegible] was a shock to many [illegible] baseball dope, but there [illegible] of fans who did not [illegible] the Detroit team had a [illegible] the Cubs. If they had had a chance they might have done it and this is not a joke either.

All the old talk before the series commenced about the Detroits being the best batsmen, made a lot of noise, but the figures on the series just ended, shows that Chicago both hit and fielded better than Detroit. There is not much "hard luck" when such teams get together, for it is real hitting and playing that gets the games.

The work of the teams in such a contest in the best thing to judge them by and the figures for the five games are as follows:

ARIZONA TOURNEY.

COAST TEAMS TO PLAY.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

TUCSON (Ariz.) Oct. 11.—Plans for the great baseball tournament are practically complete. It is to begin October 20, the morning game to be between Phoenix and Tucson, the afternoon game between Bisbee and Cananea. Teams are to be paired off thereafter until Sunday, in this wise: Globe-Douglas, Bisbee-Tucson, Cananea-Douglas, Phoenix-Globe, Tucson-Douglas, Cananea-Globe, Douglas-Phoenix, Globe-Bisbee, Bisbee-Douglas, Tucson-Globe, Phoenix-Bisbee, Tucson-Cananea, Phoenix-Cananea.

The prizes will be $750, $350, $250, with $100 given to each competing team which does not get within the prize money. There will be no entrance fee. It is possible that other clubs will be entered before the time of the tournament, as entries are invited from Arizona, California, New Mexico, El Paso and Cananea. For the purposes of the tournament the business men of the city have subscribed $4000.

At first a clause was inserted that all players must have belonged to a team thirty days before being allowed to play, but this rule has been eliminated. It was something of a joke, anyhow, for every team in the Territory has been filled up as fast as it could with professionals.

Tucson has written for Danny Shay of the New Yorks, now in Los Angeles. The Douglas team is practically composed of the Texas Midland team, which made a fairly successful progress through the South lately. Bisbee has accumulated two pitchers, a catcher and a shortstop from a league team hailing from Webb City, Mo., two men from Hutchinson and one from Texas.

Phoenix has raised $2000 for the regeneration of baseball "in its midst," and even yet is hunting for handy men. Manager Goldberg has signed Harry Warner of San Bernardino, Cal., who has been doing star work on the Prescott team this year as shortstop. Three western association men are to work for Phoenix this winter, all from Hutchinson, Kan., and strong additions are expected later in the month from league teams further east. There seems no doubt that Goldberg is getting together a fine lot of players, but they may come almost too late to be welded into a strong team.

A suggestion has come from Phoenix that the Tucson tournament be held off for thirty days. In that event Goldberg promised to put on a tournament at Phoenix during the Territorial Fair. The proposition was rejected, but it is understood the Capitol City will have a tournament anyhow, held at Phoenix Park, with games in the morning running opposition to the fair, for the fair management has declined to assist financially.

The Cananea team still shows up like a winner. Last Sunday it defeated the Douglas nine 3 to 0, and later at Cananea trimmed Douglas again 10 to 4. Incidentally the new Bisbee team, which seems to be a combination of rare experts, outplayed the Tucson team by a score of 7 to 6.

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—To those in search of health: Over six years I was treated by the best known physicians in Los Angeles and at no time did they make a true diagnosis of my case. I grew worse steadily until I was over two years bedfast, not able to lift my hand. My life was saved by The Dr. Wong Co., 713 South Main St. Gallstones and a badly abscessed liver, getting over twelve hundred gallstones in one day. Complications of heart trouble and others, due to a broken-down condition, has all been eradicated, and I am able today to go and enjoy life and returning good health, with many thanks to the Dr. Wong Co. Your patient, most respectfully,

SWIMMING TOURNAMENT.

Southern California Association Plans to Hold Water Events at Bimini Baths.

A swimming tournament at Bimini Baths probably will be held under the auspices of the Southern California Swimming Association within a month. Secretary Les Henry says that arrangements are now under way for the biggest indoor tournament yet pulled off in the south. All the local swimmers are anxious to get together in competitive matches before they lose the good condition gained in the summer months.

The principal trophies to be offered are the Bimini 100-yard cup, and the relay cup won by Pat Higgins' team at Venice, more than a year ago.

With the completion of the Y.M.C.A. and L.A.A.C. swimming tanks next summer, Henry says that the swimming association will inaugurate the practice of holding monthly tournaments, and that Southern California swimmers will become the best in the world. "We then will have facilities for swimming all the year round," said Henry, "with several months' practice on the surf. Indoor swimming is all right for racing now and then, but surf swimming gives the real strength."

For the proposed tournament at Bimini Baths, the forty-foot tank will be filled with water of the same temperature as the surf, for the sake of speed in the races.

The Mrs. Bridge

Cancer Cure

Has been established in Los Angeles for over seven years. It is a well known and well reputed institution of this city. It is highly spoken of by intelligent, educated people, and is recommended by them to patients who are afflicted with this dreadful disease. People come here from all over the State to be treated for Cancer, and many patients come here from other States, some of whom have tried other methods in vain. We have treated and cured patients who had formerly been operated upon by surgery and had found the knife only a temporary relief because the Cancer was not completely extirpated but grew again.

THE MRS. BRIDGE CANCER CURE has been and is recommended by some of the regular licensed practitioners of medicine in this city, one of whom says that he takes pleasure in commending cancerous cases to our care because he has investigated the Cure, watched the progress of the cases under treatment and become satisfied that the remedy is efficacious.

This institution is conducted in a perfectly reputable and legal manner. The remedy is applied only upon the prescription and under the direction of a licensed physician. It is not a "patent medicine." It is not a new experiment, for its record of cures covers a period of 45 years. The records of this office, showing the list of patients treated and the high percentage of patients cured, is open to investigation by any one who has legitimate cause of inquiry.

Our best and strongest advertisements are those unwritten ones which are spoken gratuitously by scores of our grateful patients who have ralized the blessing of a perfect cure.

THEIR BUSY DAY.

QUAIL SEASON SOON AT HAND.

Anxious Anticipation Among an Army of Hunters.

Sporting Material Plentiful and Outlook Good.

Birds Are Very Numerous Near Town.

The quail season opens Tuesday morning and shooters throughout Southern California are preparing for a grand opening day hunt. Not in years have the birds been more plentiful. Following a banner season for the duck hunters and the dove shooters, the present promises to be no less satisfying to the seekers after quail.

With Los Angeles hunters, particularly the class of clerks and others that runs out on Sunday to near-by points, sometimes renting the guns, the big San Fernando Valley is a sort of Mecca. Their thoughts of quail always are tinged with the color of the sagebrush in the Pacoima, or the gray-brown of the Tejunga chaparral.

There are more quail in the valley than have been noticed in years. The twenty-five-bird limit, better protection in the breeding season, and a series of wet winters and favorable summers have done the trick. The birds are seen in their former large numbers; not the millions that used to afford bags of a hundred or more in a morning's hunt, but enough that a good gunner ought to have no difficulty in picking up his limit throughout the season by careful selection of his field of operations.

The most reliable information upon the quail supply comes through the dove hunters. Scouring the country in every direction, frequently going right into the fastnesses of the quail, these sportsmen know at first hand where there is good shooting in prospect.

FERNANDO VALLEY.

All along the wash section of the San Fernando, from Roscoe to the town of Fernando, the birds can be heard calling any morning and evening. The cactus is rather bad, this year, and the brush has flourished, but a hunter can get through it without much difficulty. The dogs will suffer most. There is, however, more water and if he is cactus-wise, the pointer or setter had better be taken along. Otherwise he will have to be tied to some handy greasewood stub. Dogs frequently get their mouths, noses and feet so full of cactus in half an hour that it is cruelty to allow them to go on, but one or two such doses generally teach them their lessons.

Some have experimented with leather dog boots, but it cannot be said the scheme is entirely a success. Some dogs will not have them at all; others take to the boots readily. But their noses cannot be protected, and the sharp spines will easily penetrate the soft leather used in the boots.

There will be not as great a turnout of scattergunners Tuesday as next Sunday. Whatever the law says, that is the virtual opening of the quail season for nine out of ten. Almost everybody is at leisure then. A conservative estimate, based upon the gun reservations, and the known number of inveterates, warrants the prediction that there will be not less than 1000 hunters afield in the San Fernando Valley next Sunday. This is a section some thirty miles long by half as wide, and many hunters avoid it just because of its popularity. From this some idea may be gained of the wide and general interest there is in California valley quail shooting. South of the Tehachepi, an army of 25,000 men should be afield next Sunday.

Hunters from town will drop off the train all the way from Glendale on, some going as far as the Soledad Pass, which is a needlessly long trip so early in the season.

From Glendale the Verdugo Cañon and some of the flats along the foothills are accessible. Quail are plentiful and it ought to be no trouble for a good shot to get the limit in half a day.

Farther on, Burbank is quite popular, although it necessitates a "hike" to the hills of no mean proportions. Therefore, most gunners go on farther up the line. Many alight at Roscoe, where there are birds on either side of the track.

From Roscoe on, hunters get off at every stop, scattering on either side. Some leave at Pacoima, where the bench shooting in the cañon is often excellent early in the season, the country gently rolling and the walking decidedly good for California quail hunting as judged by average conditions.

Others leave at the tunnel. Much of the ranch land is posted, but there are places where a good shoot can be had without interfering with anybody. Those who want to walk four or five miles can hardly do better than to strike off to the southward. There they will find level country, well brushed, and splendidly stocked, one of the best places in the entire valley for working a dog.

Many will go through the tunnel to Newhall. They expect to find quail of both varieties in Placerita Cañon, and to the north and west, a good supply in the hills. These are more easily reached by going on to Saugus, however. Above Lang and Ravenna in the pass are plenty of good spots for quail which will be attended to later on by most hunters.

The fellows who can get away have five days the best of the Sunday army, but the great number of birds indicates the sport should stand more hammering than usual.

Many will take short side trips by way of the electric cars to such points as the San Gabriel wash, El Monte, places between the city and the sea along the Santa Monica Mountains, and a few are going to Santa Ana to travel farther by horse and wagon into the Santiago, where bird plenty is reported.

Glen Ivy, in Riverside county; Elsinore, Wildomar, Murietta, and all its neighbors, are better provided with quail than usual, say the dove hunters. The shooting at Wildomar is of the best.

Along the Santa Fé between the city and San Bernardino are a number of stations where hunters can leave the train profitably. Above Etiwanda are vineyards where the quail, according to ranchers, have been committing depredations. The vineyardists are more than hospitable in consequence and take care of the hunters in a manner calculated to make them come again.

Everywhere the automobile will be pressed into service. It serves the hunter splendidly, takes him right into the quail country, and shows him the best of sport. He need not weary himself walking four or five miles from the train and expending energy that is needed in the hunt. His hardest work will be prying the machine out of the sand, building bridges across the washes, and pulling cactus out of the tires.

Verily, the automobile is a blessing and its pleasures are manifold. A census of the machines that will be afield, Tuesday—for the autoing class have time and money—would shame the New York automobile show.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

DUCKS SCARCE AT IMPERIAL.

HUNTERS GOING THERE RETURN WITHOUT MUCH SPORT.

Vast Flocks Reported Up North in Oregon and Washington—Cold Weather Required to Send Them South—Continuous Sport in Prospect for Clubmen.

Ducks are scarce at Imperial, and hunters expect to wait until colder weather drives more fowl down from the north. The Colorado River birds, following their usual migratory custom, struck out for the sea coast marshes, and have remained. They are affording the local club men the best of their shooting just now.

Fred B. Mills and D. W. King, Jr., celebrated trapshots and all around sportsmen, returned from a trip to Imperial, but their reports are very discouraging. The ducks have not come down as yet, and the local birds have left, the resident gunners said.

There is plenty of feed for the fowl around Imperial, and enough fresh water. Later on some good shooting of its kind may be expected there. The game is of the night shooting order, which is not only illegal, but not very good sport.

Mills and King were very much disappointed at the birds they found about Imperial. They had expected, from the great sport prevailing here, to get the limit with ease.

Locally the ducks seem to be much more plentiful on the Orange county clubs than anywhere else. The Ballona club men are banking on the northern flight in mid-November, which they think they will get first. Why, is not clear, as the San Joaquin Valley birds coming down generally go through the Cajon Pass rather than across the mountains, and naturally strike the great lakes of fresh water in Orange county first. They can see these sloughs from the time they are out of the pass if the air is clear, and make a bee-line for them, just as they did for the Salton last winter.

The sprig now being shot are all local birds, using the word to mean birds reared south of the Tehachepi, as distinguished from the Central California and northern ducks.

Sportsmen returning from Oregon and Washington report that country alive with ducks, and the club men have had magnificent sport, since their season opened, a month before ours. They still cling to the fifty-bird limit and often bag it on mallards.

With the coming of the frosts these fowl will hit the long aerial trail for the annual trek southward, to be replaced by others from haunts yet farther north. If the present supply of birds holds out until mid-November here, local club men may feel certain of a season of practically continuous sport, but they will have to rely upon the present showing of ducks, augmented by occasional bands coming down the coast from the Hueneme, Guadelupe and other sections to the northwest.

LOOKING AHEAD.

GAME IS SAVED BY PROTECTION.

QUAIL AND DUCK SHOOTING TO LAST YEARS LONGER.

Thousands of Birds Killed Weekly but Encouragement of Breeding and Feeding by Clubs Causes Them to Return—Quail Preserves Are Next in Order.

Never has the benefit coming through intelligent game protection been proved more conclusively. In every branch of gun sport the outlook is 50 per cent. better than it was five years ago. Then the quail seemed in danger of extermination. Duck shooting held up fairly well, but even this was entirely accredited to the duck clubs, which sportsmen consider the greatest protective agent that ever was exerted in behalf of the wildfowl. Although they kill thousands, they let the birds alone five days out of the week, encourage their presence, prolong their stay and give them a chance to lay on some fat by creating great fresh-water sloughs and providing natural and artificial feed. The market hunters, killing their 300 to 500 a day the season through and shipping them to San Francisco and other places, are responsible.

Today there are men in the San Joaquin Valley utterly disregarding the limit, and making an open boast of it. That this contention is just is proved by the great army of wildfowl now in the southern part of the State, where the market hunters as a rule let the ducks severely alone. Practically all the local marsh is controlled by the clubs, and the birds are protected thereby.

QUAIL PROTECTION.

Gradually the same thing is coming to pass with the quail. Up North the sportsmen seem a little in advance of the Southern Californians in this one regard, although their duck clubs are admittedly inferior. Vast tracts are owned or leased, in which the quail may roam undisturbed during the breeding season under the watchful eye of wardens, and only club members shoot there after the season opens, rigidly limiting their bags. In this manner has been created a type of quail shooting in no wise inferior to the finest sport the eastern quail can show, the quail remaining in reasonably level country not too densely brushed, and affording a good pointer or setter a chance to show his class that would be impossible were every one freely ranging through every day in the week and driving the quail into the inaccessible hills.

Gradually much the same result is working out hereabouts. The vast tract of wild land, rigidly preserved, is the greatest possible benefit to the unattached hunter, as the overflow of birds from its liberal breedings each year tends to stock the surrounding country, thereby helping everybody's sport. In San Diego county, near the little village of Encinitas, several local sportsmen, headed by John Hauerwaas, who died last week, a few years ago purchased a large acreage and turned it into a quail and dove preserve. They have a comfortable clubhouse, all the enjoyments of the game, and country in which they can use blooded dogs to advantage, thus taking a double pleasure out of the hunting. The veteran quail shooter, Peter Lux, resides near-by. Gen. C. F. A. Last, Aug. Winstel, J. F. Holbrook, Jacob Adolff, Auguste Marquis being members.

Similar preserves have been talked of nearer town, but land is too high as a rule to make the scheme feasible. With land costing over $5 to $10 an acre, it becomes a very expensive proposition, as a vast area is necessary to accommodate the roving habits of the quail, which cannot be concentrated, like the ducks, into 100 or 160 acres successfully.

By encouraging the breeding, taking care of the quail in off-years, by providing plenty of food and water, these preserves absolutely guarantee the quail supply of California.

ATTRACT MORE THAN QUAIL.

Ducks Turn Motoring Sportsmen from Invasion of Temescal Canyon, Where They Have Preserve.

The ducks are so plenty that many quail hunts have been postponed a week. Tomorrow the valley-quail season opens and a large party of local motorists had planned some time ago to start this morning early in their automobiles for Glen Ivy in Temescal Cañon. There the Glen Ivy Hot Springs Company, made up of twenty-seven Los Angeles sportsmen, mostly owners of automobiles and members of the Automobile Club of Southern California, have 120 acres that makes a most excellent game preserve. Quail is very plentiful in all that region.

At least ten motor cars in one party were to make this run, but part of the members find the ducks too attractive, and the large party will go down to Glen Ivy next Sunday instead. But today Phil Lyon, Vice-President B. V. Collins, W. A. Avery and other members will drive their cars down with parties bound for quail.

At Glen Ivy there are hot and cold springs and this has been a modest resort for many years. Last year a number of members of the Automobile Club of Southern California got together and purchased the springs, hotel, cottages and whole property, foreseeing what a delightful resort it would be for motorings, situated as it is sixty-six miles out of Los Angeles over good roads and away from railroad, noisy trolley car and even the public highway. A convenient garage for the cars was built and some more cottages put up, while to the big plunge will soon be added various modern individual baths.

The hotel will be kept open all the year for automobilists traveling on the inland route to San Diego and thirty-five people can be cared for at one time.

President J. J. Jenkins, an enthusiastic motorist and one of the directors of the Automobile Club, is now absent in the East, but the other directors are seen at Glen Ivy every week, enjoying the hunting and fishing, for a real trout brook runs through the property. The directors of the Glen Ivy club are: J. J. Jenkins, B. V. Collins, R. W. Kenney, W. A. Avery, Phil Lyon, Louis Vetter and Peter Janss. Mr. Avery is the secretary.

Declares Annual Dividend.

The directors of the Peerless Motor Car Company met September 30, and declared an annual cash dividend of 10 per cent. The company is adding to its buildings and facilities in preparation for larger business and regards the outlook as satisfactory for the coming season. Two new buildings are at present in course of construction. One is to provide a foundry of sufficient size for all aluminum and brass castings for the entire product, and also facilities for engine and chassis testing. The other building is an extension of the present machine shop, adding about 75 per cent. additional floor space to this department.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE.

BY EMMA PADDOCK TELFORD.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Experiments with a dietary of fruits and nuts at the University of California have demonstrated that while both furnish the body with energy, nuts yield building material also. The cost of a diet exclusively of fruits and nuts varied from 18 to 46 cents per day.

That the nut cult is finding favor in the country at large is evidenced by the enormous growth of the nut business, requiring many millions of dollars to carry it on. As a result, the nut production of this country is increasing rapidly. Men are kin to the squirrel in that they naturally incline to a nut diet in cold weather. Some of the most prominent physicians in New York have recently prescribed them to their patients, notably those suffering from some form of nervous disease. It doesn't appear to make much difference what nuts are used—each to his own taste. The peculiar oils in the nut meats are said to restore certain wasted tissues, which require the strengthening properties of some forms of mild fats.

Important as individual consumption is, it is surpassed many times over by the supplies required by confectioners and bakers, for nut cakes and nut candies multiply constantly in variety and popularity. Nuts are used largely also in salads and breads, in dressings and soups, while as a meat substitute they are doing their best to down the meat trust.

Among the good things made from nuts, the following may be commended:

NUT SCRAPPLE FOR BREAKFAST.

Sift together one cupful Indian meal, a half cup hominy and a half teaspoonful salt. Stir little by little into a double boiler containing about a quart of boiling water; then stir and cook thoroughly, until of a consistency suitable for frying. Cook at least one hour and two is better. Take from the stove and stir in one large cupful hickory nut meats ground or chopped fine, then turn into a buttered pan. Set away until cold and stiff, then slice and fry for breakfast.

VEAL AND NUT ROLL.

Take a large, thin, evenly-cut veal cutlet, free from fat and bone, and spread out on the meat board, sprinkling with a layer of finely-cut parsley, then a layer of finely-minced or ground nuts, almonds, English walnuts, hickory nuts or chestnuts, as preferred. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, then roll lengthwise into a tight roll, tying securely with twine at every two inches of its length. Roll lightly in flour, then lay in a casserole or stew pan a few slices of carrot, a stalk of chopped celery, a sprig of parsley and a couple of bay leaves and place the veal roll on top. Add water to the depth of an inch, sprinkle in a little salt, cover closely and bake in a hot oven for an hour and a half. When done, remove the roll and serve hot with gravy, or let it get cold and then slice and serve on a bed of lettuce or celery, with alternate slices of raw tomato. Dress with mayonnaise.

CHESTNUT STUFFING FOR FOWL.

It is not necessary to make a chestnut stuffing with the imported nuts, as our American ones will do quite as well, though a little more trouble to prepare on account of their smaller size. For a turkey it will require about a hundred nuts. With a sharp knife, remove the shells, pour boiling water over them, then let stand until the brown skin can be easily rubbed off. Cover with boiling water and cook until very soft. Drain, mash, add three scant tablespoonfuls of butter, with salt and pepper to taste. Mix well and stuff. Some housewives stir in a well-minced onion and a bit of chopped celery.

CHESTNUT SOUP.

Remove the shells from one pint of chestnuts, cover with boiling water, and after standing long enough to soften the brown skins, remove. Cook until tender in boiling salted water to cover, then mash in the water they have been cooked in, and rub through a fine strainer. Have ready one pint of milk or white stock heated, add the chestnut puree together with a cup of cream, a tablespoonful of butter and salt and pepper to season. Simmer ten minutes, then turn into a hot tureen, over a well-beaten egg. Send at once to the table.

CHESTNUTS AT VEGETABLES.

Peel, blanch, cook in boiling salted water until tender, then drain, mash, season with salt, pepper and butter, and serve, instead of potatoes. Or roast in their shell until soft and send to the table, where each individual shells his own, splits it in half, salt, butter and eat while hot.

CHESTNUT PATTIES.

After boiling and mashing, add to one pint chestnuts a half-cup of cream or two rounded tablespoonfuls creamed butter, a cup and a half milk, two well-beaten eggs, quarter of a cup of sugar and salt to season. Beat well, turn into little patty tins filled with rich paste, and bake quickly.

HICKORY NUT COOKIES.

Beat to a cream one cup of butter and two of sugar. Add two well-beaten eggs, two cupfuls of chopped hickory-nut meats and flour to make a stiff dough. Turn on to a floured board and roll out in a very thin sheet. Cut into round cookies and bake in a moderately hot oven. When a delicate brown, take out, brush each with a little white of egg and sprinkle with granulated sugar while still hot.

HICKORY NUT MACAROONS.

Beat one egg until light, add one cupful of sugar, beat well together, then add two tablespoonfuls of flour and one cup meats, chopped fine. Grease tins, dust with flour; drop the macaroons by teaspoonfuls on them and bake about twenty minutes in a moderate oven.

ANOTHER RECIPE FOR NUT COOKIES.

These may be made with any nuts preferred, but hickory nuts are specially good. Rub together one cup lard or butter and two cups of light brown sugar. Add two well-beaten eggs, one cupful sour milk, a teaspoonful soda dissolved in a little of the milk, one cupful chopped nuts and flour added little by little until the dough is the right consistency for rolling thin. Cut in round or fancy shapes, place on greased pans and bake in quick oven for five or six minutes.

NUTS AND RAISINS.

Nuts and raisins furnish the approved last course at smart dinners these later days, even as they did in grandmother's day. In the old times, however, the raisins were served in clusters, the almonds or filberts, shelled, but not blanched. Occasionally one finds them served in the same way now, but usually they are already prepared in combination. Large, plump raisins have an incision made in one side and all the seeds removed. Then half a blanched almond or a filbert is slipped in. These are served with a spoon and eaten from the fingers. A nut set consists of a dainty bowl with a half dozen or dozen tiny little china bowls for the individual serving. These come in Japanese ware, blue and white. The red and gilt Russian wooden bowls and spoons are also used for the service of nuts, when the nuts are served in their shells. The large and small bowls can be purchased in most department stores now, and are very effective ornamentally.

SALTED ENGLISH WALNUTS.

These make a nice change from the more familiar almonds, peanuts and pecans. Pour boiling water over the nut meats, and when cool skin by rubbing between the folds of a coarse towel. Put a little butter or olive oil in the frying pan and when hot turn in the nuts. Toss and shake gently until a delicate brown, sprinkle with salt and lay on a soft paper to absorb the grease.

TO REMOVE WITHOUT BREAKING.

Brazil nuts, pecans and hickory nut meats can be easily removed without breaking by pouring boiling water over the nuts and letting them stand until cold. Then crack with a hammer, striking the narrow side of the walnut the sharp dividing line of the Brazil nut and the small end of the pecan. Another pointer worth remembering is that during spring and summer when nuts become dry and tasteless they may be plumped and freshened by soaking in luke-warm water. All nuts may be revived in this way, chestnuts and almonds being particularly improved.

WALNUT SALAD.

Crack English walnuts or hickory nuts and remove the meats in perfect halves. Combine with an equal quantity of crisp white celery, cut in small pieces, cover with French dressing or mayonnaise and arrange on lettuce leaves. Tart apples, cored, pared and cut into cubes may be used in place of the celery, or the combination may be with cream cheese, tomatoes, oranges, potatoes or grapefruit.

ENGLISH WALNUT SALAD.

Crack twenty-four English walnuts, remove the meats carefully, put in a saucepan, and cover with stock, adding a slice of onion and a bay leaf, and simmer gently twenty minutes. Take out, cool, line a salad bowl with crisp lettuce leaves and sprinkle over them a handful chopped watercress or nasturtium leaves and twelve pickled oysters, or oysters or clams parboiled and marinated. Over this put the nuts, cover with French dressing, chill and serve.

ALMOND WAFERS.

Beat to a cream a quarter cup butter, then rub in one-half cupful powdered sugar. Add dop by drop a quarter cupful milk, then gradually seven-eighths cup sifted flour. Flavor with a half teaspoonful vanilla or pistache, and spread very thinly over the bottom of an inverted dripping pan and cut in three-inch squares. Sprinkle with chopped blanched almonds and brown delicately in a very slow oven. Take from the oven, turn the squares over one by one with a knife and roll loosely. Take up and spread on a waxed paper to cool and dry. If the squares harden before you get them all rolled, place over the fire a moment to soften. Serve with cocoa, afternoon tea, ice cream or preserves.

ALMOND COFFEE BREAD.

To one quart sifted wheat flour add a tablespoonful sugar and a teaspoonful salt and sift again. Heat a cup and a half milk or part milk and part water to the boiling point; add a tablespoonful butter and take at once from the fire. Cool to luke warm, dissolving the butter meantime by stirring, then add to the flour mixture. Dissolve half a compressed yeast cake in a little water, add; beat all very hard and place where it will keep warm and rise over night. In the morning blend a beaten egg with the dough and roll the mixture into pieces the size of a finger and the length of the width of the buttered biscuit tin. Place the rolls close together, so as to make almost like a sheet. Let the dough rise to almost double its original thickness, then spread the top thickly with butter; sprinkle with granulated sugar, and on the sugar put a thick layer of blanched and chopped almonds. Bake in a moderate oven about half an hour. A few raisins and currants or chopped nuts may be added to the bread dough when the egg is put in, if desired. When this bread is baked and eaten warm the sheet readily breaks apart, which is better than having to cut it.

PEANUT SALAD TO SERVE WITH DUCK OR GAME.

Soak one cupful nut meats in olive oil, drain and mix with two cupfuls cut celery and a dozen ripe or green olives, pitted and minced. Mix with mayonnaise and serve on lettuce or romaine.

PEANUT SANDWICHES.

There are several ways of making peanut sandwiches. They may be ground or chopped fine, well sprinkled with salt, moistened with a few drops of olive oil and spread between thin slices of plain or buttered bread; may be powdered and stirred with mayonnaise to make a filling; mixed with cream cheese and spread between crackers or slices of thin buttered bread, or blend a cream cheese with two or three tablespoonfuls of currant jelly and spread a round cut from a long French loaf. Spread a second round with butter and chopped nuts and press together. Pistache nuts may be used in place of the peanuts if preferred for extra occasions.

DELICACIES FROM CHEESE.

The French are very fond of dishes in which cheese and eggs are combined. These are variously called fondeaux or ramequins, and are side dishes for handsome tables. The ramequins are served in special-shaped dishes shaped like cups. To make ramequins, take two eggs, two spoonfuls of melted butter and one of grated cheese. Mix these substances together and bake in the cups for a quarter of an hour.

The French make ramequins as follows: Boil half a pint of milk and half the quantity of cream. Melt an ounce of butter, add a little salt and a spoonful of flour and stir over the fire five minutes. Pour the milk and cream in by degrees and work smooth. Take the mixture off the fire and add half a pound of grated cheese, some coarse ground pepper, a small piece of nutmeg, a little powdered sugar, the yolks of eight eggs and the well-beaten whites of two. When all this has been well mixed, add the whites of six eggs beaten to a froth. The batter must be as thick as cream. Pour the mixture into ramequin dishes and bake in a slow oven eighteen minutes.

To make cheese souffle, put a pint of milk in a stewpan with two ounces of butter. When it begins to boil, put in two spoonfuls of flour and stir over the fire until the bottom of the stewpan is dry. Then by degrees add four eggs and a pound of grated cheese. Mix well, season with cayenne pepper and salt, and mold the paste into little balls. Drop them into butter and fry light brown.

Cheese straws require two ounces of butter, two ounces of flour, two ounces of bread crumbs, two ounces of grated cheese and one-half a small teaspoonful of mixed salt and cayenne. These ingredients should be mixed into a paste, rolled to one-fourth of an inch in thickness and cut in narrow strips. They must then be laid on a sheet of paper and baked.

The following recipe is recommended for Welsh rabbit: Cut slices of bread and butter about one-half an inch thick and remove the crusts. Toast the bread without hardening or burning it. Cut some slices from a good cheese and lay them over the toasted bread and place all on a cheese toaster in the oven so that the cheese will be melted. Spread over the top a seasoning of mustard and serve hot.

Another recipe for rabbit advises the pouring of melted cheese into a chafing dish or saucepan with about one ounce of melted butter and a very little ale, beer or fresh cream, according to taste. Stir over the fire until the ingredients are well mixed and dissolved; then take off, add a well-beaten egg, pour over slices of toast and eat while hot.

Cheese and crackers may be served together as follows: Split in two some water biscuits and moisten the inside surfaces with warm water. Melted butter and French mustard should then be applied and lastly a thick layer of grated cheese, over which cayenne pepper is sprinkled. The separate portions of the crackers should then be united and all placed in a hot oven until the cheese is melted.

To utilize dry cheese (and at the same time make a palatable dish for supper,) grate it, and to each cupful of the crumbs add one beaten egg, a tablespoonful of sweet milk, a dash of cayenne and a little salt. Place in a saucepan over a gentle fire and stir until the cheese is melted. Pour over slices of toasted bread nicely buttered and serve at once. C. C.

PRESSED BEEF WITH VEGETABLE GARNISH.

Buy four or five pounds of corned beef, selecting the fancy brisket, which will give a good proportion of fat and lean. Plunge it into rapidly boiling water and after it has commenced to boil, draw the kettle where the cooking will be nearer simmering than boiling, as this will make the meat more tender. When the meat is done, chop it coarsely in a bowl, then turn into a bread pan or mould and cool. Do not discard the fat because, mixed with the lean, it is both appetizing and healthful.

As a garnish cut a pint of potato balls with a vegetable cutter and cook them about ten minutes, or until they can be pierced with a knitting needle; a fork will break them in pieces. Use the potato shells from which the balls were cut for a dish of mashed potato, which will also cook in about ten minutes. Cut two carrots in small strips or straws. Turn the mould of beef onto a platter, arrange a mound of potato balls on either side in a bed of parsley and a bunch of carrot straws on more parsley at each end of the platter, and you have an idealized "boiled dinner" that will tempt the appetite which would scorn plain boiled beef and vegetables. This dish is especially good for luncheon or supper. ALICE E. WHITAKER.

BEEF ESSENCE FOR INVALIDS.

Neither beef tea made in a bottle, nor beef extracts as bought in liquid or tablet form, can equal as a restorer beef juice extracted from freshly cooked meat. This furnishes both stimulant and nourishment without taxing the digestion and is most useful in cases of extreme exhaustion and debility. For beef essence buy the second or third slice from the top of the round; one-half pound will be sufficient to cook at one time. Trim off the fat and broil the meat over a hot fire, turning every ten seconds in order to sear the outside. If the beef is over-cooked the juice will not run freely and the same is true if the meat is but warmed through. Three minutes gives just the right condition to steak cut one and one-half inches thick. Cut the meat on a hot plate into pieces an inch and a half square and gash each piece with a knife, then put into a lemon squeezer and press out the juice into a cup set in hot, but not boiling, water. If the cup is too hot the beef juices will become coagulated and muddy. One-half pound of meat should yield four tablespoonfuls of juice; if it does not it was cut too thin or broiled too much or too little. ALICE E. WHITAKER.

Their Trip to Europe.

HOW IT WAS MADE POSSIBLE BY A MARBLE STATUETTE.

BY SIRNA WOODS.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Reynolds sat in the back parlor of their pretty new cottage looking at their surroundings with qualified approval.

"The carpets and the curtains and the furniture are all right," said the lady, "but we are deficient in pictures and bric-a-brac."

They had been married a month and had just returned from their wedding trip on the coast and settled down in their new home. Chester Reynolds was a book-keeper on a salary which might have been larger; and he had spent all of his capital on the building and furnishing of his house. The engagement, indeed, had been extended first, to two and then to three years, that the young man might save enough to make this start in married life. Sylvia had at first insisted upon a wedding trip to Europe also; but her lover had rebelled against further postponement of the marriage. He had compromised, however, by promising the coveted trip in the second year of their marriage, the money for the purpose to be saved from his salary. Sylvia was to be the financier, receiving the funds and expending the necessary amount on the housekeeping, reserving the balance for the trip. Now, however, as she looked about the tastefully furnished rooms, she seemed more sensible of certain bare places on walls and mantel and cabinet than of the pretty furnishings that had delighted her at the time of their purchase.

"If we could only get a few things," she said, "before we begin to save for Europe, I think I should be satisfied."

"I suppose it would not matter if we postponed the time a month or two," replied her husband, "if you would feel better satisfied."

"You know we entertain the whist club the next time," said Sylvia thoughtfully, "and really I would like for the house to look its best. What I would like for the parlors," she continued tranquilly, "would be a water-color copy of Guido Reni's "Aurora" and a European carbon of the "Madonna of the Chair" in the front room, and Hofman's "Christ in the Temple" and portraits of Raphael and Heine out here. Then," she added, "of course I should want several Austrian vases and marble busts and statuettes scattered around."

Her husband groaned.

"It would take two or three months' postponement of our trip to get these," he said.

"Well, of course," said Sylvia, "I shouldn't think of buying them all at once. I was only saying what I wanted to have in the course of time. Then there is the sideboard," she mused, glancing through the sliding doors that opened into the dining-room; "it looks rather bare."

The first month they got an electric lamp and the "Aurora" and a Wedgwood milk pitcher. There was nothing saved for the European trip, but they spent much time in the evenings admiring their new possessions, which had been noticed by several members of the whist club.

"But we really must save something the next time," said Sylvia; and Chester assented.

But at the end of the next month a cousin of Chester's sent word that he and his wife would be passing through the city and would spend a day or two with them.

"Will and I were old play-fellows and school chums," said Chester, "and he has done pretty well in the world. I would like to make as good an appearance as possible."

"We will need a Haviland salad set," said Sylvia, "and some oyster forks."

Again the European trip was set forward a month in the future.

The third month there was a bankrupt sale of Austrian cut glass, and they decided it would never do to let such an opportunity pass.

"We might never have another chance to get these things so cheap," they said; and we will not be satisfied without them." And they tried to put from their minds the thought of the postponed trip, as they looked proudly at their new treasures and saw what an air of elegance they gave to the rooms.

The fourth month they resolutely turned their eyes from the attractions of the show windows and would not see the empty nooks and wall spaces they had already filled in their imagination.

It was a happy day for Sylvia when she had balanced her housekeeping accounts and found a surplus of the amount they had agreed upon as the monthly contribution to their European fund.

"I will take it to the bank this very day," she decided; "for if I don't, a burglar might take the inopportune time to rifle the house."

She told her husband of her determination at lunch, and when he came home in the evening it was with the thought that she would meet him with the announcement that the European fund was started. But she did not come into the hall as he entered, and she was not in the parlors or the dining-room. He found her at last in the bedroom, sitting in a rocking-chair in an attitude of dejection, her hands clasped about her knees. The face she lifted to him was pale, the eyes full of pathos.

"Good heavens, Sylvia," he exclaimed, "what's the matter? Is some one at home sick or—or dead?"

His wife shook her head. She had risen and stood drooping before him, her hands clasped, her eyes downcast.

"Chester," she said, with unusual solemnity, "I have done something dreadful."

The anxiety of his face relaxed; and seating himself in the chair she had vacated he drew her down on his knee.

"What terrible thing have you done?" he asked, smiling.

"I have spent the money," she burst out, desperately.

"Spent the money?" he echoed.

"Yes, the European money," she replied. "I was taking it to the bank and I had to pass Johnson & Bay's, you know; and they had the most exquisite Castellina marbles in the window. There were three Venuses and a Cupid and Psyche and a Gladiator and the loveliest Apollo. They have never had anything of the kind here before, you know; and I could not resist going in to look at them. Then I thought how lovely the Apollo would be in that empty corner in the front parlor. And I keep looking at it until it seemed to me it was the one thing I wanted to make me completely happy. After awhile a lady came in and said she wanted to select a piece and she looked at the Apollo. Then I—— said I had already decided to take it. After that the clerk asked me if I had a pedestal or a suitable table for it; and I knew I hadn't. So I got an onyx table; it had to be a nice one, you know, and—and it took all the money."

She looked at him anxiously, like a repentant culprit. For a moment he regarded her gravely, then he broke into a laugh.

"Well," he said, "I can stand it if you can. It's only another month added to the time."

"You're so good to take it that way," she said. "But this is the last thing I shall buy; I'm determined on that."

"But show me your acquisition," he said; "I'm burning with impatience to see it."

She led the way into the parlor and pointed to it tragically. The pure, translucent marble was carved in a figure of the most exquisite grace. Sylvia sat down and sighed deeply.

"It's lovely," she said; "but I cannot help feeling sorry that I got it."

As time passed she could not throw off the feeling, and the statuette became a kind of Moloch on whose altar she sacrificed her desires. She had intended making a little visit to her mother this month, but she gave it up.

"I cannot afford it," she explained to her husband, "because I got the Apollo."

And the money for railroad fare went into the European fund.

She wanted a new hat and the latest thing in belts; but she looked at the Apollo and put the thought aside.

One evening her husband asked her if she would like to go to the opera the next night.

"Do you think we had better?" she said seriously. "You know we have the Apollo."

"That is so," he replied; "we will add the money to the fund."

The months slipped by, each one marked by a deposit for "the fund." Sylvia could never quite forgive herself for her one extravagance; she would not read the advertisements of bankrupt sales. Whenever she was tempted to indulge in a picture or vase she remembered the Apollo.

When the marble statutte had been in the house a year they found that they had saved the requisite amount for their trip. Their preparations were soon made, and they stood one day on the deck of the steamer, watching the shore line fade in the distance, while far and away stretched the seemingly limitless expanse of the billowy ocean.

"I can hardly realize," said Chester, musingly, "that we are actually on our way to Europe. It does not seem true that before long we shall see the things of which we have read and dreamed so long."

Sylvia thought of the wall spaces in their cottage still unfilled with pictures, and of the empty nooks of the house. She thought of the theaters and concerts they had missed in the last year, and of the dresses she had retrimmed and turned. She thought of her last extravagance in house furnishing, and suddenly the consciousness of guilty slipped from her conscience forever.

"And to think," she cried joyfully, "we would never have saved the money in the world if it had not been for the Castellina Apollo."

Cruelties to Children.

TORTURES INFLICTED UNINTENTIONALLY BY PARENTS.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Every mother in the world would resent the suggestion that she has ever laid herself liable to interference on the part of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Very well.

But how many mothers are there in the world who can read down this column, then rise up and plead "not guilty" to the entire list of common, every-day, if granted unintentional, cruelties to children too young to offer a protest in their own behalf.

How many mothers in the world have never in their whole lives been guilty of using the baby's arm as a handle? Have never, when in a hurry, dragged the little one along by the arm in an effort to make his tiny legs take the same steps as her own full-grown ones? Or swung it by the arm across a ditch or down the steps of a street car? Or pulled it by the arm up a flight of stairs, each rise of which was knee-high to the baby?

This is one of the commonest of the little cruelties to children, committed alike by doting, if thoughtless, mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles, grandparents. And if it means nothing to put yourself for a moment in the child's shoes and fancy how it would be to have a giant come along and grab you tightly by the hand and swing you up or down from a street-car platform that is about as high as your chin, across a ditch deep enough for you to drown in, up steps as high as your knees, or along the street at a giant's pace, then listen to what the doctors say may result from this use of a baby's arm:

The most common danger from this practice is dislocation of the shoulder. Children do not always know when this happens, and it may not be noticed until too late to remedy the injury. If it is not properly set, there is danger of irritation in the shoulder, with the possibility of necrosis of the bone.

Again, there is danger of twisting the arm out of shape. The cartilage in a child's body does not become bone until the seventh year. With a very young child the cartilage may be jerked out of shape, and it is a mere chance that a crooked cartilage becomes straightened before it hardens into bone.

The strain on a child's arm when used in this manner causes a pressure of the main nerve, and injury to this nerve is apt to produce weakness of the wrist and hand. Not only the nerve, but the muscles also are strained in this way and may become atrophied, inducing paralysis. And dragging a child about by the arm weakens the chest muscles, and this weakens the lungs and heart.

It is the most natural thing in the world to take a child by the hand and fancy you are helping it over the hard places, but one thoughtless moment may prove to be of infinnitely more harm than help.

How many mothers, not guilty on this count, have never in their whole lives taken the baby out in its perambulator without a parasol over it, or with the top down, and let the baby lie there staring with its poor little unprotected eyes straight up at the sun? It is so easy to go away in a hurry and leave the parasol top at home, or, when thinking of the bargains you are going to buy, forget to shift the folding top of the buggy into place. And the only punishment severe enough for such thoughtlessness is to take the offender out and lay her on the lawn at midday, and keep her there staring at the sun while she is reminded constantly that a baby's eyes are ever and ever so much more delicate than her own. And the chances are that next time she will see that the baby's eyes are protected.

Another form of cruelty to children is letting them sit on chairs so high that their poor little feet dangle about midway between the seat and the floor. A mother often tells a story of how her little girl used always to wriggle about on a grown-up's chair and complain that her legs were so "dreary." The mother was a clever one, and the child an only one, but with all the mother's cleverness and absolute devotion to the child, she could not figure out what "dreary" legs might mean. One day, in trying to coax a further explanation from the child, the little one volunteered this: "It feels like buzz." And then the mother knew that sitting on a high chair put the baby's legs to sleep. That day the father was instructed to buy a low child's chair for every room in the house, and after her own child outgrew them the mother kept the low chairs for any other children that might come into her home to visit.

Equally trying to a child is this same sort of chair at the table. Too high it may be elsewhere, but at table it is too low. And many a child so placed at table gets an unmerited scolding for tipping over its glass of milk, or scattering food from its plate. Fancy for yourself how graceful your table manners would be if the top of the table were on a level with your chin.

Then there is sending of children to bed in a dark room when they are afraid. Can you not go back to your own childhood, and think of those nameless terrors that filled your poor little mind when bedtime came and you had to leave the warmth and the light and the company for the quiet room upstairs with the window arranged so the room would have fresh air through the night, and when you were slipped into your nightie and your prayers were said, the light went out and you were left in the big, black, lonesome dark?

Of course not every child is afraid of the dark, and it is very often somebody's fault when one is. Ignorant nurses and thoughtless mothers put a lot of foolish notions into a child's receptive little brain. With most children it would be enough to follow the example of the sensible mother who, as soon as her baby began to understand, often picked him up and carried him with her from a lighted room into a dark one or out upon the veranda, saying: "Let's go and see the pretty dark."

Always she talked to him of the dark as something soothing and sweet and good, and he never knew what it was to be afraid. But where children are sent into the dark for punishment, and are told stories of horrible things that live in the dark, it gives them a terror of the dark that is never wholly overcome. And to send a child that is afraid into a dark room is an unpardonable cruelty.

There is no end to the cruelties, often wholly unconscious on the mother's part, committed in the name of vanity. The mention of one will suggest many more. This one is the twisting of a child's hair up tight on curling papers or tins. For a few seasons straight hair has seemed to have some legitimate place in the scheme of things feminine, and the mania for curls has been a trifle less acute. But there is no telling at what instant it may break out with renewed vigor. Curl papers are never comfortable to sleep in, as almost every woman knows, and particularly when they are twisted until the hair tugs at the scalp. A child's complaint that her hair is twisted too tight has very little weight with a mother inten on seeing a fine mass of curls in he morning, and the child goes to bed about as comfortable as if she were lying on a pillow of pebbles, and little wonder if her sleep is disturbed by bad dreams and she wakes up cross after a restl night. This is a very easy route to a neurotic womanhood.

Another everyday cruelty to children, due rather to ignorance than to carelessness or thoughtlessness, is allowing them to suffer for water. A young child should be give plenty of water. Even a baby should have its spoonful at proper intervals. And after a child has begun to take solid food it requires water regularly between meals. Of course, the child does not know at first that the discomfort of thirst is relieved by water, and therefore cannot tell the mother why it is fretful. But before a child is old enough to talk and tell its wants, it is a very safe guess that a fair proportion of fretfulness is caused by thirst, and often a storm of tears and temper can be allayed by a glass of water.

While no doubt there are many other little cruelties, unconsciously inflicted, these are the most common ones. And how many mothers who have read this far can still answer, "Not guilty."?

Science Studies Your Baby.

Science takes a large and comprehensive interest in modern babies and baby-statistics, says the September Delineator.

The average weight of boy babies at birth is seven pounds; girls about six and a half pounds. During the first three days the child loses weight; after it is a week old it steadily increases.

A child should increase in weight two pounds for every addition of an inch in height between three and four feet, and two and one-half pounds for every inch between four and five feet.

The healthy baby triples its weight at birth in one year, doubles this in six years, quadruples this weight in thirteen years, and at 21 a man weighs twenty-one times his weight at birth.

Oysters in Jelly Are Delicious.

It is essential in modern cookery that the food please the eye as well as the palate, says the September Delineator.

A dainty suggestion to this point was furnished at one of the late spring banquets, when each guest was served with an individual mold of aspic, in the center of which there were several appetizing-looking oysters. The molds were of different shapes, and were served on beds of watercress, while the aspic had been generously flavored with lemon juice. The combination, therefore, was as tasty as it was attractive.

ETAL effects are conspicuous in the new laces.

The popular filet lace, in particular, has been exquisitely developed by the introduction of these metallic threads.

as it is unique is the little simple white chiffon dress trimmed lace.

The latter is cunningly fashioned into a perfectly flat waist, and sleevecaps, relieved by fichu drapery and full sleeve puffs of the chiffon.

No prettier dinner gown for the young girl has been shown this season.

Lace flounces of every sort, from Irish to Chantilly, may be used upon hats and wraps. Lace-trimmed hats with velvet crowns are very much the thing.

As the ruffle falls to the back of the neck, it will easily be understood that a lace eighteen inches in width is not too much to count upon.

Fringes and tassels, used so far with great moderation, may be named as the latest thing in the way of trimming for bodices and blouses.

When decorating wools or silk, the trimmings are fashioned to match the gown's material; for cottons, which they adorn with equal impartiality, they are fashioned of white linen thread.

It is, indeed, in this way that they are most successfully employed, for they appear so much more original.

One of the most unexpected effects that could be imagined in the way of a lingerie blouse is that made of broderie Anglaise on finest mull, the deep bertha and narrow turned-back cuffs of which are edged with a heavy linen ball fringe.

A novel idea for a fringe-edged blouse is one of heavy filet lace, trimmed with cream satin bands and pure white linen fringe, in true Carmen fashion.

Cotton tassels fastening a curious little waistcoat of point applique lace is another pretty touch.

As for tassels!

Though few of them are used upon any single gown, the various manners of so doing are beyond the imagination of the most ingenious.

As pendants to the big buttons that, supposedly, hold a low-cut bodice against the tucker; finishing the ends of ribbons that lace the back or sleeves of waists; or, again, in a much larger size, holding together the ends of those wide, soft streamers that fasten many girdles, might be mentioned as a few of the methods most seen.

The most amazing, audacious and coquettish blouses, too, are shown in creamy tucked net, embroidered boldly and lavishly in Montenegrin colors and designs.

There are vivid blues, yellow reds, with here and there little knots or bands of blue silk.

More Frenchy-looking illustrations of the really new things in winter blouses would be hard to imagine, and the general effect is so perfectly harmonious that it fails to be spectacular, despite the audacity of the colors used.

Any of these embroideries and vivid touches of color may be applied to inexpensive laces by the clever needlewoman.

Big buttons, handsomely embroidered, are another distinctive touch on the new suits and blouses.

These buttons are sometimes overlaid with gold lace and braided in black soutache.

Another effective decoration is the running of gold and silver threads through the sheerest, laciest stuffs imaginable.

This decoration is particularly effective in the splendid Tyrian purple and in certain shades of luminous, vivid greens.

These touches of hand embroidery on the laces have a deceitfully demure and simple air, but one will find them extremely expensive if purchased already embroidered.

The work can easily be done at home by the most amateurish of embroiderers at a very small cost.

And the lace wraps!

They are some of the most absurdly charming creations of this season of beautiful things.

The foundation wrap must be made of satin or silk, interlined with wadding and lined again with silk.

Upon this are draped the billowy, fluffy flounces.

After all, a lace wrap is not exactly what it seems.

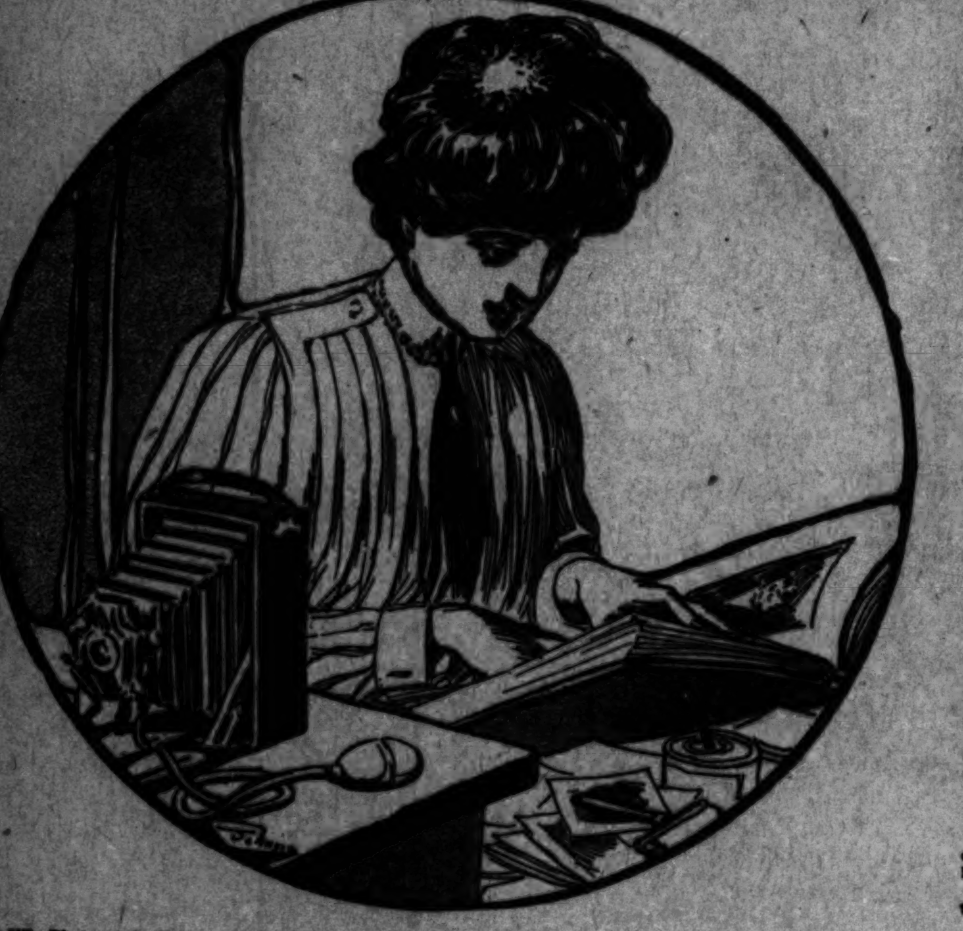
CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK, PRESIDENT

WHAT HAS YOUR CAMERA TAUGHT YO



OUR Photograph Exchange is pretty well established now.

I don't recall the exact date when the first notice of it appeared on the page, but I know it has been showing itself there now for a good many weeks, and that the number of girls who write to me about their photographs, their desire to exchange and their interest in photography is steadily increasing.

Do you think it is too soon for me to take a sort of account of stock and ask you what your camera has done for you?

What it has done for some of you I already know, through the letters which have come to me and through the pictures.

The vacations have been in part shared by me in the glimpses which have come to me of the places in which the girls have taken their rest and recreation. Even more than these have told me, however, have I learned from the letters.

Let me tell you of some things I have gleaned.

Pleasure I know your cameras have brought you, as a matter of course.

The pleasure of the picture taking and of the spots into which the search for the pictures has led you.

A closer knowledge of nature, and through this a closer appreciation of art. I remember well what one person said to me once about her experience with photography.

She began by telling me with some confusion that she had been a woman grown before she had known what was meant by the "composition" of a picture. "I had heard it spoken of again and again," she said.

"But I never understood, although I tried to look wise. Then one day when I was reading something on pictures and how to look at them I came across a definition of composition, the way in which the different parts of a picture balanced one another, so to speak, and the arrangement by which it all formed a harmonious whole.

"It was a revelation to me, and after that when I looked at pictures I tried to study their composition and see it as the artist might have seen it.

"Then when I took up photography," she went on, "I found I, too, must study the 'composition' of my pictures. If I didn't, they would be one-sided and have an incomplete, inartistic air. Working with my camera has done more than any one thing I know of to help me to understand true art and to know and love pictures."

This same sort of thing has doubtless come to many of you, and you have had the pleasure which accompanies any experience that stands for mental growth.

Then, too, there has been the happiness which I hope many of you have found in the companionship which a knowledge and love of photography have brought you.

If I may judge by the applications which have come to me for addresses, a good many friendships have been formed through this camera exchange, friendships which have extended to other things besides taking pictures, and which will last after the pictures have faded out.

Another thing the camera has done for some of you has been to teach you more of the joys of out-of-doors.

I know of two or three girls who took up photography as a kind of fad, just because so many others they knew were interested in it. They didn't care especially for the beauty of nature, and only thought it would be "fun" to take pictures.

But they began photographing bits of outdoors, and after a little the fascination of the thing asserted itself, and they became as enthusiastic over this or that lovely study for a picture as if they had gone into it at first for sheer love of the thing.

"How has photography helped me?" asks one. "Well, I think it has taught me patience and carefulness.

"You can't hurry photography, you know, and I soon found I had to cultivate patience in awaiting developing processes and in giving my pictures time to print.

"Two or three times when I had rushed through things in a hurry and without taking pains I was punished by failure, and once at least it happened with a film which I could not replace and the picture was lost.

"Then, too, I learned that you couldn't be too slapdash and expect good results, or at least you might expect them, but you didn't get them!

CAREFUL AND PATIENT

"So I have learned in that thing at least to be more careful and patient—and perhaps in one or two other lines as well."

"You would laugh, perhaps, if I told you it had taught me economy," remarks another.

"But it has. I used to be the most extravagant girl that ever stepped, and if I saw a thing I wanted I always bought it if I had the money for it, and very often when I hadn't the least right to spend the money for that thing.

"When I started working with my camera I just fell in love with photography. My brother used to tell me he believed I took my camera to bed with me, I was so crazy about it. Well, you know you can't buy camera supplies for nothing, they don't give them away with a pound of tea, and I very soon found that if I wanted to get the kinds of paper I wanted for printing and all the different frills and fixings that go with a camera I would have to stop throwing my money around in a foolish fashion.

"So I gave up lots of silly things I had been in the habit of buying and never had needed, and when I found how well I got along without them I thought perhaps I never had really wanted them, and I made up my mind that even if I stopped photography I wouldn't go back to flinging my money away again."

What has it taught you other girls? What has it done for you? I know of some very kind things it has done for some of the girls, and they were not the owners of the cameras, either.

Some of the shut-in girls who cannot get out of doors have had out-of-doors brought to them by the pictures their Each and All friends have taken and sent to them. Little pictures, very often, slipped into a letter, or even taken on a postcard, blue prints, sometimes, and of very little money cost, but they have meant much to the girls who receive them, not only because of the glimpses of nature they supplied, but also because of the evidence they brought of loving memory and tender thoughtfulness.

They have taught thoughtfulness as well as showed it, these camera pictures. Many a girl who had given little consideration to the sick and suffering has been seized with the idea of the pleasure her pictures might give and has been drawn by that to display more thought for others in need.

A PRETTY ALBUM

Pictures of this sort come in different ways. I have spoken of the little one slipped in the letter or on the postcard, but there are some girls who have done more. I have one very pretty little album of my own, made of rough dark gray paper and containing half a dozen tiny prints of beautiful woodsy spots.

It was sent to me by a dear girl, and I wish I could believe she had as much pleasure in taking and developing and mounting those pictures as I have had in looking at them and enjoying her thought of me as well as the pictures.

Another one sent me an enlargement of a lovely ferny dell. I can actually feel the breath of the woods when I look at it.

I am pretty sure one of the things her camera has done for her has been to teach her new ways to live up to her Each and All pledge to make the world a little sweeter place to live in.

Then, has not your camera done something for you by robbing the preparations for Christmas gifts of some of its terrors? Perhaps you think that is a rather dreadful way to speak of it.

I love Christmas as well as the rest of the world, but I must say that I go through much mental anguish to think up things to give my friends.

What has your camera done for you in this, girls?

Has it given you any new ideas to share with the rest of us, ideas of how to make attractive gifts with photographs?

If so, pray send them to me and let me put them on the page, that all may be helped by them.

One thing especially I hope your cameras have done for you, and that is to furnish you with another interest by which you can bring girls into Each and All.

We who know it understand well how much more there is in our society than a camera or any other one thing, no matter how good, can possibly bring.

But we have sometimes to coax in those who do not yet grasp the full meaning of Each and All, and anything which will help us to help them by bringing them in is of value.

Are you girls making the most of your cameras in this way? Have they helped you in this line?

Write and tell me all about it for the sake of the happiness it will bring me and of the good it will do the other girls.

What the Various Members Are Doing and Thinking

A Morning Prayer

THIS is in reply to your article on "The Moods of the Breakfast Table." I am one who enjoys the morning above any other time in the day, and should feel inclined to scourge myself if I ever got into the unamiable frame of mind that I have seen so many folk display.

Robert Louis Stevenson's "Morning Prayer" should be given to all members. I always read it over as I comb my hair. Here it is:

"The day returns and brings us the petty rounds of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry.

"Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored; and grant us in the end the gift of sleep. Amen."—Robert Louis Stevenson.

ARIZONA GIRL (Prescott, Ariz.).

I admire this girl's sunny disposition. Others would do well to imitate it.

Flirtation

There is flirting and flirting. It is certainly wrong and unwomanly for a girl to deliberately set to work to win the highest and noblest affections of a man simply to see if she can do so, when she has no intention whatever of marrying him should he desire to make her his wife.

It is unwomanly and unmanly to play with a person's affections, only to cast them aside when tired of amusing one's self with them. It destroys man's confidence in woman and woman's confidence in man, when either one has been deceived.

Of course, there are sometimes misunderstandings; sometimes one mistakes one's own emotions, often taking friendship for love. There can be strong ties of friendship and respect between man and woman without either party caring for the other with the love which should exist between husband and wife. They could even be dear to each other as brother and sister, but as man and wife be a total failure.

Nothing is more unbecoming to true manhood and womanhood, nothing more lacking in honor, than wilfully and knowingly to come between a married couple.

Such flirtations as I have mentioned above are the wrong kind of flirtations; the kind in which no noble-hearted girl would indulge.

But a girl certainly has a perfect right to make herself as attractive as possible to both men and women. She has a right to cultivate a winning personality, especially in manner and conversation. She has a right to extend her womanly sympathy and help to both sexes when needed.

Let her be natural and unconstrained in her attitude toward both men and women, if she feels she will not be misunderstood. A girl may be entertaining, may enjoy herself to the full, and still maintain her self-respect and the respect of others, if she will only remember that the greatest charm of womanhood is true womanliness. Let her cultivate a universal good will toward all mankind.

Of course, it must be remembered that there are certain types of men (or, rather, creatures who call themselves men) who are so puffed up with self-conceit, so evil-minded, that the slightest bit of pleasantry will immediately be accepted by them as a license to make as free as they choose.

With men of this class a girl should simply be polite—frigidly polite—when obliged to speak to them, as it is almost dangerous even to be civil.

But when a girl becomes acquainted with a man whom she loves, or knows she could love if her affection would be reciprocated, she has a right to use every womanly power to win, not only his respect and his friendship, but his love.

And what holier or more beautiful gift can man and woman give to each other than that of perfect love—that love which makes a man love his wife as sweetheart, mother, sister and friend, and vice versa for a woman?

Ah! this would be a mighty dull old world if that kind of flirting were not permitted in it; or, in other words, if there were no love or no means by which we could let one another know we loved without directly confessing it. BUZZING BEE (Los Angeles, Cal.).

This is a most sensible letter. "Buzzing Bee's" ideas are of the right sort, and I am glad to publish her criticisms and advice for the benefit of our girls.

For Entertainment

Please print the following games for "Irene," of Waltham, Mass.:

OBSTRUCTION—Let two of the players remain in one room, while all of the others go to another room. Then place a number of breakable articles on the floor about one foot apart.

Call in the players to show them what you have done, sending them out immediately.

Then select a player and blindfold him, requesting him to walk the length of the floor without stepping on the china ornaments.

Of course, while the players are out of the room, one of the remaining players noiselessly removes the articles from the floor. As each player goes through the motions of stepping over imaginary ornaments, he has the bandage removed, and the merriment caused by his astonishment and the way he steps gingerly over the floor is great.

KISSING THE BLARNEYSTONE—All the players leave the room, with the exception of two, and a bowl of water and one of flour, are placed on the table. The players are called in one at a time until all have kissed the "blarneystone."

Each player is requested to be baptized, which means to have their faces covered with water, and to kiss the stone. The players are blindfolded, and as each one kisses the stone he remains in the room and watches the other guests go through the form. This game is for those who like fun and who do not mind being laughed at.

PROFESSIONS—Two players leave the room (two heads are better than one), and together they plan what their profession shall be. After they have chosen one they return to the room and go through many motions to represent a man working at his trade. For instance, if they choose carpentry, they pretend to hammer, saw and plane.

Try not to leave out a detail. If at the end of a limited time they fail to make the watchers understand, they tell the name of their trade and leave the room, to return as different workmen, with different trades.

OLIVE MAY (Philadelphia).

These suggestions for amusement will be appreciated by many besides "Irene." Who else can send descriptions of parlor games?

Bookkeeping and Music

I am a graduate of the Reading High School, and since then have been engaged as bookkeeper in a large shoe factory. I have taken music lessons, both vocal and instrumental, for over three years, and would like to make music my life's work.

I have some time to spare, and feel only too glad that I can help some of the other girls who probably do not have so many chances for happiness as I have had.

I would like to exchange postcards with some of the girls. H. B. D. (Reading, Pa.).

Generous offers like these are always welcome. "H. B. D." shows a most unselfish spirit.

Interested in Science

I am interested in music, French and, most of all, in science. If I could help any of the members in these branches I should be more than pleased to do so.

POND LILY (Newton, Mass.).

Who wishes to avail herself of help in these studies? Send me a stamped envelope for "Pond Lily's" address.

A Letter of Appreciation

I have been very profitably helped by many of our girls, and in a social way have been pleasantly entertained in many little ways.

I have been the recipient of kind remembrances, have received sixteen-page letters of the most interesting kind from the mother of one of the Eaches, have purchased some very artistic souvenirs from a North Dakota correspondent, and, oh! so many little things too numerous to mention.

My postcard collection has grown from 200 to nearly 1200, and I haven't a word of complaint to offer as to the inattention of any of the girls.

W. C. A. (West Derry, N. H.).

Letters like this are most gratifying. Nearly every mail brings testimony to the happiness Each and All is scattering all over the land.

Reading Matter and Pyrography

I have two needlework magazines, and also many copies of the Ladies' Home Journal, which I will send to any one who can pay the expressage.

I like to read, and spend most of my spare time in this manner. I am also interested in burnt-wood work.

LOTTIE (Brockton, Mass.).

Offers of reading matter are always plentiful. Here are two others:

More Reading Matter

I have two monthly papers I would like to pass on to some shut-in or old lady when I am through with them. In fact, I have several to give away, if they will pay postage on them. The magazines are the Ladies' World and the Busy Bee. E. M. B. (Derry, N. H.).

I have back numbers of the Ladies' Home Journal, Woman's Home Companion, McCall's and the Delineator, which I will be glad to send to any address.

MAXINE (Manchester, N. H.).

I will be pleased to supply either of the above addresses if a stamped envelope or postcard is inclosed for reply.

For Philadelphians Only

I am anxious to get, from a Philadelphian only, a complete set of the entire section in which the Each and All page appears. I wish them from December 23, 1906, to the present time, and for a few weeks to come. I will call for them anywhere in the city during Christmas week. Please write to me before then, however.

I will exchange for anything the holder wishes. She may keep most of the Each and All pages; I wish only a few of them and the rest of the section. I hope I can get these, as they are very important to me.

LAMIA (Philadelphia).

Has any one kept these sections of the newspaper? I trust "Lamia's" wish may be gratified.

From a Trained Nurse

I would like to hear from some member who is interested in nursing. I am a trained nurse, and will nurse Each and All girls who live in our city.

I can do fancy needlework, and would like some one to show me how to crochet a shawl, or will pay $2 for one. I would also like to hear from some one who will help me in water colors. I do most flowers, but not very well.

I will be willing to exchange any ideas of mine for these helps. Mrs. E. W. S. (Philadelphia).

This member's kindly offers will surely meet with a prompt response. I trust she may not be disappointed in securing the help she wishes.

Who Wants Original Designs?

If the girls would like to have designs for any article I would be very glad to make some for them. I am alone a great deal, and would enjoy hearing from any of the other members.

A BUSY BEE (Roxbury, Mass.).

Here is a chance for members who are always on the lookout for something distinctive.

Offers of Help

During the last week so many of the members have sent letters containing offers of help of one kind or another that I am going to group them below.

The spirit of helpfulness shown by the Each and All girls is a source of constant pleasure to me:

Music and School Studies

I am only 14 years old, but I would like to be of some help to the club members.

I have taken piano lessons for six years and could help anybody in this; also in dancing, drawing, or in almost any school study.

I am going in the second year in high school, and have studied Latin and know some French.

This is as far as I have got in languages. I like school and intend to be a teacher in the future. But I have one misfortune—I am a poor speller. Can any one help me to improve?

If anybody can and will help me, I will return the favor in any way I can or would be desired.

SISTER KA (Peabody, Mass.).

Each and All

THESE things I saw upon a summer's day:
A brook that loved and lingered by a flower;
A bird on bough, that gave song thanks for shower
Of sun; slow sailing its cerulean way,
And brightly twined upon the nether bay,
A single cloud raft; and, with day's last hour,
A lonely beach where rugged rocks gave dour
Resistance to the waves, with smoke of spray.

Such fellowship there is in nature—each
Bound up in all, and all in each—the high
Creation epic woven rune by rune
In brook and flower, yearning waves and beach,
Quotidian thaumaturgy of the sky,
And restless tides that follow on the moon.

ANON.

Sent by Lamia (Philadelphia).

A Swan Song

I made the cross myself, whose weight
Was later laid on me.
This thought is torture as I toil
Up life's steep Calvary.

To think my own hands drove the nails!
I sang a merry song,
And chose the heaviest wood I had
To build it firm and strong.

If I had guessed, if I had dreamed
Its weight was meant for me,
I should have made a lighter cross
To bear up Calvary!

—ANNE REEVE ALDRICH.

Patterns and Recipes

I am a Pennsylvania girl, but came to North Dakota last March. I am 22 years old, and love just the life I have here—free, pure and unhampered. I live on a large farm with my brother, my own home having been broken up some years ago.

I am much interested in cooking, fancy work and photography. I will exchange 4x5 pictures for any size, and I prefer mountain scenery.

I will also send patterns for fancy work and directions for stamping, and any recipes I may have that others would care for.

I have, beside cooking recipes, quite a few others of value; one how to make all kinds of ink, and lots of others that any one will be welcome to. I am very fond of poetry. M. M. (Westhope, N. D.).

Reading Matter

I have some weekly papers, all in good condition, that perhaps some other shut-in would like; but I will have to ask her to send postage for them. I would like to pay it myself, but cannot.

C. M. B. (Allentown, Pa.).

Poetry

If any of the girls are collecting poems, they are welcome to any I have—and I have quite a number.

A BUSY BEE (Philadelphia).

Recipes and Fancy Work

I am now living in New Hampshire, and am willing to help all I can. I may be able to help in many ways I previously have offered.

I would like to hear from any girls or married women who are interested in some particular talent (please do not think I mean that all do not have some talent), but I love so many things. I will give any one any kind of recipes for preserves, canned fruits, jellies and pickles, and would like to exchange fancy work.

Please put my name on the postcard list.

FAITHFUL.

(Brookline, N. H., formerly of Worcester, Mass.).

Embroidery

I am a young teacher in the public school, and do shadow and eyelet work. I shall be glad to help any member of the Each and All Society. I should like to exchange postals. F. G. I. (Gloucester, Mass.).

Jamestown Exposition

I will try to help whenever I can. I live in Phoebus, Va., close to the Jamestown Exposition, and would gladly help people along that come to see the exposition.

Mrs. F. E. (Phoebus, Va.).

I would suggest that "Mrs. F. E." and any members desiring to avail themselves of her kindly offer should exchange references before meeting.

One of Our Manicurists

I would like to get enough customers to be able to stay at home; that is, not be tied to special hours.

I thought that the girls who have manicuring done might be kind enough to help me in this way, either by making an appointment with me to call at my home, or for me to call at their homes any time after 6.30, any day but Saturday.

I cannot afford to stay at home until I can get enough work to make it pay. Any of the girls who call, wearing their badge, I will charge only 35 cents, but they must wear the badge.

I will help the girls in millinery, crocheting, embroidery, bead work and plain sewing.

FRENCHIE (Providence, R. I.).

There are enough members in Providence to give "Frenchie" a good start in business. I hope the girls will patronize her, and speak of her to their friends. Who wishes the help she so kindly offers?

Send me a stamped envelope for her address.

Fancy Work of Many Kinds

I have a large assortment of stamping patterns of embroidery and braiding and also have some letter designs. I make all kinds of lace, embroider, paint, and mend lace. I have made three silk patchwork quilts and have a number of silk pieces.

I am greatly interested in art and do putty work, which is very decorative, on flower pots, vases or pictures. GEORGIE E. S. (Philadelphia).

Any contribution of this sort is helpful to other girls.

Catnip for Pussy

I will be glad to send small packages of catnip to any one who has a pet cat and who is willing to pay the postage. Quantities of it grow about my house, and I know from experience how much better cats like it than that obtained at a drug store.

Mrs. F. (Prescott, Mass.).

This should appeal to our city members who are fond of cats.

[illegible] the lovely butterfly,

[illegible] went soaring high.

But, oh! he caught the bee!
And when that bee had flown away
A wiser chick was he.

When to his mother hen at night,
A sad, fat chick he went,
So swollen up with bumbly-stings,
For Dr. Dick she sent.

Who put a poultice on his tongue,
Another on his head,
Another on his sprouting tail,
And sent him off to bed.

Ben Ali, Prophet

ALI BAB was a good prime minister, who influenced his master, the sultan, to do much for his people. Unfortunately, however, he had a great enemy in Adab Suli. Adab longed to be prime minister himself and he was determined to secure the office at any cost.

One afternoon Ali Bab was lured into a quiet little garden back of the sultan's palace and there killed by two of Adab's servants. But there were two witnesses to this crime—Ben Ali and his closest friend. Hearing a smothered cry, they had peeped through the dense thicket upon the scene.

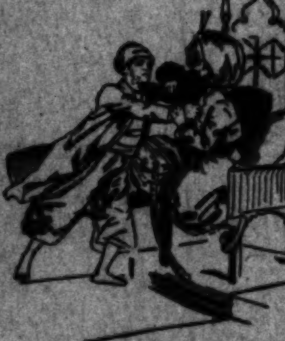
"Surely we must tell the sultan," exclaimed Ben Ali.

"Not so," returned the other, "else we be accused of taking part in the murder and our heads pay the penalty."

Ben Ali nodded. After thinking a moment, he continued: "I think I shall pretend I am a prophet. In this way I may gain audience with the sultan without being held for the offense. Certainly we cannot allow the crime to go unpunished, nor should the good Ali Bab remain unavenged."

So Ben Ali presented himself before the sultan. The sultan did not at first believe him when he told the cause for Ali Bab's disappearance, but when slaves were sent to dig beneath the tree in the little garden the body of the former prime minister was found, as Ben Ali had said.

Adab Suli was put to death and another appointed to the place of prime minister. The sultan did not forget Ben Ali. Surely such a wonderful prophet could be made good use of. He was therefore appointed chief magician to the sultan.



SEIZING THE SULTAN

It was not long before the chief magician began to wish himself anywhere else but at the court of the sultan. His royal master was very exacting, and Ben Ali was having a most miserable time.

Thus far he had escaped with his life, but one day the sultan told him, after he had failed in a prediction, that on the morrow his head would pay the forfeit. Ben Ali lost all sense of prudence. Seizing the sultan in his anger, he hurled him from his throne. Just at that very moment a magnificent candelabra, which hung above the throne, dropped with a crash upon the place where the sultan had been sitting an instant before.

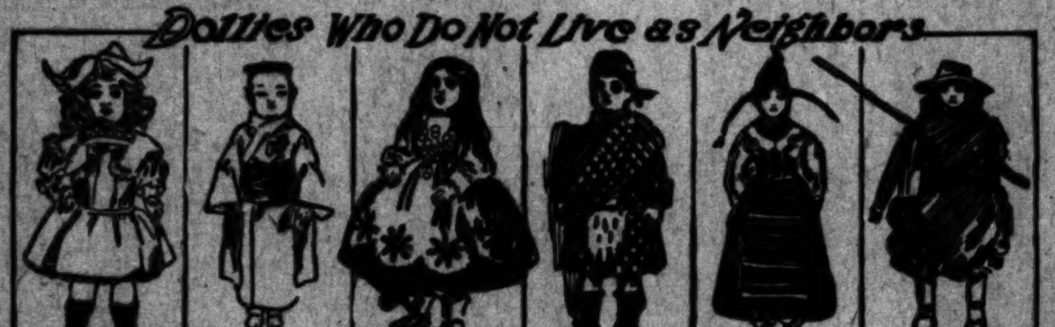
"You have saved my life!" cried the sultan, embracing Ben Ali. "You have but to name the reward and it is yours."

"I only beg that some other be appointed your chief magician," humbly petitioned Ben Ali. This request was granted. Ben Ali was given a fine mansion, surrounded by beautiful gardens, where he spent the rest of his days in peace.

DOLLIES THE WORLD OVER

WHILE YOU are dressing dolly, or putting her to bed, did you ever think that thousands of miles away some other little girl is taking the same care of her dolly, and, though it may seem hard to believe, she loves her dolly quite as much as you do yours? She may have nothing but an ugly, roughly dressed kind of a doll, but to her it is just as beautiful as your fine dolly, clothed as she is, in everything that a real little girl wears.

Little girls loved dollies thousands of years ago. They weren't always pretty, to be sure—indeed, they were mostly hideous—but they were precious to their owners, just the same.



Dolls more than 4000 years old—just think of it—have been found in Egyptian mummy collections. They are, for the most part, made of rope or beads. Then there are others of a later period, made of wood, stone or pottery. Some of these are even jointed. One 2700 or 2800 years old was carved of ivory and wore silver earrings in its tiny ears. Wooden dolls had the mouth, and ears, and eyes painted the nicest. In many instances, the paint is almost as bright today as thousands of years ago.

Most of the little Roman girls had wooden dollies, and if a girl died her dolly was buried with her. And their neighbors, the Greeks, had nice dolls, too.

The dolls of the Japanese are sometimes handed down from family to family for hundreds of years. Over in China grown folks play with them more than do the boys and girls, who are taught to regard their dollies with the greatest respect, and are not permitted to damage them in the slightest way.

Dolls made hundreds of years ago by the Pueblo Indians, who at that time dwelt among great cliffs, have been found—little clay figures, all cracked and battered. Today the dollies of the different Indian tribes often differ greatly in appearance. The Iroquois, for instance, make them of corn husks, with nice bushy hair, and dress them in clothes gaily decorated. Other tribes use such material as leather and jackrabbit.

So many kinds of dolls are owned by the little girls of different nations of the world at the present time that you would not dare try to count them.

Dolls in Japan don't change a great deal. The Japanese have a Festival of the Dolls, you know, when once a year all the little girls exhibit their dolls and have the merriest sort of a time.

The queer little Roumanian doll you see in the picture represents the Queen of Roumania as she looked when 7 years of age.

That charming Scotch laddie, in his pretty plaid, looks for all the world as though he had just stepped over from the heaths of Scotland, doesn't he? While the wee Swedish doll is dressed just like a country girl of Sweden.

As for the Russian peasant, you can see that he is clothed to withstand the piercing winter winds of the great steppes, or plains, or to protect him from the burning summer sun.

Children in Alaska play with funny-looking figures carved from wood and painted in a kind of tattoo fashion. The little Eskimos, too, have dolls carved from wood, dressed exactly like their own grown-ups, with even boots of reindeer hide.

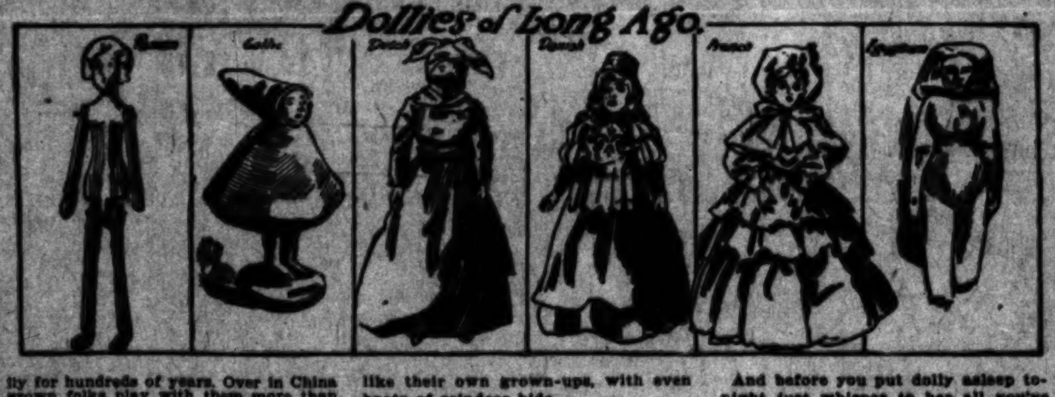
In Italy many a story do the Italian girls act with their dollies. They are much fonder of "making believe" than we are.

But it is in Germany that the most dolls are made. From here they are sent all over the world, dressed in the clothes of the country to which they are to go.

It was a Frenchman, Monsieur Jumeau, who first made dolls that were at all natural in appearance. His dolls were much sought for from the time he began this work (in 1862), as they well deserved to be.

Grown-ups, you know, pretend that they don't care a great deal about dolls, but every once in a while you read of some great exhibition where grown folks display all sorts of dolls. So they must really like them, after all; don't you think so? Boys, too, when they grow a little big, always say scornfully that "dolls are only fit for girls"—but if no one's around when he's ransacking an old play closet you'll find that the boy has the kindest sort of greeting for the old rag doll he hugged and sometimes, to his shame be it said, treated so badly. Oh, Polly Evans knows lots of the secrets of boys! But she won't give away any more just now.

So you see there are just as many queer dollies as there are queer little boys and girls. We always call others "queer," you know, when they're not just like us; but most likely they call us "queer," too, so it's fair all round. But remember to treat a strange doll kindly when you see one from a far-off country—a dolly who can't even speak our language. She's bound to feel homesick and lonely and funny so far from her own home.



And before you put dolly asleep tonight just whisper to her all you've learned about her cousins of other lands. She'd like to hear it, I am sure, and she'll feel more grateful than ever to think that she has a much more pleasant home than many of her distant relatives, and that she is YOUR dolly!

The Barrel Race

IN CANADA some of our boys indulge in a very exciting form of winter sport.

Barrels, with heads and bottoms removed, are placed along the ice course. Then the boys competing line up for the start.

Away they go, all skating for the first barrel. The skaters must pass through each barrel on their way toward the goal. It is very amusing to see several try to get through the barrel at the same time. Sometimes, in their exertions, the barrel is moved around so that it faces in the opposite direction, and the racer, upon emerging from the end, skates by mistake toward his starting point.

Not Playing Fair.

Two country boys were fishing from the edge of the creek.

"Bet I catch the most fish," said one.

"No, you won't," returned the other.

For some time they sat there, until one boy, growing sleepy, lost his balance and fell into the water.

"That's not fair," cried his companion, "you're not supposed to dive for them."

Advice Returned

IT WAS not long ago that a little incident happened which made a certain Sunday school teacher realize the foolishness of too much preaching.

A little girl, who had been in the teacher's charge for some months, was going to live in another town.

Thinking that she should not allow her scholar to part without some few words of advice, the teacher said:

"Should I never see you again, I hope you will never forget to do your best wherever you may be, and whatever tasks you are called upon to perform. I hope you will always be an honest, upright woman, truthful and brave."

Imagine her feelings when the eager face was upturned to hers and the little girl replied earnestly, "Thank you; and I hope you'll be the same."

Hers Was Bigger.

Mary—May I have some nuts, mother?

Mother—Yes; take a handful.

Mary—Mother, would you mind giving them to me.

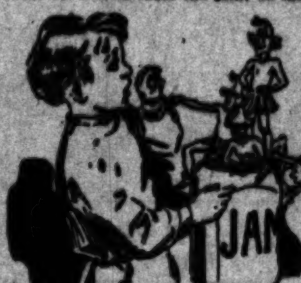
Mother—Why? Can't you get them?

Mary—Yes, but your hand holds more than mine.

The Enchanted Jam

"YES, DEAR; if you'll be very, very good, you may taste the jam from each of these jars, with the exception of just one—and that's an enchanted jar, which would cause trouble were it opened."

Wilfred was very, very good, and he was allowed to taste the jam, as mother had promised. It was so delicious. Wilfred just doted on jam, you know.



"THEN A STRANGE THING HAPPENED"

But that enchanted jar disturbed him dreadfully. At last he could stand it no longer. Leaning back in the little chair in his playroom, he muttered, "I've just got to taste that jam."

Tiptoeing downstairs, he stole breathlessly into the pantry. Taking the jar from its place on the shelf, he hurriedly removed the cover.

Then a strange thing happened. The jam began to turn into a liquid. The liquid swirled round and round, and little manikins pulled themselves from it and jumped over the edge upon the table. Joining hands, a whole company of them hopped gaily in a circle. You should have seen the mischief they got into after that. They ate everything in the pantry, and even caught the fish in the aquarium and gobbled them raw.

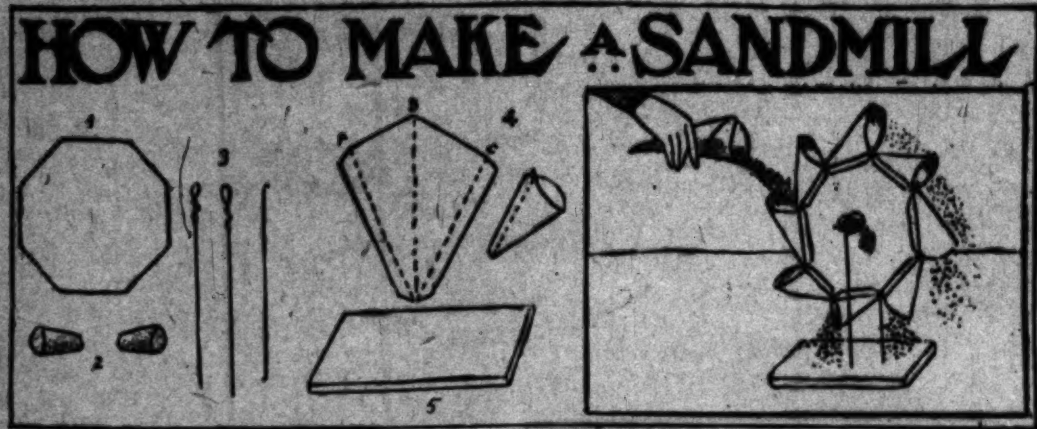
Wilfred tried to go to tell mother, but the manikins ran, all together, at his feet and tripped him so that he fell to the ground.

At last, just as Wilfred was beginning to cry, a little bell sounded. Thereupon, the elves quickly made their way back to the jar and jumped within. Wilfred replaced the cover on the jar at once.

Then he awoke—for, you see, he had dreamed all this in his playroom.

When Wilfred told his dream to mother, she smiled, and said: "The jam in that one jar is really not enchanted; I merely wished to see if my boy was strong enough to withstand the temptation. But you have learned the lesson well, haven't you?"

HOW TO MAKE A SANDMILL



DIAGRAMS FOR WORKING

CUT a piece of cardboard in an octagonal shape (Fig. 1), and pierce a hole in its center.

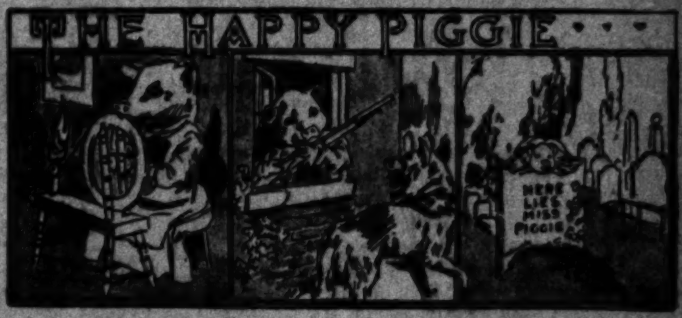
Take two corks and three pieces of iron wire. Pass one wire through the hole in the cardboard, and at each of the wire's ends stick a cork.

From a light visiting card cut eight cones. Figure 4 shows the exact shape of the cone, opened and rolled.

Cut a base, either from light wood or stout cardboard. Fasten the two iron wires still remaining unused to the iron wire having corks at its ends; fasten the other ends of your wires to the base.

This done, upon each side of your octagonal wheel paste a cone, as shown in the diagram.

To operate the wheel you have only to pour sand in the cones.



IN A little house, beside the road,
A little pig, in peace, abode;
Alone she laughed, alone she cried,
Alone she lived, alone she died.
She had a little parlor trim;
A little wheel at which to spin;
A little kitchen, trim and neat,
Where she cooked beans and apples
sweet.
She had a little bed upstairs;
A little gun to shoot the bears.
Of Mr. Wolf she had no fear,
She shot at him, if he came near.
A little garden in the rear
Gave food enough for piggy dear.
This little pig she lived content,
And oft to Sunday school she went:
She was so good, when she was dead
They put a tombstone at her head.

"Grumpy's" Revenge

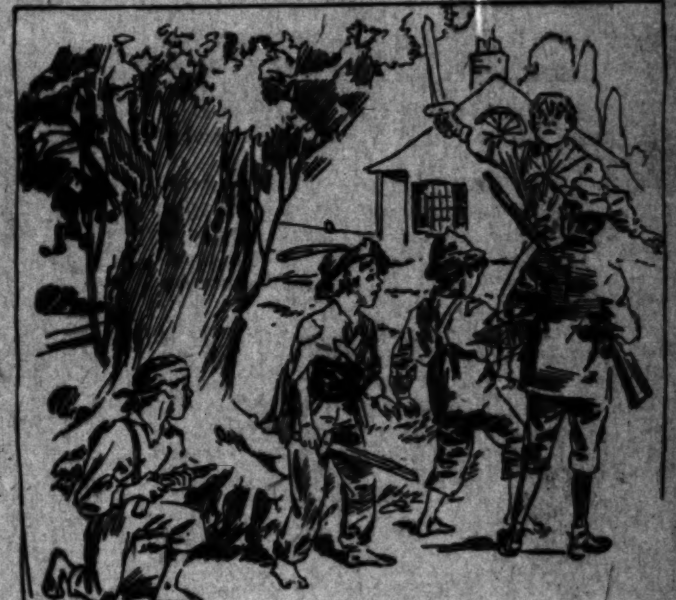
"THE little rascals! They got away with a dozen of my choicest melons just before the season closed, and I'll eat my boots if they don't raid my best grapevines and strip my best nut trees as soon as they get half a chance!"

Farmer Isaac Brown—known to the "Bloody Robbers" as "Grumpy"—waved his fist in the air as though threatening an imaginary member of the "Robbers."

"Oh, come now," remonstrated Farmer Jones, good-naturedly. "I thought they were the worst little scamps in creation, too, until I came to know them properly. When I found the chap they call 'Skinny' and that plucky Mumford boy exhausted by the pike, after their risky swim, I sowed better than I knew. Never had a bit of trouble with their 'gang' after that, and say, the rogues are really decent little fellows. They've done me lots of good turns since I've become friendly with them, instead of worrying the life out of me, as they used to when I wanted to pitch into them every time I caught sight of them. I tell you what, Farmer; you treat the boys right and they'll do the right thing by you."

Although Farmer Brown pooh-poohed and pretended not to agree with Mr. Jones, still the words sank deep in his mind.

"Wonder if the rascals would come 'round if I gave them a chance," he mused. "Oh, of course they wouldn't," he went on, with decision, remembering how for the past six months he had been harassed by the entire band of "Bloody Robbers."



"EVERY FELLOW SEEMED ANXIOUS TO LET THE OTHER CHAP GET AHEAD OF HIM"

But, all the same, he could not banish the idea from his mind. He surprised himself when, market day morning, he caught sight of Bill Mumford in the market house, and said to him:

"Say, sonny, I'd like to have you and the rest of the fellows pay me a visit tomorrow afternoon when school's out."

Bill could scarcely believe his ears. The rest of the band were no less excited than he.

"Better be careful," advised ex-Captain Skinny, the schemer; "mos' likely he's got somethin' up his sleeve for us."

Most of the "Robbers" agreed with Skinny, but Billy at last had his way, and it was decided that the "gang" would meet at Warner's barn immediately after school and see what "Grumpy" had in store for them.

Every one was at the appointed meeting-place on time, and they all set forth, excitedly discussing as to just what their visit might mean.

Arriving at the path that led across fields to the farmhouse, the lack of enthusiasm in the errand became quite noticeable. Every fellow seemed anxious to let the other chap get ahead of him and to find a place as far in the rear as possible.

Finally, however, Bill Mumford felt his responsibility as leader, and, striding to the fore, took his position as leader, at the same time chiding the laggards. Rather sheepishly the others mended their pace, but still failed to show the slightest eagerness.

The band slowly marched up to the door, where they were met by "Grumpy."

"Come this way, boys," was the cordial invitation, as he led them back toward the kitchen, where they saw great baskets of the choicest kind of grapes.

"Help yourself to all you want," was the next invitation. Then he added, with a twinkle in his eye, "I suppose you'd get the grapes anyhow, so you might as well have them now."

Not a lad moved. The dumfounded look on the face of each boy slowly changed to that of mortification.

Bill Mumford suddenly stepped forward.

"Mr. Brown," said he; "us fellers don't deserve you treatin' us this way, after all the mean tricks we've done ye. I c'n only say we'll stand by you after this—every blessed one of us. Won't we, fellers?"

"You jus' bet we will!" came in emphatic chorus, from the shame-faced group of "robbers."

"Oh, that's all right; come to think of it, maybe I haven't done just the square thing by you chaps, either. But jump in, boys! Take away all you can carry."

Without another invitation every one "jumped in," and there wasn't as much as a single grape left when they had burdened themselves, inside and out. Then, again thanking Farmer Brown heartily, they went on their way, most too elated to give expression to their feelings.

Farmer Brown indeed found that it "paid" to be friends with the "robbers." Always he could count on their help, and countless little favors they did for him. He's just as fond of them now as is Farmer Jones.

No longer is he known as Farmer "Grumpy," by the way.

An Unobserving Thief

YOSOUF owned a beautiful horse which was very valuable.

While Yousouf was transacting business a thief stole the horse.

The owner shortly afterward saw the rogue leading his horse, and took him before the caid, or judge.

"The horse is mine!" sturdily insisted the thief.

In vain the other argued, and the caid was about to give his decision in favor of the villain, when Yosouf advanced suddenly, threw his cloak over the horse's head and demanded of his enemy:

"Since you own the horse, tell the caid in which eye the animal is blind!"

"In the left," said the thief, making a wild guess.

Yosouf looked toward the caid triumphantly. "He's blind in neither eye," said he.

So the noble horse came into its rightful owner's possession again, and the wicked Arab was punished.

QUEEN OF THE KITCHEN AND HER WORLDWIDE DOMA

How Meals Are Prepared By "Rough and Ready" Methods.

JOHN R. NEILL

Domestic Duties in Zululand

SOME one with a good appetite originated the old saw that "a man's heart is best reached through his stomach." This seems to hold universally true when one considers what an important institution the kitchen is the world over.

It's a pretty good saw, too, especially when the dinner that comes piping hot from your kitchen is exceptionally appetizing, the meat is broiled just the right way and the pie is like that your mother baked.

In civilized countries the after-dinner hour is the most auspicious of the day; indeed, it is at this time that the diplomats of nations, over coffee and cigars, find themselves able to agree on world-important policies.

Whether you visit countries where men wear bifurcated garments, colored tunics or practically no habiliments at all, you will find the kitchen as the supreme domain. After all, the cook is the arbiter of human affairs. The kitchen is the true throne-room of earth.

Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite.—Shakespeare.

Her that ruled the rost in the kitchen.—Heywood.

ABOUT so important and worldwide a place as the kitchen it is natural that misstatements and exaggerations should be made. And poets, to whom the idea of cookery has peculiarly appealed, are not among the least grave offenders.

"Heaven sends us good meat," said Garrick, "but the devil sends cooks." Garrick had evidently met a Pima Indian cook or he wouldn't have had the audacity to make so outrageous a statement.

In an ecstasy over a rare toothsome dish Burton once enthusiastically exclaimed: "Cooking is become an art, a noble science!" But Burton probably never ate in French Guinea, and his statement may be excused.

When you're downright hungry any kitchen is welcome. Ever feel that you could relish food? Ever have a real hefty hunger? Well, get up an appetite and take a visit to the world's kitchens.

Now the kitchen of the Venezuelan housewife isn't a nice, plastered, whitewashed, spick-and-span affair at all. It's built of sticks, with a thatched roof of grass. Well ventilated—oh, yes, but it's quite hot in Venezuela and so they make the kitchen open and airy.

Here a chief article of diet is grain. But do you see that big stone in the left-hand corner of the kitchen? Before cooking grain the housewife must pound and grind it into meal.

Instead of cupboards and ice-chests, the women of the house use baskets. Food hangs all about this unique kitchen, along the wall, high up in the roof. Besides this, there are few stoves there; this patient, dutiful housewife cooks over an open fire.

In Jamaica, the land of gin, ginger and bananas, the jet-eyed wives make little adoe about the midday lunch or dinner.

Did you ever play hookey when a child and go into the country, dig potatoes and turnips from the ground and cook them in tin cans over a bonfire? That's just the way they cook on this spicy isle.

You see, bananas and yams [illegible] the staple articles of diet, taking the place of [illegible] and roasts. It wouldn't pay, even if [illegible] tives were financially able, to buy stoves [illegible] to cook occasional pots of beans, [illegible] and cereals.

But to take a jump to China [illegible] complicated kitchen life for you! [illegible] Celestial kingdom the kitchen is [illegible] celestial.

Hot fires blaze under brick stoves. [illegible] eyed women frenziedly roll out dough, [illegible] up strange things like noodles, which [illegible] by strange names. Another tears apart a [illegible] nest; still another sorts mushrooms.

Mark that stern individual sitting [illegible] end of the kitchen. He's the boss of the [illegible] en, and he's there to keep his eagle eye [illegible] women. For it would mean disaster [illegible] favorite dish of the lord mandarin [illegible] be seasoned quite properly!

In the imperial household, so reports [illegible] the empress dowager is more interested [illegible] preparation of her shredded chicken [illegible] planning reform programs and policies. [illegible] in the average household the Chinese [illegible] ism is carried to the limit.

Chinese Kitchen Force at Work.

But pity the cook of Zululand. [illegible] creature must prepare the family dinner [illegible] her youngest baby on her back. In the [illegible] too, she kneels and pounds the beans and [illegible] in a hollow stone, while the baby, [illegible] yells and bellows. Not much of joy for [illegible] queen of the kitchen. But after all, [illegible] she would not exchange places with those [illegible] think they are more favored.

For, after all's said and done, the [illegible] is woman's realm. Even the Pima [illegible] squaw, with horrible leering face, [illegible] delights in her job. In fact, she fixes up [illegible] kingdom in which to do the family [illegible] And woe to the red man who invades this [illegible] realm.

First of all, this Indian wife [illegible] having a clear space in which to work [illegible] clears away the bushes, and in a [illegible] place proceeds to cook. Perhaps [illegible] overly clean, she may put hot stones [illegible] pot of meat and soup to cook the [illegible] people enjoy her dishes.

One thing you will observe, [illegible] is that when women preside in [illegible] there's at least a semblance of order [illegible] a pot for this and a pan for [illegible] stinctively the eternal feminine [illegible] what she's about. But when men [illegible] en's immemorial domain! Could [illegible] minute imagine a worse condition [illegible] this pictured kitchen scene in French [illegible]

Everything on the floor pell-mell, [illegible] running around, not yet killed, [illegible] the banquet approaching.

But now they start the fires [illegible] sheets of iron or beaten metal. [illegible] fowls, wring their necks, pluck them, [illegible] pitch the meat into the pans, stir [illegible] pots with great sticks. And soon [illegible] begin.

Among the unique kitchens [illegible] countries one of the most interesting [illegible] the Mexican Indians, the land [illegible] These long flap-jack-like cakes [illegible] on boards and cooked on sheets [illegible] outdoor fires. Ask the dark [illegible] girl, and she'd tell you what [illegible] world over will tell you, that [illegible] best. And who would doubt the [illegible]

From that day to this the church has never lacked this true apostolic succession which has been making men of slaves and lifting the world to higher planes of true manhood in all countries and in all ages.

In the midst of her career in making men out of mere things the church took a poor, ignorant, unknown butcher boy in England and made of him Cardinal Woolsey, who formed the "whispers of a throne" on which sat the imperious Henry Tudor. This same butcher boy, made a man and a prince of the church, founded that great intellectual light which for more than three centuries has been making men to rule England, to carry civilization and learning to the four corners of the earth, the great University of Oxford.

The church never lacked the knack of making poor, ignorant, unknown peasants or slaves men. The papal tiara in our own day is worthily worn by a man imbued as few have been with the real spirit of the Founder of the church. With the heart of a child, the devotion of a martyr and the skill of a statesman, Pius X guides with a master hand the destinies of one of the greatest branches of the church in this twentieth century. Who is this godly Pius X? Why, Sarto, the Italian peasant, born to an obscure position in the world, to hard toil and biting penury. His shoulders seemed fated to bear the burden and his hands to do the coarsest drudgery of life. But the church of God cast her heaven-illumined eye upon the peasant boy and declared that he must be made a man. Step by step she guided his willing feet, from choir boy to student and postulant. In time she laid her hands in blessing on his head and proclaimed that he was a man, and fit to lead men in all the highest walks in life. From parish priest the church made him patriarch of the old Christian city of Venice, which had stood a bulwark of defense against the Turks seeking to substitute the Koran for the Gospel as the spiritual inspiration of Europe. And finally on the brow of the peasant made a man, and a wise and great and good one, has been placed the pontifical tiara.

When the world was putting shackles on the wrists of men and laying heavy loads on their backs as if they were mere beasts of burden, keeping them down in obscurity and in ignorance as well as in poverty, the church with the light of heaven on her brow and the power of God in her hand walked serene and calm through city streets, along highroads, bypaths shaded with fragrant hedgerows, and amid green, flower-decked fields, and whenever she saw the making of a man, she laid her hand upon his head. At her touch the shackles fell from the wrists of the slave, the burden fell from his shoulders, the cloud disappeared from his brow, the sense of shame and degradation vanished from his heart. He stood up in the power of that divine touch free, confident, independent. He became a man. No master, no potentate, no king dare get in her way and say "that is my slave, my chattel." The church would indignantly have answered: "That is a man. That man is free. He has the stamp of God's enfranchisement on his brow. He is mine."

THE TWILIGHT HOUR.

At twilight hour, beside the rill,
  That sings its way to the far-off sea,
I fondly muse—while the world grows still—
  O'er the sweet, sad dreams that come to me.
The tinkling streamlet, flecked with foam,
  Seems jewel-gemmed in the fading light,
And I watch the stars in heaven's dome
  Shine forth to glorify the night;
While floating over the dew-kissed dells
Come notes of the soft, sweet vesper bells.

At twilight when the dying day
  Fades down the west with the vanished sun,
'Tis then in my dreams I drift away
  Wherever my fondest fancies run.
The zephyrs, whispering soft and low,
  Bring rarest odors of wood and plain,
As back from the cherished long ago
  Drifts some old song with its sweet refrain;
While floating over the dew-kissed dells
Come notes of the far, faint vesper bells.

The world's asleep, save the rippling rills;
  An incense trembles upon the air;
The silence softens and deepens till
  I hear fond voices from "over there;"
The cherished voices of those I knew
  In the old, old days when the world seemed dear,
Till roused from my dreaming I hear the true
  Warm voice of my friend of the Now and Here;
While floating over the dew-kissed dells
Come notes of the "good-night" curfew bells.

HARVESTING BY MOTOR.

The reproach so often leveled against British agriculturists that they are slow and unprogressive can never be raised again after a demonstration of motor harvesting given at Kirton (Lincs.) yesterday, when loaves were handed round baked from corn that had been standing in the fields four hours before.

The demonstration, which was given on the farm of Messrs. Dennis Brothers—one of the largest in the kingdom—showed that in up-to-date farm work England is well ahead of most countries. Several remarkable feats were accomplished.

An acre of standing corn was marked out in the fields, cut, bound, threshed, and ground by motor implements. An acre of ground was also plowed, drilled, harrowed, and sown with a new crop within seven and one-half hours. This constitutes a world's record.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

THE FUNDAMENTAL VIRTUE.

THE strongest men in the world, the most efficient leaders, the individuals enshrined in the memory of human hearts—the ones beloved at once as good and great commanders and servants of a nation or of the human race, have ever been men whose ruling principle was the fundamental virtue of Justice.

The wise of all ages have extolled it, and ethical systems and religious doctrines have been reared upon this primary essential for the rational intercourse of reasoning social beings; upon the principle of Justice, or that conception of the ethical distribution of wealth, honor, opportunity, protection and privilege, according to which every one, of whatever creed, caste, color or station in life, receives his just due.

Among the many illumining actions for which the German Emperor has recently distinguished himself, was this incident: On critically examining a group monument in which the abstract principle of justice was concretely represented by a figure with the customarily bandaged eyes, His Majesty demanded a departure from this traditional representation of the eternal principle of Justice as blind, recommending that the idea of justice be more truly externalized by a statue with eyes, with visible, seeing eyes! Which was an eminently logical conclusion and a most decisive step toward the advancement of national and international reason on moral issues, through a just artistic representation of the fundamental virtue of Justice.

It is obvious to all enlightened and unbiased thinking that the quintessence of justice is proportion, correct distribution and exact measurement. Now who on such a basis would attempt the feat of dispensing justice blindly? No doubt this is often enough done, and because it is done, and has been done throughout the ages, the world from time immemorial has suffered the cruel consequences of blind ignorance and error, the terrors of oppression and of unmitigating persecution. Thus innocent hearts have been wrung, the minds of men tortured, and the understanding of the multitude confounded by the predominating influence of injustice and wrong.

We are aware that there are those who say: "Teach mankind to love first, and justice will follow." But we would maintain—granting the probability of a sometime millennium—that universal love is impossible before the establishment of justice upon earth. Those who love unwisely—the many—are inclined to grant the loved ones, in every degree of relationship, more or less than their due. Those who love wisely—the few—compound love with justice. First they render what in every case is due, and then if it be not ill-advised, what is more than due. They love wisely, because they see clearly, and seeing clearly and feeling rightly, they act justly or do justice. Hence if the creators of mythical lore, of figure and of fable in literature and art have bound the eyes of Love, they have done so with a better reason. For in this they observed the psychological law by which processes of the amative or affective nature are carried on. Thus, the affections when aroused to the intensity of passion or overwhelming love have the tendency to utterly submerge reason or judgment in a flood of feeling. Hence the mind, the really seeing eye is thus closed; or in other words, the intelligence is blinded by the torrent of fervor or of passionate devotion to an object or cause, whence the fitness of the representation of Love as blind. But Justice, while moved by feeling or sentiment, must throughout be guided by reason; or moral and intellectual light. Inasmuch, therefore, as these are required for the expression of justice, justice can never adequately operate under cover—that is, blindly, or in the dark.

For all practical purposes in the life of an individual or nation we must have justice. Let us have love, charity, good-will, but none of these can come to birth unless born of Justice. Hence, justice first, intelligent, scrutiny of means and fair consideration of worthy ends. Wise, wide, open-eyed discernment of actual conditions social and economic; a just regard of the rights and needs of individuals and of peoples, a prudent and well-considered improvement of habitations and places both for the benefit of citizens and for profit of the country. Moreover, the adoption of remedies that will strengthen the weaknesses of individuals and steady the infirm structure of the State, by the enactment of sound laws that will meet the requirements of a country whose standard is: "Equal justice to all according to their due and partiality toward none."

Such a standard, one that must thrill the soul of every patriotic American citizen whatever his political persuasion—is borne aloft with unflinching courage, and with the moral majesty of the royal-blooded son of Righteousness such as the Chief Executive of the United States has abundantly proved himself to be. With such indomitable perseverance in pursuance of the course of justice which he has not only denominated but exemplified as the ruling principle of his administration, what wonder that the whole country should be stirred with a new impulse toward more just living. And what wonder that there should be fear and trembling among those who stand in danger of having the snug bandage covering their eyes so far as the performance of Justice is concerned, abruptly torn away!

Yankee Explorers in Egypt. By Frank G. Carpenter.

AMERICAN ARCHEOLOGISTS.

HOW THEY ARE DIGGING UP THE KINGS OF PHARAOH'S TIME.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LUXOR (Egypt.)—All day long I have been wandering about through the tombs of the kings who ruled Egypt 3000 or 4000 years ago. I have gone down into the subterranean chambers which the Pharaohs who oppressed the Israelites dug out of the solid rocks for their burial vaults and have visited the tombs of other kings even older than they. The last resting places of more than fifty of these monarchs of early Egypt have already been discovered, and the work is still going on, with new finds of historical value every year.

Some of the best excavation is being done by Americans. This is the case all along the Nile Valley. While at Cairo I found the money of Harvard College and the Boston Museum uncovering the cemeteries of the nabobs and paupers who were buried under the shadow of the Great Pyramid of Gizeh at the time of King Cheops, The Egyptian exploration fund, which is supported by Great Britain, Canada and the United States, has a small army operating near Luxor, and a large part of the valley in which these royal tombs lie is now in the hands of Theodore M. Davis, a wealthy American who has his laborers busy all winter long, year after year, digging up the débris and looking for these wonderful evidences of Egypt's past. During my trip of today I met a young archeologist, who is in charge of the Davis excavations, and it was he who showed me through the tombs of the kings and explained the symbols and pictures on the walls. I went to that part of the valley where the excavation is now going on and took pictures of a gang of 150 Egyptian men and boys now working there.

Valley of the Kings.

But first let me tell you something about the place which these ancient Egyptian monarchs selected for their burials. They wanted to hide their remains in such a way that posterity could never find them, and to cover them so that future generations would not imagine that they and their treasures lay beneath. Our cemeteries are chosen for the beauty of their surroundings. We like to turn up our toes to the daisies and to have the green fields whisper a requiem over our heads. The old Egyptian kings wanted the dry, thirsty desert, and they chose this region, about as far up the Nile Valley as Cleveland is inland from the Atlantic and fully six miles back from the green strip on which their people lived. I can imagine no place more dreary. At this point the Nile is walled on the west by thirsty limestone mountains. As far as the waters reach the valley is the greenest of green; but beyond them lies a desert as drear as any part of the Sahara. There is not a blade of grass; not a sprig of vegetation of any kind. There is nothing but sand and dry mountains, the latter almost as ragged as the wildest parts of the Rockies. Some of the stones are built up in great precipices; in other places there are fort-like bluffs and other convulsions of nature.

Near Old Thebes.

To visit this valley one first comes to Luxor, which is at just about on the site of Old Thebes, the capital of Egypt in the days of its most brilliant past. The city lay on both sides of the Nile, but Luxor is on the east bank, and I had to cross the river in a ferryboat and ride for an hour or so through the desert before I came into the valley of the kings. However, my donkey boy was a good one, and his donkeys were young. His name was Joseph, and the brute I bestrode was called "Gingerbread."

Gingerbread had a slice of skin about as big as a dollar removed from his rump, and Joseph pricked this spot from time to time to hurry him onward. We crossed the green fields, winding our way in and out along the canals, until we came to the desert and entered a wild gorge walled with rocks of yellow limestone and with a conglomerate mixture of flint and limestone of curious formation. The gorge shows evidences of having been cut out by some mighty stream of the past. There are masses of débris along the sides, and the way is rough except on the road which has been made by the explorers.

Looking at the valley from the Nile, one would not suppose that it was anything other than a desert gorge, and it was not until I was right in it that I realized it was a cemetery. There are no gravestones or monuments, and the kings obliterated every sign that might indicate their burial places. They dug out great chambers under the bed of this dried-up river and arranged cisterns for their proper drainage, but, when they had finished, they left everything as it was in nature; and for this reason their tombs remained for ages untouched and unknown.

In the Tombs.

From time to time, however, one or another was discovered by future generations. Strabo, the Greek geographer, who was alive when Christ was born, speaks of forty of them as being worthy of a visit, and others are mentioned by writers later on. During our generation most of them were again lost, and it was not until some Arab grave robbers began to sell curious antiquities that it was found that the tombs had again been discovered and were being rifled by these vandals. The archeologists then went to work, and their explorations have resulted in the opening up of tomb after tomb, until we now have what might be called a subterranean city of the dead here in the heart of the Libyan Desert.

The tombs are nothing like our burial vaults. They are large rooms cut out of the solid rock, with walls as straight and as smooth as those of a mason. They are reached by many steps, going down inclined planes until they bring you far below the surface of the valley and away down under the mountains. Each king had his own tomb, and he decorated it with sketches and paintings representing the life of his time. The ceilings are beautiful. From some of them the figures of gods and goddesses look down upon you. Others are colored in geometric lines, and in some men and women are carved in bas-reliefs out of the solid rock and then painted. Many of the scenes are religious, and from them the Egyptologist is able to tell us what the people of that day believed. They also show how they worked and lived when our remotest ancestors were savages in the wilds of Europe and Asia.

In some of the tombs I saw the massive stone which the mummies of the dead kings lay. I one which was ten feet long, six feet wide and high. It was hollowed out of a solid block of and it weighs many tons. That mighty was cut out of the quarries of Assouan, far on the banks of the Nile. It must have been down the river on a barge and carried to the When it was on the ground it had to be into the vault, and that without modern I went through the tombs I saw several and the archeologists who guided me showed holes in the stone walls of the entrance beams had been put across in order that ropes used to prevent these stone masses sliding let down. It is a difficult job for us to safes of even four-feet cube. One of these would weigh as much as several such old Egyptians carried them where they

With Pharaoh's Engineers.

Indeed, I venture the civil engineers of the could teach our people much. All about there are enormous monuments which it the engineers of today to handle. Take the Memnon, the two mighty stone figures in the ley within a few miles of where I am now Each is as high as a six-story house, and the pedestals upon which they sit rise thirteen the ground. I rode by them as I came home from the valley of the kings, and climbed up and ran the measure over their legs. The legs measure from sole to knee. The feet are each ten feet so long that one would fill the box of a farm end to end, and so wide that it could hardly within it. The arms, from finger tips to elbow, measure fifteen feet, and the middle finger of is a yard and a half long.

As I stood beside the pedestal, with my feet gerbread's saddle, I could not reach to the top, find it difficult to give any comparative idea of the mous weight of the structures.

These two mighty figures sit side by side on the of the Nile Valley. They were erected in honor Egyptian king who lived 3500-odd years ago; temple, which he constructed behind them, has tirely disappeared. They are right on the edge valley, with the desert mountains in the rear. was through green fields, and as I looked at thought of how they had watched the people reaping for more than 3500 years.

Not far from these monuments are the ruins of Temple of Rameses II, the Pharaoh who oppressed Egyptians and would not let them go. Among saw the remains of a statue of that old king, show that they belong to a structure at least high. There is no granite nearer here than is the ries of Assouan, and this mighty statue must have cut out there and brought down the Nile to Thebes distance of 135 miles.

Toting the Obelisks.

Consider the obelisks which the Egyptians those quarries and carried down the Nile to Thebes also to Cairo and Alexandria. There are two still at this place. You may see them in the great ple at Karnak, which is not more than a walk from Luxor. They weigh each, and it would take 1600 horses to haul them, were broken up and loaded upon wagons. solid block of granite, and each was carried to this place. There are inscriptions on the Bahari Temple which show that these two dug out of the quarries, covered with hieroglyphic ings, brought here and put up all in the months. I doubt whether our job as quick or as well.

We thought it a wonderful

It was carried in the hold of a steamer, and to load it, the bow vessel had to be cut and the obelisk dragged in. obelisk at Paris was carried across the Mediterranean on a barge, and that which now stands in London brought there in an iron water-tight cylinder, which carried to Alexandria in pieces and built around the as it lay upon the shore. When the great stone thoroughly encased, the whole was rolled into the and then towed to London. After landing, the modern engineers had great trouble to get the obelisks where wanted them. That of New York was rolled upon iron balls which ran in iron grooves, laid for the purpose, and that of London was slid over ways to the place where it now stands on the of the Thames.

It known as Thebes, and it was one of the greatest of antiquity. It covered almost as much ground and it is said to have had more than a million The city had walls so thick that chariots drawn half dozen horses abreast could easily pass as they along them. It had 100 gates, and its temples private houses were the wonder of the world. Some residences were five stories high, the skyscrapers those days. Thebes was noted for its wealth, and were added to by the successful wars which kings waged with other nations. The monarchs of had mighty armies of both infantry and cavalry. One was found in the delta measured forty-two feet in height, and there are at Abu Simbel in Nubia, about as far up the Nile is distant from the mouth of the Hudson, sixty-six feet high. They are seated on and are hewn from the solid rocks. These stand right in front of the temple, which is cut out of the rock, and which, by the way, is an evidence that Pharaoh was not as hard-hearted as he is generally represented. The temple is said to have been erected by him in honor of his favorite wife, Nefert Ari, and about it are statues of his children, which show that he loved his family. Besides, the Bible says that the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart and that this was evidently the reason why he would not let the Israelites go. The fact that his heart needed to be hardened shows that it was soft, and it is probable that the old king was a fairly good fellow after all.

ONE OF THE SWEET VAGARIES OF PRETTY PATRICIA.

By a Special Contributor.

"SURELY," I thought to myself, "that very red jacket and that very saucy tam can only belong to——"

I quickened my steps, for Patricia was forging ahead like a little steam tug. I waited until I had come within respectable hailing distance, then called out between puffs:

"Where are you going, my pretty maid?"

Patricia turned her head in my direction and snapped her blue eyes at me.

"Ted," she said brutally, "you're getting abominably fat. Why don't you take a course in physical culture?"

Now, this was unkind, and Patricia knew it, but I refused to look injured or annoyed. I repeated my question with even more jocular emphasis than before. The "pretty maid" stared meditatively up into the eucalyptus branches overhead.

"I'm going for a tramp," she said finally, "a nice, long, solitary tramp."

There was a stress laid on the next to the last word that could admit of but one interpretation, and this I resolved to overlook.

"What luck!" I exclaimed. "There's nothing I enjoy quite so much as a long, solitary tramp."

Patricia snapped her eyes at me again.

"Don't let me detain you, Mr. Wilson," she said courteously.

It was then that I realized that the "one" interpretation was no longer to be avoided, and immediately I resorted to strategy.

"Oh-ho, Miss Hudson," I remarked thoughtfully, "so you have at last outgrown your childish fear of the cows which wander about this delightful resort. Which reminds me that old man Curtis is bringing in a herd from his place this very afternoon. You'll probably meet them. Most interesting sight—a drove of cows. To be sure, your jacket is pretty red, but then, you can take it off when you see them coming. Which also reminds me of snakes, and the whopper Billy Taylor was telling about them, at the house last night. Old duffer said he killed six between here and the haunted villa, only day before yesterday. You know——"

Just at this promising moment, a lizard stirred in the dry grass along the path. Patricia screamed faintly and clutched my arm with both hands. I patted the smooth fingers curled about my coat sleeve, with reassuring touch.

"Never mind, Patsy," I murmured, soothingly, "I can kill snakes as well as Billy Taylor.

Patricia snatched her hand away—a wee bit reluctantly, I thought. For a minute she pouted, then flashed up into my face a smile, dazzling in its radiance.

"I think you are perfectly horrid, but I suppose you'll have to go, now."

And having hoisted the flag of truce by calling me "perfectly horrid," she dived into her jacket pocket, and as a further testimonial of favor, produced a bag of candy, considerably the worse for wear.

"Ah, so that's the reason you desired a solitary tramp, is it? I didn't think it of you, Patsy."

Patricia wilted me with a glance of mingled scorn and reproach, but did not withdraw her offer.

"Don't take a caramel," she cautioned, however; "there are only two left, and you know I like the chewy kind best."

I obediently selected a squashy chocolate.

"And now," I said firmly, "as a reward of virtue I'm going to choose where we'll walk to."

"No, you're not," flashed Patricia; "the last time I let you choose, you made me climb just eight fences, and four gates that weren't locked."

"But Patsy," I protested, "it wasn't my fault that they weren't locked. I'm sure they ought to have been. And anyhow I know the keenest kind of a way to get to the haunted villa. You only have to climb four fences and two gates."

It was here that Patricia first spied the sand pile. She darted across the road and dropped down beside it.

"Oh, Ted, it's perfectly glorious sand! Come on over and we'll make houses and walls and tunnels. We needn't go for any old walk, after all."

I followed resignedly. I have almost become accustomed to Patricia's eccentric notions upon the subject of entertainment for herself and friends, but making houses in a sand pile, in close proximity to a public highway, seemed to me—well——

However, Patricia had unbuttoned her cuffs and rolled back her sleeves, which was some consolation. I have often thought that Patricia's arms would do very well in point of symmetry for the Venus de Milo, if that lady should ever take it into her head to exact a pair of those useful members from some honored mortal here below.

"Sit down, Teddy," she commanded; "we're going to make a tunnel, because you're a civil engineer and ought to know how. See, you can dig one side and I'll dig the other."

I glanced furtively at my patent-leather Oxfords, my second-best trousers, my clean cuffs. Patricia's sharp eyes caught me up at once.

"Humph!" she sniffed, pointing at me the finger of scorn with a dab of wet sand on the end of it. "So you're afraid you'll wrinkle your trousers, or muss your cuffs, or—or get sand in your patent leathers. Or perhaps you're even afraid some one will see you."

"Stop, Patricia," I shouted. "No one accuses me of such base regard for the conventions with impunity. I protest that——"

"Sit down, then, silly," interrupted Patricia placidly.

I dropped gingerly down beside her.

"There, that's much nicer. Now take off your cuffs and begin to dig into the side of this little mound. I'll dig on my side—then when we meet in the middle, there you have a tunnel."

"Exactly," I agreed, and fell to with a will. A brilliant idea had just occurred to me.

For a few moments we burrowed in earnest silence, and then—we met in the middle.

"O-o-o-oh!" cried Patricia, "I can't get it out."

"Do be careful, Patsy," I exclaimed in alarm. "You'll ruin the roof."

In spite of my warning, Patrica continued to make half-hearted efforts to withdraw her hand.

"Say please," I ordered.

Patricia pouted. "I won't, so there!"

She gathered up all her energies; the walls and roof of the unfortunate tunnel collapsed.

"Just look what you've done," I wailed. "And I worked so hard to make it nice."

"Animal!" stormed Patricia, "you did it yourself."

I ventured no reply to this unwarranted attack—merely contemplated the landscape with melancholy interest. Patricia fingered her bracelet, glanced at me several times through her lashes—and weakly relented.

"Let's make a castle, and a captive damsel, and a handsome prince, and a moat, and an irate parent," she proposed amiably.

"Just the thing," I agreed with becoming enthusiasm. "I'll fix up these twigs for trees in the court of the castle, where the princess walks every day and does nothing at all but think of her handsome prince. I am sure the princess is very fond of long, solitary walks."

Patricia reddened. She set her lips in a straight, stubborn line.

"I think," she said slowly, "I think that there needn't be any prince at all. I'm sure it would be far more interesting."

I gasped with dismay at this astonishing piece of heresy. "Oh, come now, Patsy, of what earthly use would a castle and a moat and a damsel and an irate parent be, without a handsome prince?"

Patricia vouchsafed no interest in my distress, but cocked her head on one side and surveyed the smooth mound which stood for the castle, with careful atttention. Then she leaned forward and cautiously jabbed a rosy finger into its side and as cautiously withdrew it. She stooped quickly, caught up a bit of green from the road and stuck it into the hole.

"That," she said, "is the princess, leaning out of her balcony to laugh at the prince, 'way down in the garden below. She knows he can't climb up, and the irate parent is guarding the door, waiting to inspect his bank book, and as it really won't bear inspection, why, he must just stay down below. I truly think the princess is very, very glad. You see, he isn't a nice prince, at all—so cocksure, and conceited, and fat, and——"

"But, Patsy, I thought there wasn't going to be any prince!"

Patricia again looked at me through her eyelashes.

"Stupid!" she retorted demurely, "there always has to be a prince."

For a moment I sat silent in awed admiration. Patricia dropped her hands in her lap and stared absentely up into the branches overhead. I forgot to mention that Patricia is quite pretty, and when Patricia's blue eyes assume a dreamy, faraway expression like that, and the sun flickers through the leaves upon her yellow curls——

I moved a little closer. For two whole weeks I had not proposed to Patricia.

"Patsy," I murmured sentimentally, into the pink ear closest to me, "don't you suppose that if, in time, the prince should become thinner and thinner, and his bankbook fatter and fatter, the princess might be persuaded to throw him down a rope ladder, or call off the irate parent, or——"

Patricia turned her head in my direction and looked straight into my eyes with mischievous tenderness—then raised her hand high, and brought it down hard upon the top of the castle, burying the unfortunate prince, the cruel princess, and the irate parent, deep in its ruins.

"You see, Ted," she explained apologetically, "princesses who live in sand houses are so very notional, and I—well, I really like fat people."

CRAB 3000 YEARS OLD!

A remarkable discovery is reported from Nottingham, where a live crab has been found embedded in rock sand ten feet below the surface.

A workman employed by Mr. W. Everard, builder, was getting out some foundations in Haydn Road when, in breaking off a large lump of rock with a crowbar, he saw something move.

Closer examination revealed a live crab, the shell measuring 3 inches by 2 inches. It resembles the ordinary sea crab, except that the shell has sharp rugged edges.

It is thought that the crab is three or four thousand years old.—[London Express.

By Stage Across Oregon.

FOUR HUNDRED MILES THROUGH A RAILROADLESS REGION.

By a Special Contributor.

"THE greatest trouble with this country now," explained an old-time cattleman to me at Lakeview, Or., "is that it is getting too close to a railroad. Why, the railroad building northward from Reno, Nev., has already reached Madelene, only ninety-six miles from here, and they are still building in this direction. Surveys have already been run through Lakeview, and it is only a matter of months now until we find our occupation gone, and the country overrun and plowed up by grain growers.

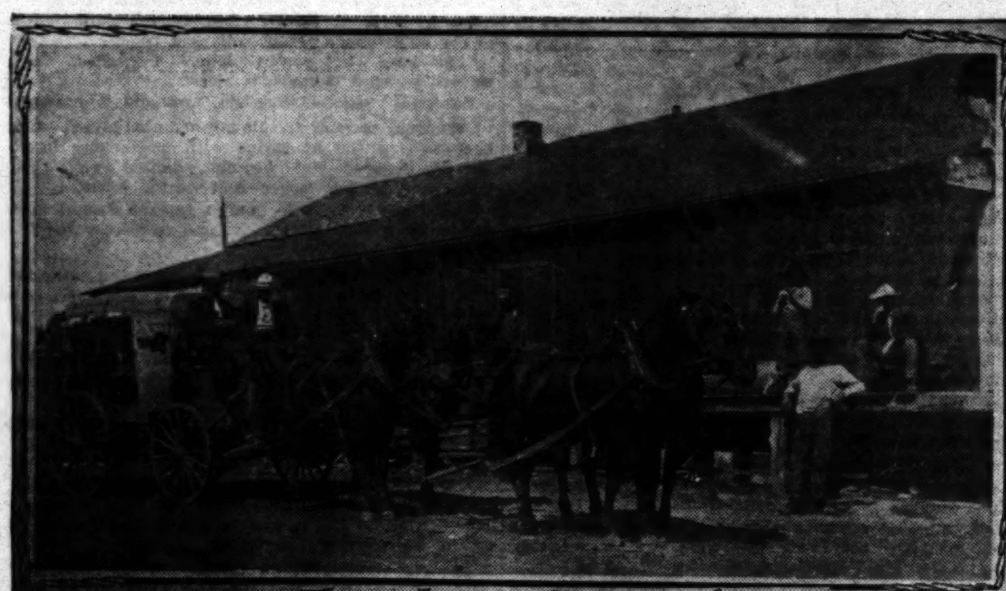
"In the good old days of the open range, in the days before the coming of the wire fence and the irrigation promoter, in the days when all outdoors was free to every man who owned a cow, a pony and a branding iron, this was a glorious country to live in. Every man had money, and spent it; every man's promissory note was as good as the cash; two-year-old steers were legal tender, and we lived like kings, and died, sometimes, at least, with our boots on.

"But the wire fence has driven the cowboy away to the all directions, untamed and fenceless, free to all comers who were prepared to maintain their rights by physical courage and good marksmanship, where a cow pony, a pair of chaps and a shooting iron were a part of every man's personal equipment, where the sheepman was treated as an outlaw and the agricultural settler a scourge upon the face of the landscape.

But, with the coming of the wire fence the glory of the cow country has departed, the care-free, reckless cowboy of the "olden golden days" has faded away, and the town has settled into a prosaic rut of civilized complaisancy to await the coming of the railroad to give it a new impetus along the line of industrial development.

The casual traveler may reach Lakeview in any one of three directions by stage route. From Madelene, the northern terminus of a branch railroad extending northward from Reno, Nev., it is ninety-six miles, and the stage makes the run in a day and a night. From Pokagema, the eastern terminus of the Klamath Lake Railroad, running eastward from Thrall, Cal., it is 136 miles, and the stage makes the run in thirty-one hours. From Shaniko, the southern terminus of a branch railroad running southward from Biggs, on the Columbia River, it is 280 miles, and the journey requires three days and two nights.

From these figures it will be noted that Lakeview is not now in the heart of this great railroadless interior. That distinction belongs to Silver Lake, 100 miles to the northward, a little trading center sprawled out over a seemingly endless sagebrush plain so much like the town Separ of Owen Wister's "Lin McLean" that on approaching it, one looks about curiously for the dusty cattle yards and the railroad water tank looming large and dripping against the horizon.



Four-horse Oregon Stage.

Fifty Bushels of Barley to the Acre.

Park Like Pine Forests in Oregon.

In penetrating this vast frontier region remember that the stages do not stop at night for their passengers to sleep. They run primarily for the transportation of Uncle Sam's mail, and Uncle Sam brooks no unnecessary delay. Overland-mail contracts provide that thirty minutes' delay in arriving at destination means the forfeiture of pay for that trip, so every precaution is taken to maintain the running schedule. You may take your meals at the relay stations while the hostlers are changing teams, but as soon as the meal is over, the new team is in the harness ready to start again, and you may lie over for a rest, and your ticket is good until you use it, but remember that the next stage will not be along for twenty-four hours, and recreation resorts in this interior country are few and far between.

Stage fares are calculated on a basis of 10 cents a mile, meals extra, but no charge is made for sleeping accommodations, provided you are able to sleep sitting bolt upright and jolting over a rocky road behind a galloping team, as some more experienced veterans are able to do. When you engage your passage, your name is entered on the way bill, the same as any other piece of express or merchandise, and by the way bill passed from driver to driver, your routing is determined.

Upon leaving the railroad you find yourself riding behind four or six excellent horses, high-headed and snorting, with a schedule which requires the from seven to nine miles an hour. Lessons of the Hunt.

THE HOTEL CLERK'S OUTING; ALSO THE PRESIDENT'S.

By a Special Contributor.

WHEN the Hotel Clerk left for the North Woods it was expected around the Hotel St. Reckless that he would be gone three weeks. He came back at the end of ten days with a haunted look in his eye and an uneasy manner. His friends, the House Detective and the Head Bellboy, were the first to greet him.

"Wasn't the huntin' any good?" asked the Head Bellboy.

"The hunting was excellent," said the Hotel Clerk. "Some extra large strings of bystanders are reported to have been killed. There ought to be a stuffed guide's head mounted over many a new dining-room mantel on Fifth avenue this winter. But it kind of palled on me. I can't see so much unalloyed pleasure gunning for the simple native of the Adirondack region and the still more simple city sporsman—they're both such tame animals. Besides, I can't rid myself of the knowledge that all the time I'm crawling around one set of bushes hunting for them, they're crawling around another set of bushes hunting for me."

"I guess you're a purty bum sport, Mr. McBean," said the House Detective. "Huntin' and campin' out and all like that is a game of give and take, anyway."

"Yes, but when all you've got to give is 32-caliber cartridges, and what you've got to take is the frequent contents of a moose musket, the game has its inequalities," said the Hotel Clerk. "And then it rained something fierce."

"The President don't mind the rain," said the House Detective. "He's been havin' the time of his life down South. I'll bet you he ain't been worryin' none about the weather."

"He don't have to," said the Hotel Clerk. "He's got a Cabinet, not to mention several thousand postmasters and revenue gaugers, that'll do all the worryin' for him while he's exposing himself to the hostile elements down in the enemy's country, where the Republican vote is added up by subtraction, and indicated in the general results by the sign, minus."

"I never knowed before there was so much huntin' in Louisiana," said the House Detective.

"Then you never read the annual lynching summaries which the New England papers print every New Year's with deep regret, not unmixed with pleasure," said the Hotel Clerk. "Statistics show that nearly every time a mob goes hunting in that part of Louisiana, it returns with the dark meat. At this particular season, hunting was never better in the grand old Pelican State. The President is hunting the bear in the hearts of the canebrake, the Sheriffs of two counties are hunting the newspaper correspondents along the edges, and the sturdy yeomanry of the vicinty are winding the merry horn, as with many a "view halloo" and "Sic 'em, Tige," they hunt the colored freedman to the headwaters of the poetic old bayou."

"But is there much big game in them canebrakes?" put in the Head Bellboy.

"Is there much big game?" echoed the Hotel Clerk. "Hops, your ignorance pains me. The canebrake of the Far South abounds in large game, such as the bear, the seed tick, the cougar, the malaria microbe, the Democrat, the bob cat, better known among purists as the Roberta cat, the wild boar, the——"

"What's a cowgar?" asked the Head Bellboy, breaking in suddenly.

"Ahem," said the Hotel Clerk, deliberately. "The cougar, Hops, is—is—er—is a member of the cow family, as shown by the name, only more ferocious."

"Is it true that they run them wild boars down on hossback and then stick 'em with a big spear?" asked the House Detective.

"Exactly so," said the Hotel Clerk, "that's what makes them wild. Otherwise they would be quite tame, and eat corn from the hand, freely."

"It must be excitn', spearin' a big pig that-a-way," said the House Detective.

"Very," went on the Hotel Clerk, "I'm informed that it has all the thrill of nailing a butterfly to a cardboard with a brass pin, only of course, a wild pig is larger than a butterfly, and much noisier."

"Are they plum' certain there's any bear in that country?" said the House Detective.

"Oh, quite certain, I assure you," said the Hotel Clerk. "There has been bear at large in the canebrake ever since old John Robinson's circus train was wrecked going into Shreveport in the spring of '79, also several trained snakes and a Circassion Beauty.

"Boys, can't you picture the scene that must have been enacted this week in the middle of that impenetrable forest of ungarnered fishing rods? The morose and hungry bear is leaping from crag to crag in savage solitude. His small eyes burn with ill-concealed fury. In his heart he's wondering if they still paint the cages red.

"Suddenly, peering at him out of a thicket of the uncut anglers' supplies, he discovers a round yet determined object, of which the upper half appears to be glass, and the lower half china. Not being familar with the countenance of our executive when smiling, the ferocious brute thinks he's looking at a china cabinet, but before he can leap upon it, a shot rings out on the drowsy southern or southwestern air, and the conquered monarch of the forest drops upon the mossy turf, and immediately expires with a large sediment of lead in his esteemed midst.

"It is indeed a noble beast that has fallen before that unerring rifle of the mighty hunter. Stretched at full length, he's almost as extensive as an Irish setter, and his fleecy coat is nearly three-quarters of an inch thick in places, growing upon him in the sparse yet attractive fashion which is familar to every naturalist that's had occasion to study the fuzz on a caterpillar. His teeth would be fully two inches long if he had any left—the depth of the roots show it.

"No longer will the home of the peace-loving crawfish be ravaged by those ruthless claws. Hereafter the humble but useful doodle bug may rear her sprightly brood, undisturbed and unafraid. The honors of the adminstration have been properly divided: For the North, the Peace of Portsmouth; for the South, the Bombardment of Bears.

"And then picture the scenes at night around the glowing camp fire, when the hunters take their ease. Some engaged in the sport called 'Harriman,' which consists in affixing a heavy false mustache to the short, stout stump of a slippery elm tree, and then shooting at it with explosive bullets. Some, perhaps, argue the mooted point: Did or did not Ben Daniels once naturefake a government mule? Still others gather about the master of the hunt, discussing that immortal work, 'The Winning of the West,' and figuring out that it can be won in 1908 with a third-term plank just as easy as it was in 1904 without one.

"But I shall hereafter leave the delights of the camp and the chase to hardy spirits like the President, Secretary Willum Loeb and others who are better fitted to endure the life. As for me, I shall devote my spare minutes to searching out the accursed enemy to mankind who is responsible for those deceiving works of fiction, which describe how any man equipped with a bottle of matches, a small iron hatchet and two fish hooks, can live in luxury in the woods. When I overtake this crimnal, I shall pull him apart with bare hands, and the few livng survivors of the ill-fated host that have followed this hellish advice will meet and pass me a vote of thanks.

"It was this scoundrel who deluded me with pleasing visions of the joy of sleeping on perfumed and downy beds of balsam boughs. Honest, boys, it almost made me loathe the sight of a common spring mattress, two weeks ago, when I was reading his chapter devoted to sleeping. I have subsequently learned that every hemlock twig more than four inches long knows half a million separate and distinct ways of stabbing a man, and goes through the entire course each night.

"He gave me explicit directions for striking the wary moose. But did he say a word about the proper course to be pursued in overcoming the lovely green fly about the size of a pop bottle which bites a square section out of you, the same as plugging a watermelon? Did he offer me any suggestions in regard to the chigger, a fascinating little forest pest that bores into you about half an inch and lays a clutch of eggs, meanwhile clucking merrily? He did not."

"I believe you was sayin' that it rained some?" prompted the House Detective.

"It did," said the Hotel Clerk. "It rained copiously every day I was in the woods and every night, except one night when it hailed. Until you try it, Larry, you'll never know the joy of a rainy day in camp when the wood won't burn, and the licker runs out and the water runs in, and you sit under a filter that's masquerading as a tent fly, with your feet in a jolly, splashy little puddle, contemplating your companions and picking out the things you don't like about them. Some of the best authorities say that in five hours, under such circumstances, an ordinary man can find 300,000 flaws in the disposition of his best friend. However, being by nature conservative, I would put the number at not exceeding 275,000."

"Mebbee you was kinder green at the campin' business," suggested the Head Bellboy.

"Maybe I was, and what's more, I expect to stay so, if the Lord gives me sense," said the Hotel Clerk fervently. "Never again for me the lure of the lovely northern lake, where you pull a skiff that weighs more than a freight train around and around, and then around some more, until the back of your neck peels like a paper valise, and the inside of each hand feels like a bunch of Concord grapes, trying to snare from his native fluid a small fish that never did you any harm and never will be big enough to do you any, until he should grow about ninety pounds heavier. Never again for me the merry chase of the gabulous red deer through the fragrant but sticky swamp. I know already by the taste, that the mackerel is a salt-water fish. I have observed that the sardine lives in a can, and I have read somewhere that when it comes to laying, the lady shad has got the Leghorn hen backed out of the barn. I know that venison should be hung, and after eating a few sections of it that was cooked over an open fire, I am prepared to say it deserved its fate. Any other knowledge that I may desire hereafter regarding the wildwood and its denizens, I shall cull from a book. My outing will be spent pursuing the game that lurks on some preserves with which I am familiar."

"Where's that?" asked the House Detective and the Head Bellboy together.

"Broadway, from Twenty-third to Forty-second streets, inclusive," said the Hotel Clerk, "I'll find all my favorite brands of preserves there—in bottles."

BUTTONS FOR THE OFFERTORY.

A Sussex vicar complains that buttons find their way into his collecting-bags. Prebendary Carlile, of the Church Army, supplies buttons at St. Mary-at-Hill for that very purpose. "My poor people," he says, "with hardly a rag to wear and nothing to eat, haven't even a button to spare, yet pride keeps them out if they cannot give to the offertory. So we go round the streets with our buttons before service, and a friend of the Church Army redeems them at so much a dozen."—[London Standard.

Bremerton Navy Yard.

WHERE THE PACIFIC FLEET WILL HAVE ITS HEADQUARTERS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE Puget Sound Navy Yard, located at Bremerton, Wash., away in the extreme northwest of the United States, is to be the northern headquarters for the Pacific fleet. A portion of this modern armada has already gathered on this coast, but the major part consisting of sixteen battleships which will make Bremerton their headquarters, will start from Hampton Roads on December 15.

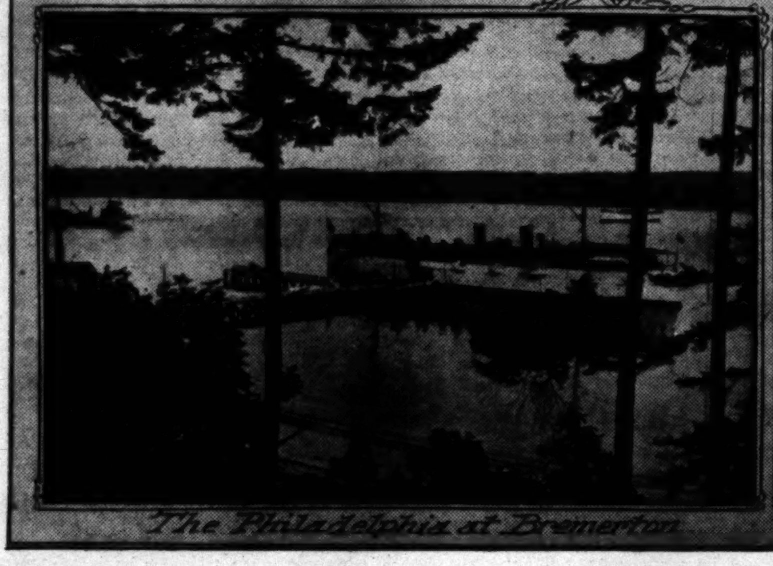
Bremerton is a little town located at the southern end of one of the long fjords extending inland from Puget Sound.

It is reached by a little steamer with big side wheels that plies to and fro from Seattle, twelve miles away, twice a day. The first few miles of the trip is straight across the sound and then the steamer enters the narrow fjord, which is just wide enough for a first-class battleship to enter, and a mile or two from the mouth it takes a turn to the left around a sharp angle and away to the south a half dozen big white houses may be seen clustered against a hill covered with Washington pines, below which is a lot of red brick buildings, a couple of wharves ,and another little group of houses to the right. This is Bremerton.

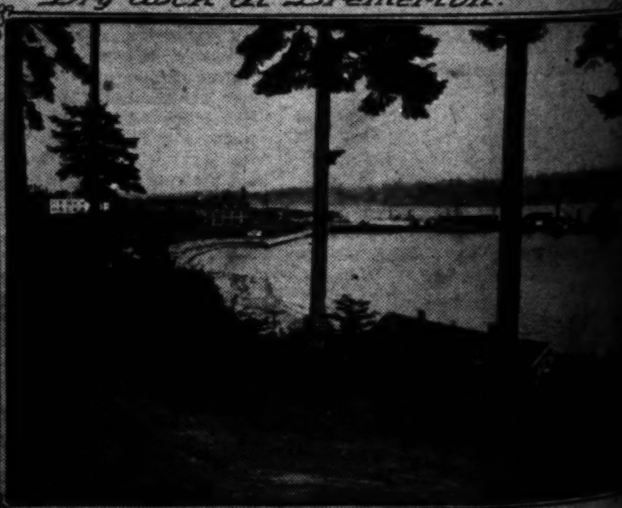
The population of the village is made up of the employés of the navy yard and their families. All of the families, and such of the men who are off duty, crowd down to the landing to see the boat come in, this being the most important event of the day, with the exception of the arrival of a new warship. The town itself is built on a hill, its edges lapping down over the sides to the water's edge on three sides and to the fence surrounding the government reservation on the southern edge.

The main street leads directly from the boat landing to the big wooden gate of the navy yard. Here a marine stands guard, and if you pass inspection you can go in without being so much as spoken to, but if this marine is not satisfied, or you are carrying a camera or any other bundle, you are haled before the sergeant and you must give a proper explanation of your visit before you can go any farther or even return to the outside, because if you prove to be a suspicious person you are taken before the officer of the day who demands a strict account of the reason for your attempt to enter the yard.

Dry dock at Bremerton.



The Philadelphia at Bremerton.



The Navy yard at Bremerton.

The rules for getting in are much more strict now than they were a year before the conflict in Manchuria.

Passing within the gate the road leads down between a row of red brick buildings, in which are machine shops, gun shops, repair shops, carpenter shops, and in one is a complete boat-building establishment where everything from a punt to an admiral's barge, or a 100-horse power steam launch is turned out, to order.

Nestled in between the boiler shop and machine shop is a great dry dock. It is large enough to hold at once four torpedo boats, or a monitor and a gunboat, or any one of the large cruisers of the navy. It is made of concrete and has a floating gate that shuts out the waters of the fjord, once the big boats are inside.

On the south side of this dock is a jetty alongside of which the warships are brought to have their upper works and inner mechanisms overhauled, and still further to the south is another pier at which the once-famous Philadelphia is now permanently moored as a receiving ship for new recruits. The day of ships like the Philadelphia is past, so she was dismantled and put here as a place to house new-comers to the navy until they can accustom themselves to the peculiarities of life on board ship.

Beyond the Philadelphia is a pier leading out from the magazines where a large store of torpedoes, powder and shells, are kept. These magazines have been enlarged lately, and are being fitted out with an extensive supply of explosives for the new fleet. Still further down the fjord are great coal bunkers which are being quadrupled in size in preparation for the coming demands.

Around the hill above these piers are the six big white houses which are the first part of Bremerton that is sighted from the incoming steamer. They are the homes of the rear-admiral in charge and the resident officers, and set on a wide terrace half way up the hillside.

Out in the channel there is usually anchored a motley array of ships, awaiting repairs or a general overhauling. There will be a beef ship belonging to the commissary department of the army of the Philippines which plies regularly between Manila and Australia, a couple of gunboats from the Behring Sea, a half dozen torpedo boats, and perhaps a couple of transports, with two or three big white cruisers looming up in the background.

Along the edge of the water just north of the dry dock stand several torpedo boats drawn clear out of the water ,and resting on wooden supports with a big house built over all but the ends. These wasps of the sea are kept in perfect condition and are stored on dry land as a matter of economy, as it takes only a few men to keep them in first-class order and ready for instant use. They are a reserve force kept against that day when they may be needed to defend the entrance to Puget Sound against a foreign foe.

The inlet on which Bremerton is located is very narrow from the mouth to the place where it turns to the south at a right angle. From here on it widens out until in front of the navy yard it forms a bay two miles across and six miles long, in which the entire Pacific fleet comprising twenty battleships, twenty cruisers, and a whole flotilla of little craft, could be anchored with safety and ease.

Out around the bend in the narrow channel leading to Bremerton, past Seattle, and then twenty miles northward is the narrow entrance to the American waters of Puget Sound. Here three forts are located, one on each side of the channel and one in the middle, which guard it against a destructive invasion from any foreign fleet, should the navy be employed elsewhere. On Vancouver Island, on the norihern side of Straits of Juan de Fuca, which lead from the Pacific into Puget Sound, the English have erected a fort at the Esquimault Navy Yard, whose guns will carry into the area controlled by the guns of the American fort, and as an invasion of the American waters of Puget Sound would be a menace to England, this fort would be of material, and is of moral, assistance in the defence of Bremerton.

This navy yard is one of the greatest strategical importance, for from it a fleet can be sent to within striking distance of the Philippines, and yet stop every night in an American port. The course taken in order to do this would be from the yard to Cape Flattery, then northward to the southernmost point of Alaska, and out along the Aleutian Islands to the coast of Kamschatka. It is also the place where a permanent fleet will be kept for the defence of the coast, and will be the haven into which any ship which may be temporarily disabled can flee for repairs, and feel perfectly safe behind the protecting forts and swarm of torpedo boats that will infest the entrance to the sound in the time of war.

It is a fact not generally understood, but Canada is coming to the fore as one of the greatest of shipping nations. Already only three countries do a greater merchant shipping business. Some 9000 ships are on the regular books of the Dominion, and only Great Britain, the United States and France surpass her. Canada leads Germany, Norway, Italy and other maritime powers.

In fisheries, Canada is abundantly blessed. There are not enough people in the country to eat the endless supply that is constantly being caught. Canadian fish are sent all over the world, and the profit of the business is great.

Not the least factor in the wonderful advance of the last ten years has been the attention which has been given to transportation. In this particular, Canada is much favored by nature. The St. Lawrence, with the Great Lakes, at once puts Canada in communication with the most commercial part of the United States, and with the open sea. The navigation of this great water system has been greatly assisted by numerous and extensive canals, of which the Rideau, Cornwall and the Welland are the most important.

In one year 30,000 vessels pass through Canadian canals and the number is ever on the increase.

Ramifying the water system is a remarkable series of railroads, of which the famous Grand Trunk line is the most noted. This is 2906 miles in length, and gives unbroken connection, mainly through Canadian territory, between Detroit and Portland, Me. The completion of the Canadian Pacific gave communication between Vancouver, the western end of Canada, and Montreal, its eastern terminus.

The country through which the Canadian Pacific passes is being wonderfully developed, for in this case, differing from the system in the United States, the railroad company, instead of looking only for its own selfish profits, is doing what it can to develop the country for the good of Canada. The tide of immigration is carrying into the territory traversed by the Canadian Pacific thousands on thousands of homeseekers, and they are good stock.

Canada's government is economical, for the burden of maintaining an army is escaped entirely by the fact that Great Britain has the responsibility of guarding its peace and protecting its interests.

The rivalry between the United States and this coming new factor in the world's business is destined to be especially keen from the fact that the staples of each nation commercially are the same. Both are great wheat, beef and cotton countries, and some experts who have investigated the Canadian mines say that eventually the coal business of the Dominion will surpass that of the United States.

The bigger cities like Montreal, Toronto, Quebec, Ottawa, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Halifax, are undergoing transformation. The old picturesqueness is fast disappearing, and is giving place to a hustle that shows how alive are business men to the chance that is offering.

Enterprising Boards of Trade are gathering statistics and determining ways to extend business, and in nearly every case the competitor to suffer most from their inroads is one of Uncle Sam's citizens.

The banks of the country are safeguarded so that no panic can bring them down, and at all points, enterprise and careful investment is marking the business system.

Pioneers are pushing out in the unknown country to the north, and return to tell of limitless possibilities. The government encourages them in every move they make, but there is an insistent patriotism back of every right granted. Canada wants its country developed, and it welcomes foreigners and their capital, only it so disposes that out of every dollar the private individual makes, the government must reap some share of permanent benefit.

For a wonderful century and a half the United States has been the greatest money-making country of the new world. If this supremacy is to continue uninterrupted, it may not be amiss to keep an eye on Canada.

THE KAISER'S WAR HOUSE.

From 4 o'clock this morning till noon, when today's maneuvers finished, the Kaiser on horseback watched the progress of the fighting. He looked extremely well, his uniform imparting a certain sternness to his face even when he was smiling and chatting with the members of his staff or with the foreign officers, his guests.

I had an opportunity of inspecting the asbestos house in which he slept overnight near the contending armies. It consists of one story and contains a reception-room, the Kaiser's bedroom, a bedroom for the suite, and a bathroom. It is built of wood and asbestos, with double walls, hot air circulating between. The structure takes three hours to erect, and requires twenty-four carts to carry the sections. There are six glazed windows and two doors, one into the reception-room and one into the Kaiser's bedroom. A small pumping and filtering engine on wheels accompanies the house, enabling water to be laid on with hot or cold supply. The walls are covered with hangings, and the appearance is extremely comfortable and cosy.—[Correspondence London Mail.

DO THOU THY PART.

The day is done, the sun has set,
  The western sky glows brightly red;
O life of mine, thy tears forget,
  Remember not thy future dread.

Let peace descend to calm thy fears,
  For night doth reign benignly kind,
And gently dries all falling tears,
  And aches at last deep rest will find.

Our life is short, though full of woe—
  Oft hearts do break ere set of sun,
And anguish keen with tears o'erflow,
  And with dead hopes their lives are done.

Yet still go on, no falt'ring know,
  For One upholds and guides thy feet;
Though rough the way that thou must go,
  The end draws near and rest is sweet.

Lift up thy cross with smile and cheer;
  Hide out of sight thy breaking heart!
Lift up a face that shows no fear—
  In Life's great work do thou thy part.

Lived Among Brahmins.

SELF-SACRIFICING LIFE OF A WOMAN NOW IN LOS ANGELES.

By a Special Contributor.

HUNDREDS of filthy lank human beings in the interior of India remember a thin woman with a white Caucasian face who once nursed them when ill. Some scores of bejeweled very wise men in Indian cities remember how the same pale western face relentlessly quizzed then. A certain ship's crew may recollect bearing home to America the same woman, sick past questionings and being nursed herself. That was years ago, and the nurse and questioner has since settled in Los Angeles.

Willimina Armstrong has been an American physician and a Brahmin priest, a scientist and a zealot, a Christian working with heathen, and with strange beliefs she has lived among Christians. The battle of creeds and duties has worn her out, and for years she has lived all but alone on the brink of a shallow valley just outside Los Angeles, resting. Before she dies she says she is going back to India, where her strange impulses carried her and put forth their energies. What has actually happened in her life parallels romance to the limit of belief.

Miss Armstrong is the daughter of a New York physician. She was born in Detroit, and remembers taking long drives with her father through the Michigan snows, while he talked with her. From him she believes she got her child's impression that the mind has deep recesses and her desire to enter them.

Miss Armstrong herself.

Her father, however, believed that physiology is a good basis for psychology, and he would let nothing stand in the way of a sound education. When some girls are ready for finishing school his daughter went off to a Philadelphia medical college where, at 16, she was ready to take her degree. But 16-year-olds could not then get a medical degree in Philadelphia, no matter how much they knew. So the girl went forth unlicensed, but still an equipped physician.

How skilled she was will appear in her later career. During a little work in a hospital the girl chafed. She had a compelling desire to visit India. It did not take her long to resolve to go. Her parents had died, but she speaks as if no human tie could have held her back.

Arrived in India, Miss Armstrong made bold to go to the very great, the rich and the wise and the seclusive. Even when they gave her cards of introduction, British officials told her she would find them strange companions, if friendly at all. But somehow the child got on with the upper tier of Bombay native society—which in India means the wise as well as the rich. Before long she was asking Indian doctors to acquire the Hindu language. She was advised to go into the market place and listen. "Just listen?" she said. Even the child who was clever enough to earn a doctor's degree at 16 wondered if she could learn a language wholly through her ears.

She went to listen in the market place, however. Into the jeweler's market, where the wealthy buy the gems that are to them not so much the glory of this earth as the symbols of heaven. The jewel market was a delight to the eye, while the ear heard only the pure tongue. In five days she could repeat phrases; in twelve she knew their sense. Words came then, and thus a vocabulary. In a few weeks she could converse. From then on she really lived not only in but with India, soul and body.

Having obeyed the elder's command to listen, and learned a language that way, Miss Armstrong came further under the authority of the high Brahmins, meeting with them twice a week. Many native men in public life—officials, judges, everyday citizens—are Brahmins. The American girl entered their meeting places and homes, gradually absorbing their point of view. But she was and is a Christian. She has always believed in the divinity of Christ. The Brahmins knew Christ vaguely as the divinity of the western peoples, whose spiritual life—so much younger than their own—they despised. They had greeted the American girl as a prodigy from the crude, young West, but they did not imagine that she had anything to tell them about religion.

But she had. A high-caste Brahmin never becomes "converted," says Miss Armstrong, but when he discovers a creed that has points of contact with his own interest in it it is keen. The girl attended many councils of the elders, councils very like in appearance and in topics discussed the one Christ attended when He was 12 years old. Much of what she heard was not new to her—nor would it be, she says, to any one who thinks much about religion.

One day she began to talk about Christ. She outlined an idea she had about His relation to India. She mentioned the hundreds of affinities His message has with the best Brahmin teaching. Perhaps, she ventured, the Galilean might find a high place with them if they could be made to understand Him. She was asked to tell them all she knew, not at all to convert the Brahmins to the Christian church, but to inform them of a great mind whose study they had neglected. She proceeded, and soon the robed and solemn Hindu priests sat straighter in their chairs, pricked up their ears, gave voice to interest and surprise, and put question after question to her. At many meetings she continued the story of the Nazarene, as the gospels tell it.

One day a member of the group repeated to her a prophecy old among certain priests of the Brahmin religion, but unknown to most of them. Its closing words were:

"That one shall teach, and if the teaching of that one shall be concentrated in one word, that word shall name the essence of the infinite as one flake names the widest storm that every swept high Himalayas."

"Did your prophet leave behind Him any such sign?" they asked.

"Of course," she replied. "The word was 'love.'"

Again the sages confronted her with sacred words, this time a sentence from their oldest book:

"After about six thousand years one shall come that in Himself shall represent the essential relationship between the Creator and its created."

These words had never before been spoken to an American. The Brahmin secrets had not been vulgarized. Christ had been admitted to a place in the Brahmin system. And the girl who had made them see that He was one of those whom the Brahmins believe have attained the last heaven—became their equal by that act.

Miss Armstrong still has most of the gifts she got then. Some people would call them curios, but to their owner they are as precious as flesh and blood. One is a chain of beads by which they finally made her a Brahmin priest. A priest's robe was shortly given her—a garment whose color, length, texture, whose very folds symbolize ideas. It was destined to be worn through a strange adventure.

With a Philadelphia doctor's case of instruments, bandages and salves, the young American set out on a search for the lame, the halt and the blind. Having preached altruism so fervently, she found she must quench the flame she had kindled

One's eye catches a vista of wide streets, electric lighted and with electric cars, lined with handsome modern buildings, government or city headquarters, which show the new modern Tokio eating into the ancient Yedo, for the Yashike (ancient military castle) will soon be a thing of the past. But green as well as gray is a dominant color, for always there are the pines, ruggedly beautiful, the bamboo in feathery, pale-green masses, lotus pods and sedges lining the moats, and in cherry season after a whipping wind often comes a soft, balmy rain and then the morning landscape is transformed and lo! soft, rounded surges of bloom or cloudlike forms fill the scene, and Tokio is at her best.

And now as we stand and gaze to where the city's skirts fringe off into sordid villages, past stretches of rice fields and dark green foliage masses, the eye is caught by a mountain gleam, set among the indigo silhouettes of lesser peaks, Fuji, impearled, worship-compelling, lifts her "pinnacle of ancient snow."

But to stand thus and gaze one would never know Tokio, any more than those who look upon Japan's outer civilization and military feats know the real people.

A plunge down into some crowded town within the town (for Tokio has no system, no topography; it is but a cluster of cities that grew about their trade, municipal or political centers) brings us into a bewildering network of streets that run everywhere and nowhere, sometimes mere alleys as to width, lined with stagnant ditches and backed by houses low, narrow, dingy, poverty-stricken beyond our farthest conception. Mulberry Lane was a paradise to this. For crowded down into the low, marshy places are the city's million or more of poor. The tiny one-room house is often filled with sleepers, so full that they can hardly stretch their toil-embruted bodies on the dirty mats for a night's rest. But in they pack somehow, and sleep, God knows how on the hard mats with all too thin bedding. Yet sleep is the only surcease to their unending toil and misery until they are swallowed up in the nagai nemuri (long sleep.)

The boxlike houses are shut tight while the dank, cold mists roll up from the marsh and cover the sleeping village. At earliest light they stir. The amada, or sliding rain doors, are shoved back in their pockets" at the end of the narrow veranda, and a stench of hot, murky, foul gas pours into the streets. As a beginning to the day's labor, the bedding used the night before is rolled up and carried to the pawnshop. Some rice and cheap vegetable and materials for day's work are received in exchange. After the scant meal, down to work sit the whole family except the two tiniest children. The tot next to the tiniest has tied on his or her back the tiniest—often but a few weeks old—red-faced, crying baby. It's the two or three-year-old's business to care for the baby. That is his or her burden, while father, mother and children whittle chopsticks, paste fans or roll cigarettes till night, with perhaps a hurried meal at noon. So they toil, but never live, so fierce is the fight to keep the red-fanged wolf of starvation from the door.

Nihon-bashi is the bridge at the center of the city from which start the roads of the empire. Junks, loaded barges, tiny steamboats, creak and lumber and puff under it all day. Ginza, the business thoroughfare of Tokio, starts from it. A reasonably wide paved and electric-lighted street it is, with a jumble of electric cars, jinrikshas, and pedestrians of every hue. A few of the shops have counters, shelves of goods, plate-glass show windows and suave, English-speaking salesmen. But most of the shops are booths with front open to the street. Merchant and clerks sit on the matted floor in the national sitting posture, on the knees, waiting for customers. Little effort is made to show or to sell goods. Finest and most valuable goods, tea, silks, lacquer, bronzes, carved ivory or bone curios, are kept in the stucco warehouse or go-down built at the rear of the shop. For earthquake and fire are ever threatening scourges, and in a few minutes the shop can be cleared of its valuable goods, and the go-down shut. Its smoke-blackened walls usually stand the test, and keep its treasures secure.

The residence streets are wide, hedge-lined and clean-swept. Sometimes they are bounded by high stucco wolls rooted with tile. Through valves of the great mon or gate one catches a glimpse only of the garden and interior. If we drop our shoes at the door and stand on the polished black floor of the little entrance hall we see a vista of cool rooms stretching to the garden beyond. The rooms are divided by sliding paper doors adorned with pictures in true Japanese art. The floors are immaculate with pale, gleaming mats. None of the wood is stained, but polished to show the native grain. In the cool perspective is the garden, green and dank with dripping coolness. No grass, but a velvet pad of thick moss covers the ground. Thin, flat stones pave the walks. In a pool lazy carp hug the cool shallows under the lotus pads and wait for tidbits. A miniature Fuji, stream and waterfall, and a rustic bridge, reproduce nature by art, giving the outlook that beauty-loving Japanese so delight in. No white glare of light streams into this garden. Only pale flecks of sunlight sift through the swaying maple and pine branches, where birds twitter but rarely sing, but oftener the rain drips, dank perfumes load the air and frogs croak lonesomely on the edge of the pool.

But of the varied life of the street, how to tell tottering, toothless old age, with all senility and nothing worthy of reverence; middle age, in years that would be youth to us; officials on horseback; householders and commoners in kuruma and on foot; dainty, high-rank women; beggars, amma or blind shampooers; tiny toddlers much swathed as to body, but well exposed as to limbs; thin, eager-faced students, with bare ankles bitten red by frost and wind, striding along on high clogs, and groups of pretty-faced schoolgirls, in flower season carrying branches of camellia, magnolia, plum or cherry. The flowers typify the faces. Some have the full, outer curves and florid coloring of the camellia or the cherry, others the pale, inner curves and delicate coloring of the plum or the magnolia.

Then there are soldiers marching to drill. Sometimes a small policeman with a big sword sweeps back the always good-natured crowd. A rush of wheels and quick trample of hoofs, and the carriages of an imperial party sweep by amid the doffing of hats and loud banzais of the crowd.

Space forbids to tell of Shiba's shrines where, "wrapped in silk and cinnabar ceiled in cedar and gloom," sleep the dead daimyo of the old age; of Uneyo, one time a battle field, now a cherry park; of the iris fields, wistaria gardens and azalea-decked hillsides, of tea houses, geisha—dank holes of vice and pleasure-gilded palaces of sin, filled with rottenness, in the Yoshiwara. But everywhere vice hounds virtue, the new hustles the old and truth and falsehood crowd each other. For here lap the selvages of the age of darkness and the age of light, and the eternal war somehow is waging in every street of this great city.

DRAINING A FAMOUS LAKE.

The draining of Sowley Pond, the famous lake on Lord Montagu of Beaulieu's Hampshire estate, was begun yesterday. The pond is to be emptied and stocked with different varieties of trout.

Believed to have been made 600 years ago by Cistercian monks, the pond, which is 130 acres in extent, may, if tradition be true, hold some valuable antiquities, including a golden image of the Virgin said to have been cast into the pond in a time of trouble.

Yesterday, Lord Montagu of Beaulieu worked hard with a band of active anglers, wading up to his hips in water and mud, and handling hundreds of fish.

The water from the lake is being drained into the Solent, and netting is going on as the water is lowered. The very first haul of the net brought to land thousands of fine fish—jack, tench, perch, and bream, the last named in hundreds, running up to three pounds and four pounds in weight. The fish were carefully handled, and the bream will be especially valuable for stocking the south country streams, where bream are scarce.

The netting and disposal of the fish will continue all this week. When it is completed, the pike and other coarse fish will be destroyed by the use of chemicals. When the winter rains and floods have refilled the lake, it will be restocked with Loch Leven, rainbow, and brown trout. It is confidently expected that Sowley Pond will become a famous trout water.—[London Mail.

The "Great Commoner."

THADDEUS STEVENS IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

By a Special Contributor.

WHEN Thaddeus Stevens entered the national House of Representatives in the winter of 1859 he was nearly 68 years of age. Had he died at that moment he would have been practically unknown to the American people and the world. His fame was the flower of his old age. He had believed his career ended. It had only begun. The work that was to make his name memorable lay before him in the next ten years, and no man in the history of the world's politics has impressed himself on his country's life more vividly than this old man entering the arena at the verge of 70. Neither Gladstone, nor Thiers, nor the aged Venetian Dandolo, has surpassed him in this respect. Had his part been played on the European, instead of the American stage, his name would be associated in history with that of Cromwell, Metternich or Bismarck. His talents and audacity fully matched the brilliant adventure of any of these. Here in the United States he readily won the title of the "Great Commoner," likening him to the older Pitt, whom, in masterful temper and in services to his country in senescent years, he so strikingly resembled; and he was even more masterful than Chatham. During the eight years embraced by the Civil War and the tumultuous reconstruction era he held the assertive body of the American Congress, composed of widely-divergent elements, more absolutely in his hand than ever did Pitt the House of Commons.

As an occupant of the reporters' gallery I watched Stevens on the House of Representatives floor during several years of his second service there. For he had once before appeared for a single term in the House of Representatives for the Lancaster (Pennsylvania) district, between the years 1850 and 1853. He was a native of Vermont and a graduate of Dartmouth College, and after his graduation in 1813, at the age of 21, moved to Pennsylvania as a teacher, becoming a law student and thereafter a lawyer. At an early period in life he had ardently espoused the anti-slavery cause, and some of his most eloquent and successful efforts in court were in behalf of fugitive slaves occasionally escaping over the line from Maryland into Pennsylvania. He had been elected several times to the State Legislature, and there against fierce opposition, had successfully championed free schools, establishing his name in Pennsylvania as "Father of the Free School System." The independence of his views on public questions kept him from affiliation with any of the regular political parties of the country, but in 1849 he had been elected to Congress as the representative of the Whig and Free Soil elements of his district. The Thirty-first Congress, which he then entered, in 1849, was one of the most notable for distinguished names in the history of the United States, including, in the Senate, Seward, Corwin, Chase, Benton, Cass, Houston, Webster, Clay, Calhoun, and Jefferson Davis; the House being equally adorned by the talents of many of the most brilliant intellects of the country, North and South, such as Robert Winthrop, Horace Mann, Joshua Giddings, George Julian, David Wilmot, Howell Cobb, Alexander Stephens, Robert Toombs, and others of similar intellectual rank.

The question of slavery had already reached an acute crisis at that period, and Stevens, with his ineradicable hatred of the slave system, was its foremost and boldest assailant in the lower house of that Congress; his two brilliant philippics against the institution during the session of 1850 almost equaling in eloquence and surpassing in invective Sumner's remarkable oration in the Senate two years later. Addressing the Southern representatives, he said:

"Homer informs us that the moment a man becomes a slave he loses half the man, and a few short years of apprenticeship will expunge all the rest except the faint glimmerings of an immortal soul."

He praised, however, the courage of the representatives of the South, while denouncing the vacillating course of northern men like Webster and Clay, including the half vacillating tactics of Seward. "The sons of the South," he said, "are faithful even though its cause is that of human bondage. But the North, the poor, timid, mercenary, driveling North, has no such defenders of her cause, although it is the cause of human liberty. Even her great men have turned her accusers." Quoting Dante, he said: "The poet makes hell consist of nine circles, the punishment of each increasing in intensity over the preceding. Those doomed to the first circle are much less afflicted than those of the ninth, where are tortured Lucifer and Judas Iscariot—and I trust in the next edition will be added the traitors to liberty. Sir, for myself, I would look upon any northern man, enlightened by a northern education, who would directly or indirectly, by omission or commission, by basely voting or cowardly skulking, permit slavery to spread over one rood of God's free earth, as a traitor to liberty and recreant to his God."

But when Stevens left Congress in 1852, his brief services there, though greatly impressing his associates in that body, had not established his name before the country. He was to return ten years later and make that name indelible on the records of the nation. I vividly recall his appearance as I first saw him, there in this later period—an old man of 70, considerably above the middle height, with a club foot like Byron's and wearing a wig—although, unlike Byron, he did not attempt to conceal this deformity and the wig was becoming to his strong features.

In his youth he was reported to have been exceedingly handsome. As I saw him at the close of the war, he had already made a mighty impression and become a national figure. He had, in fact, taken possession of the House of Representatives as its most illustrious member and as the leader in that body of the Northern cause—a leadership he was destined to retain till the end of his days. On the issues with the Southern slave power he had ironclad convictions. He had no doubts, and he knew no fear. In the session of Congress during the winter of 1860, after the election of Lincoln, preceding the outbreak of the Civil War, he had been head and front in denunciation of the conspiracy for secession, then already perfected.

Amid the timid conciliatory utterances of the time on the part of other northern leaders like Seward, his rhetoric knew no qualification. As Carlyle said of Mirabeau, he had "swallowed all formulas." "Rather than show repentance," he said, "for the election of Mr. Lincoln with all its consequences, I would see this government crumble into a thousand atoms. If I cannot be a free man, let me cease to exist. If I believed that the State of Pennsylvania would purchase peace by unprincipled concessions to insurgents with arms in their hands, if I thought such was her character, I would expatriate myself. I would leave the land where I have spent my life from early manhood to declining age, and seek some spot untainted by the coward breath of servility and meanness. To her pleasant valleys I would prefer the rugged, bold State of my nativity (Vermont;) nay, any spot in the most barren Arctic region amid whose pure icicles dwells manly freedom."

The American House of Representatives during that winter session has been described as being "more like a powder magazine than a deliberative assembly." There had been enacted there an extraordinary and dramatic scene in which Stevens was the agitating center. He was making a tremendous speech against the slave power and the advocates for secession there present before him in the person of the southern Representatives.

THAD STEVENS.

In the language of one of his colleagues, who afterward described the speech and the occasion, "his denunciation of the plotters of treason to their faces was terrible, and his exposure of the barbarism of the so-called civilization behind them was awful." His pungent and withering satire excited them to murderous fury. Led by Barksdale of Mississippi, with his hand on his Bowie knife, nearly fifty southern members rose to their feet and rushed toward the orator with curses and threats of violence. As many northern Representatives sprang to their feet to defend him and, surrounding him in a sort of open square, advanced him into the space in front of the Speaker's desk to continue his speech. Having finished his denunciation, Stevens, calm and self-possessed as a judge, satirically bade his would-be assailants to compose themselves at their leisure!

In the days, four years later, in which I saw him, such scenes of violence had disappeared from the American Congress, and the "Great Commoner" stood there master and autocrat of the situation, administering on the country's future. He gave the keynote of reconstruction, and in all substantial matters was as implicity followed by the dominant majority as if its 300 or 400 members had been subordinated to his will by a species of magic. It was, however, a voluntary hypnotism. Not only his will, but his intelligence, was recognized by his associates, and generally by the country, as the strongest and clearest of any member of the House. The American legislative mind of the war period was strangely confused by many alleged constitutional limitations; whether the seceded States were still in or out of the Union; whether the government had the right to use the war power against these States precisely as if against a foreign enemy, and especially if it had the right to confiscate or emancipate the slaves and to enlist them as a military force against the South; as to the blockading the southern ports; and many others.

Owing to the first of these questions, that of the status of the seceding States, these problems of the war and reconstruction were to most minds really puzzling and difficult. To Stevens they were not so. His mind was eminently practical. He was not disposed to talk much about the Constitution. He cut the Gordian knot of the whole difficulty. According to his theory, the rights of the seceding States under the Constitution were already destroyed by their own action. If public war existed, he said, then it was clear that no compacts, laws or paper obligations could be relied upon by the South against the North. As one of the principles of "universal law," he said, "obligations personal or national, in order to be binding, must be mutual and

The Lost Word.

HOW MUCH IT COST THE MAN WHO LOST IT.

By a Special Contributor.

THE man by the window was searching through his pockets for something that seemed to elude him, and as he passed from one garment to another the frown on his brow deepened. Having examined all the receptacles for masculine odds and ends two or three times, he turned to the retiring landscape for relief, nervously drumming the window sill with his finger. Presently he resumed the search, carefully removing the contents of each pocket."

"Pardon me," remarked the red-headed man in the corner, "but you seem to have lost something."

"Seems so," answered the anxious passenger, without stopping his investigation, "for I'd have bet pennies to peanuts that I had another cigar in my pocket."

"That's a loss easily remedied," said the red-headed man, as he drew out his well-filled case and passed it over. "Oblige me by taking one."

"Thanks. I was hungry for a smoke, and I don't like the train butcher's brands. A—h!" he added, as he touched a match to the Havana and the fragrant smoke began to roll from his lips; "this is the real stuff. Thanks again."

"Don't mention it," said the red-headed man, pleased by the compliment. "I'd as soon withhold water from a man parching with thirst in the desert as a cigar from a passenger in the smoking compartment. Didn't know but what you'd lost your pocket book or your railroad ticket——"

"Or your reputation," put in the drummer from Grand Rapids. "The red-headed man could have fixed you up in any event. He helped me out in a poker game once when I'd lost everything but my collar button——"

"Speaking of losing things," interrupted the promoter from nowhere in particular, "but the queerest loss I ever heard of happened to a friend of mine. He lost a word, a little word of ten letters, and it cost him his job and the company he was working for $100,000."

"Huh!" grunted the red-headed man; "I've been at a loss for a word a good many times, but it never hurt me that bad. How was it?"

"Well," said the promoter, "it was this way. Jorgensen is an engineer, a mining engineer, and a mighty good one. I reckon he's been in every corner of the earth, from Alaska to Australia, and from Siberia to South Africa, lookin' at holes in the ground. Eight or ten years ago he was workin' for a big company in New York, a concern that bought mines wherever they could see any money in 'em, and they kept Jorgensen on the jump from January to Christmas. One day the head of the house sent for him, took him into his private office and locked the doors.

"'Jorgensen,' he says, 'there's a proposition down in Bolivia,' and he waved his hand toward the south like he was talkin' about Asbury Park or Staten Island. 'There's a proposition down in Bolivia that looks mighty good to us, and I wish you'd run down there and take a look at it. It's high-grade copper with a pretty good run of silver and some gold, and if reports are true there's enough of the stuff to make Butte raise grass. But there's some other people after it, and you'll have to keep mighty still. All I want to know is that it's what it's represented to be. We've got a price on it, and if you say the word we'll close the deal, provided the other fellows don't beat us to it. They won't give an option, so it's a case of first money gets it. We want to be first if it's straight goods, but as you know we don't buy pigs in a poke, and we've got to have your O. K. to it. There's a steamer out for Colon tonight. Get aboard under some other name than your own; don't stop till you get to La Paz, and don't say 'boo' to anybody. Cable me as quick as you get the facts. I don't want to trust even our private code. If it's all right, send me the one word 'Chuckaluck.' If it isn't, you can say it in plain English, but remember it costs $2 a word. Don't forget, now—Chuckaluck. Good-by.'

"Jorgensen put the word down in his memorandum book and started off. You know Bolivia is away down south o' Dixie quite a few miles. You have to go down to Colon, cross over to Panama and go down the coast for days and days until you get to Chile. Then you get astraddle of a burro or a llama or whatever they ride down there and climb over the Andes Mountains. It's a trip that takes weeks. But Jorgensen got there right side up and went right ahead examining the mine just like he was in Nevada or somewhere else in God's country. And the mine was a dandy. There wasn't a screw loose anywhere, and everything claimed for it was if anything understated. So Jorgensen hustles back to La Paz by the fastest donkey he could get.

"But when he went to write the cablegram he found he'd lost his memorandum book. He was in such a rush that he'd left it back at the mines, perhaps; he wasn't sure. At any rate he didn't have it, and to save his life he couldn't remember the word. You know how a fellow will forget a word sometimes just when he needs it most. He'd had that word in his head all the time, but it had got clear away from him. He put in twenty-four hours climbin' up and down the streets o' that perpendicular town tryin' to recall that word. He went over all the words he ever heard of an' then he looked around for a dictionary, but the people down there didn't know any more about Webster or Worcester than they do about J. Cannon or John Gates. He knew that the word commenced with 'ch,' and he tried chow-chow and cherries and cheese and he felt like he was gettin' pretty warm when he struck checkers and chickens, but he couldn't hit the bull's eye. At last he gave it up and in despair he went down to the telegraph office and sent off a code message that was translated like this:

"'Lost word. Everything's all right.'

"In the meantime his old boss had been gathered to his fathers and there was a new Pharaoh, who didn't know Joseph and didn't know anything about the important word. So he fires back the answer, in code:

"'Don't understand. Come again.'

"And then Jorgensen put it this way:

"'Forgotten word. It's straight goods.'

"Still that blunderin' old idiot at the other end couldn't catch on.

"'Brace up,' he cabled Jorgensen. 'Don't know what you're talkin' about.'

"There was a man at La Paz about this time who was beginnin' to get mad, and after he'd sweat over the code book about an hour, gettin' the message translated, he swore some. But he figured out that he was to blame, and there wasn't any use bein' cross at $2 per word. So he tried it again.

"'Can't remember that word,' he cabled, 'but it's safe proposition.'

"That ought to have been plain enough to anybody that knew what he'd been sent to Bolivia for, but the new boss was awfully dense.

"'What are you drivin' at, anyhow,' he wired. 'We don't care what you've forgot. Tell us what's hurtin' you and get it out o' your system in straight English.'

"When Jorgensen got this extravagant order written so's he could understand it, he was certainly red-headed, beggin' your pardon.

"'By jimini!' he says to himself. 'I'll take that old duffer at his word and something will be hurtin' him before I'm through.'

"So he sets down and writes out a detailed report, telling what his instructions were and giving full information about the mining property. It made about 2000 words, and he filed it just as he had written it, in plain English. He could have put the whole thing in a hundred words in cipher, but he didn't. He just let them have it in bulk, and then he set back and waited for the explosion.

"It was about two days a-comin'. You know, cablin' to Bolivia isn't like telegraphin' from New York to Philadelphia. It takes time, and days had gone by while this little long-range conversation had been goin' on. So it was about forty-eight hours before Jorgensen got what he was lookin' for.

"'Why, in heaven's name, didn't you say so at first,' the cable read. 'While you've been stutterin' around the price of the mine has gone up a hundred thousand and we had to pay it. You needn't bother about comin' back.'

"And, gentlemen," concluded the promoter, "I'll eat my hat if that bloody word 'chuckaluck' didn't pop into Jorgensen's head that very minute." C. S. YOST.

OBITER SCRIPTA.

Many words and phrases which we stigmatize as unlovely Americanisms prove, upon examination, to be of the phraseology which Chaucer and Spenser and Shakespeare employed. The same may be said, of course, of some words which the dictionary now informs us are obsolete—obsolete as the barbarous customs and superstitions with which they were contemporary. Still, the modern Americanism which proves to have been of classical lineage commands respect and sympathy. Like consideration cannot be extended to barbarisms such as "graft" and "hoodlums." The former, honest English slang for hard work, has been twisted, across the waters, into a synonym for dishonesty and corruption. "Hoodlum" the Times now employs to describe the roughs who have been creating the anti-Asiatic riots in the West. That is not a classic; it is a California creation of latter days. It is the western equivalent of the Lambs of Nottingham; of the High Rip Gang, of the Hooligans, and other disreputable forms of ruffianism with whose exploits we have been made unpleasantly familiar.

America is the great mint in which modern slang is coined. A word of a phrase gets into the papers, and is at once current. The representative of an English paper adopts the new term, and introduces it into an article, at first in inverted commas, afterwards without them. "Hoodlums" was thus distinguished in yesterday's Times; soon it will be used in the same august columns without quotes. Then it will be ready for common employment in England. "Strap hanger" came to us in the same way. "Chauffeur" was first a term of opprobrium. It came to us from France, where, during the reign of terror, brigands, whose pleasant fancy it was to burn the feet of their victims to make them reveal their treasure, were so called. "Chauvinism," which had an enormous vogue during the Russo-Japanese war, came from the same land, taken from a French play of seventy years ago, to anticipate the immense favor which "Jingo" was later to enjoy in England. The first Tories were robbers, just as the first Hoosiers, the name given to the citizens of the State of Indiana, were "hushers," whose method of putting out of the fight those whom they intended to rob the latter term unpleasantly suggests.—[London Standard.

AFTER FORTY-FIVE YEARS.

"The phonograph is wonderful enough, but the human brain is vastly its superior, as it has recently been shown to have stored up for forty-five years the thoughts actually passing through it, and the speech resulting therefrom," states a medical man.

"A boy in a village in the Tyrol, when 15 years old, went to his father's field to catch a frisky colt. When about to place a halter about the animal's neck it kicked him on the head. The wound healed, but the use of the boy's reason did not return. For forty-five years he lived in the village, until he reached the age of 60. Then a prominent German specialist, who passed through the village on a holiday, offered to experiment. Finding that a portion of the skull had been forced into contact with the brain, he, by a skillful operation, removed the pressure.

"The man at once regained his reason, and his first utterance, as the effects of the anesthetic wore off, was: 'Did the colt get away?' "—[Cassell's Journal.

But it is only [illegible] I tell you of, which the white man has seen; for the Paiute will not show the others to the white man, lest he go with pick and shovel to these marked and made sacred by the first parents for their children, the Paiutes. For to disturb these things makes the sleep of the great first father uneasy, and he grows angry because of the hacking, and hammering, and chipping of the footprints he and the First Mother made when they walked there in the Long-Time-Ago. The footprints are twice the length of your foot or mine, and they are in the stone; and they were set there for a sign. But, you must understand that these footprints came long, long after the time when the Cottontail killed the Sun. It is of that I shall tell you now.

In that far time, before the First Father and the First Mother, Tah-voó (the Cottontail) and Tsuh-goó (his brother) used to go every day to shoot, with their bows and arrows, such game as they might find.

Now the sun which we see today, is not the Sun that was here in the Long-Time-Ago days. It is only a part of it. Let me tell you how it came so.

Tah-bah, the Sun, was a great chief. Great—the greatest there was. And each day, from the place where he lived far out in the vast waters (which in time to come would rise and cover the earth) he would spring, and rush swiftly across the heavens in a fierce glare of light, such as we cannot imagine. And as quickly would he drop out of sight behind the western mountains, leaving the world again in inky darkness. Only a few minutes did it take for him to run fast across the sky, and so the days lasted but a breath, and the Cottontail and his brother were without lasting light that they might travel far when hunting game out on the plains.

Then Tah-voó spoke to Tsuh-goó:

"Come, my brother, we will go and find the place where the Sun lives; and then we will kill him. Let us go early in the morning as far as we can walk before he springs forth, directing our course to the spot where it seems he is now hiding ready to leap out. When we have gone as far as we can go before he appears, we will hide, and so be ready to kill him as he comes forth the next day. Then, when he is dead, and no longer can harm us, will I take from him that which he carries to give this great light; and I will set it in the sky that we will have it all the time, and there will be no more darkness. So it will be that we can see to go far away and hunt all the time."

Tah-voó and Tsuh-goó stayed awake all the night waiting for the moment to come for Tah-bah's spring into the world, from the secret place where he lived, far off to the east somewhere in the big waters that are all around the earth. Together the Cottontail and his brother watched the place on the mountain ridge where every day the Sun leaped suddenly into sight. When daylight came, and they saw him appear there above the eastern mountains—leaping high into the sky—they ran fast to the place whence he made the spring. But when they got there, they could see no water, nor any hole, nor anything that looked as though it might be the spot he had come forth from; so Tah-voó said:

"Keep still, my brother; we will hide here. And tomorrow morning we will see Tah-bah spring out of the place where he hides by night. So we will find where he lives."

Then they hid in the rocks, and waited. All day they stayed there, and all night. Then—when the hours of the early morning were come, and far away they saw a whitening of the eastern sky which they were sure was the edge of the earth, and the place Tah-bah was hiding in, Tah-voó said:

"Look, my brother! It is yet farther we must go to find him."

For the Sun sprang out of a far-away range of mountains, and went rushing across the sky over their heads, and downward toward the west. The Cottontail and his brother ran as swiftly as they could in the other direction, straight away to the spot from which they saw the Sun appear. They ran fast and got there before the world had grown dark again. And again they hid, and waited for another day, that they might find the home of Tah-bah. But again, the next morning, the sun sprang out of a range still farther away, and as before the Cottontail, and the Cottontail's brother, ran fast to that place and hid, waiting for another day. But again it was as it had been before. And so it was the day after. And again for many days was it the same.

"We must go until we see the great waters around the world. Then will we find Tah-bah and the place where he hides by night. These mountains do not open anywhere to show us the waters we have heard of. It is not their way. Tah-bah lives far beyond these ranges; beyond the last range—very, very far. Come with me, brother, and we will go to the edge of the earth, and then we can see the great waters, in which is Tah-bah's home. Then, when we are there, we will kill him."

So they traveled, day after day, going each morning toward the place where the Sun leaped forth; going farther and farther eastward, until after a very great number of days they came to the vast waters that circle the earth—the waters that have no farther shore.

There, by the edge of all things, the two waited that last night; and when the sky grew white in the morning, Tah-voó and Tsuh-goó each fitted an arrow to the bowstring, and stood ready, bow in hand, with fingers to pull strong and true on the deer sinew; and so they would kill the Sun when he came forth from the great waters.

Now, while they waited on the shore, they found that the water was growing warm. It became warmer and warmer. Soon it was hot—very hot. Then it began to boil; and there were terrible noises, and sounds of bubbling and hissing that came from beneath—the fearful sounds made by the boiling of all the waters there are—the waters that have no farther shores. And over, and all about—everywhere—were big clouds of steam—of scalding hot vapor.

Then—as the noise became the noise of thunder, and the waters boiled so hard they jarred the earth—the Sun arose from the deeps, and Tah-voó sent his arrow toward the Sun's heart. But Tsuh-goó was afraid; and his fear was so great he could not draw the bowstring.

Now Tah-bah saw them—saw Tah-voó and Tsuh-goó with bows in hand and arrows pointing at himself, though the arrow that had left the thumb and forefinger of the Cottontail had missed its mark; and he became angry—angrier than any creature in all the world had ever known him to be—and he ran after the Cottontail and the Cottontail's brother that he might burn them up. His rage was terrible; and the timid Tsuh-goó turned and ran into a hole which had been dug by the Badger, and so he was well hidden away. But Tah-voó stood bravely as the Sun rushed upon him; for he had taken Toó-noó-we-nup (which is the Last-Arrow-Which-Never-Misses, and which the Paiutes of the now-time no longer know how to make,) and with the magic arrow he shot him. So was Tah-bah, the Sun—greatest of chiefs—killed. Killed by the little Cottontail.

Then Tah-voó, as he saw him fall, ran quickly to the Sun, and cut him open; and taking out his gall (because he saw it was that which made the great light every day as the Sun rushed across the heavens,) he flung it far up into the sky. And there it is to this day.

But the waters were angry when the Sun died, and they seethed and rose in great waves, and rushed to cover the land. And the little Cottontail turned and ran fast to escape the boiling waters and steam which swept over the edge of the earth. As Tah-bah died, in his terrible anger he had set on fire all he could touch, and already the flames had scorched the back of Tah-voó's neck; and ever since that time every cottontail that has lived, has borne the reddish-brown fire mark, that all who look to see, may know how brave was the little Cottontail of long ago.

Tah-voó looked quickly about for shelter. Then he saw that Nah-voó (which is the cactus we call "prickly pear") had a place for him to hide; so he went inside of one of the thick, huge leaves, and was safe. For the fire could not burn, nor the hot steam reach him away inside of the fat, juicy leaves of the tuna. In that way was Tah-voó saved.

But Tsuh-goó was drowned by the waters filling the hole the Badger had dug. It was because he was of coward blood; because he had not been brave enough to help his brother kill Tah-bah.

Now this is the Indian's story of how the Cottontail killed the Sun. If you come into the land of the Paiute, and you and he become comrades, then may you hear this story from his lips, but it will be as I have told you.

IDAH MEACHAM STROBRIDGE.

A CLEVER DOG.

A Collie Which Called Daily at a Surgery for Treatment.

[London Leader:] The old problem, "Can dogs reason?" is revived by a remarkable story which comes from Holloway.

A fine Japanese collie, owned by a gentleman living near Camden Road, has earned distinction for itself by its habit of trotting round daily to a veterinary surgeon to be doctored. Suffering from painful ulceration in the ears, it was taken to the surgery of Mr. Marcus Stevenson, the veterinary surgeon, of Camden Road, Holloway, for treatment about five weeks ago. Each evening for three or four days "Roy" was taken here by his master.

Then Roy decided that in future he would not wait for his master to take him to the surgery. One evening, directly the door of his home was opened, Roy dashed out alone. In a few minutes he bounded, all alone, into Mr. Stevenson's surgery half a mile away.

"No one was more surprised that I was," said Mr. Stevenson to a Morning Leader representative yesterday, "to see the dog rush through the doorway, jump calmly on the operating table, and wait for me to attend to him. I expected to see his master follow him into the surgery, but no—Master Roy had come alone!

No one, least of all a sympathetic veterinary surgeon, could resist this mute appeal, and without waiting for further developments Mr. Stevenson picked up a bottle of the curative lotion.

"At once, without having to be prompted, he turned his head so that I should commence with the right ear," continued Mr. Stevenson, "and after the mixture had eased his right ear he at once bent forward and turned the left for the same treatment. Then, with a gratified bark, the dog raced off home.

"I suspected his ears had pained him, and his instinct had told him where he could find relief," commented Mr. Stevenson; "but you can judge my surprise when he came in just the same fashion, quite unaccompanied, the next evening, promptly jumped on the operating table as before, waited till he'd received treatment, and then dashed off home again."

And so ever since the dog has run round to the surgery practically every day and demanded treatment. "It's quite unique, in all my experience," said Mr. Stevenson. "I could understand a dog coming of his own accord for a pleasant syrup or some palatable or pleasant doctoring; but the treatment of canker is necessarily painful, and practically every dog who is treated for it has to be carried or dragged into the place after his first experience of it."

While Mr. Stevenson was speaking, a shrill bark and a great canine commotion at the door announced the unexpected arrival of Roy—for one more operation. Directly the door was flung open, the sagacious animal sprang upon the operating table, and looking up into the veterinary surgeon's face, whined eagerly.

Mr. Stevenson stroked Roy's head, but Roy whined all the more eagerly and impatiently till his left hand touched the familiar bottle of ear lotion. And then a succession of short, sharp barks plainly indicated that that was the object of the visit.

Raising first his right ear and then his left, the faithful creature sat still as a rock while the mixture was poured into each, and then, barking with delight, he made a bolt for the door.

Three Notable Churches.

THEY WERE MADE FAMOUS BY THREE MOST NOTABLE MEN.

By a Special Contributor.

FEW persons are aware that the bones of John Bunyan, the author of "Pilgrim's Progress," and those of Defoe, the creator of Robinson Crusoe, repose not far from each other in a little burying ground at Bunhill Fields, near London.

It often seems to me that if ghosts do walk, those two must have particularly congenial times sitting on some mossy old footstone, and talking about the two new countries which they created for the rest of the world.

Most of us have castles in Spain more or less elaborate in construction, but it is seldom that we succeed in putting underneath these structures such foundations as will make them habitable after our day.

Daniel Defoe and John Bunyan, dear romancers that they were, have done more, for the Pilgrim and his struggling followers, Worldly Wiseman, Hopeful and the rest, are as real to us as many of our next-door neighbors of today, and as for Robinson Crusoe, and his man Friday, who shall dare intimate that they are not real, and all their experiences and adventures actual!

Robinson Crusoe is so real that the reader is easily deceived into forgetting that there is in the story any imaginative construction. He is a friend of ours, and this is the history of his life, as real as Froude's history of any of the other real people—most of whom are not nearly so interesting.

It is true that there is a Juan Fernandez Island, notwithstanding a recent rumor about its sinking into the sea. There was, also, one Alexander Selkirk, an officer of the British Navy, who was four years alone on the island, and whose experiences may have suggested to Defoe the beginning of his story; but all the details and incidentals are his own.

Defoe and Bunyan were somewhat alike in lowly birth and environment. Defoe was the son of a St. Giles small tradesman. Bunyan's father was much more humble, being only a gypsy tinker; the very lilt of the gypsy tongue and the smell of the woods are on his every page.

Both these dreamers were greatly affected in their youth by the political and religious excitements of the day, and both succeeded in getting themselves thrown into prison. Each might readily have escaped confinement had he been willing to abate a little of his independence of soul, but not one whit would either give in.

A prison does not seem the most congenial place for literary pursuits, but it proved so in their case. "Pilgrim's Progress" was written entirely in Bedford Jail, while the author's real occupation was tagging shoe laces. Now and then he beguiled his loneliness by performing on a crude musical instrument, a sort of flute which he had contrived from the leg of his stool, and on which he succeeded in playing tunes much to the perplexity of the jailer, who could never succeed in finding out how his prisoner performed the melodies, inasmuch as he always put the leg back in the stool when he heard footsteps.

This may be a gypsy yarn.

Robinson Crusoe's history was not written in jail, but during his imprisonment Defoe wrote other books that brought him much local fame; yet, in the light of his one great creation, they are quite forgotten now. It was written in 1718, fifty years after "Pilgrim's Progress," but the success of the two books was equally phenomenal, and, what is more remarkable, though the world in general cares little for books written even ten years ago, it has not yet tired of either of these.

Defoe was educated for the ministry among dissenters; but, while he had regard for the sacred office, his talents were directed into another channel, and he became a tradesman, and afterward a writer, and something of a traveler as well, so that none of the three churches in question has anything of interest in connection with his life.

Bunyan, however, was a preacher; he was an orator as well as an author, and the churches where he preached are of interest. Living in Bedford, he preached there, when he was not in Bedford Jail writing his book, but he made regular trips to London, where he gathered from 12,000 to 15,000 on Sundays and 3000 on week days to hear him. The meeting-house was in Zoar street, Southwark, London, near that inn of Shakespearean fame, She Sign of the Falcon. The building was afterward dismantled and turned into a wheelwright's shop, and Bunyan's pulpit was taken to a Methodist chapel in Palace Yard, Lambeth. Bunyan was a Baptist.

So much for two impetuous and independent romancers, whom the world loves, and about might be written.

It is not a far cry from them to another two characteristics mentioned, equaled, if not excel these two romancers, I refer to that sturdy German who threw his inkstand and whose protests gave to protestants their Grandpa Colonel's Eyes.

THEY LOSE THEIR TERROR FOR HIS SMALL GRANDSON.

By a Special Contributor.

THE young heir to the house of Hastings sat on the rustic bench beneath the acacia tree and gazed wistfully upon the world lying outside the garden gate. As it lay glorified in the charm of a balmy morning, he heard it calling him to come. The birds sang so sweetly in the treetops, there were wild flowers to be picked, and a little way down the road there was alfalfa tall enough to hide in (not mowed close like the lawn in the yard.) Oh, if he dared go outside that gate! There were unusual preparations going on in the house for the party tonight—perhaps he wouldn't be missed. He caught his breath at the very joy of it. Then came the remembrance of Grandfather Hastings, and his little face grew sober.

Grandfather Hastings was Col. Norman Hastings, you know, and a truly great man. A large painting of him, wearing his beautiful uniform and carrying his famous sword, hung over the fireplace in the library. That picture was the sacred shrine of this little hero-worshiper, and the ambition of his heart was to be another Col. Norman Hastings. Nurse had said many times that to be a soldier one must learn to obey always, always. She had said, too, that if ever he should disobey, a sad, disappointed look would come into the picture eyes of his soldier-hero. So he dared not go outside the garden gate—that would be breaking a rule that had always been, and he would be ashamed to face the eyes of Grandpa Colonel.

He was sitting thus, dejected and bitter over the gloomy prospect of a joyless day, when the Whirlwind appeared around the corner of the house in the adjoining yard. She wasn't really the Whirlwind—her folks folks called her Peggy—but that was what his Uncle Will called her, whenever he saw her climbing trees, or turning handsprings on the grass, or riding that old pony of hers, or doing any of her other wild tricks. She lived in the little house in the next yard and her father worked out with his team for a living. Her wild ways shocked the aristocratic Mrs. Hastings, and she refused her son's pleadings to be allowed to play with her. But down in his heart, Norman had always envied Peggy her freedom.

She came running to the fence now, barefooted, and with uncovered hair flying behind her. Her eyes were shining.

"Hello, Norman, ain't this the finest day you ever saw?"

"Yes—outside the gate—but I can't go there."

"Oh, going outside the gate's nothing to me. I go clear down to Aunt Emma's every week, and Cousin Alice and I have a picnic under the big oak tree out in Uncle Henry's hay field." There was conscious pride in the voice she tried to make so careless.

"All by yourseves!" This was freedom beyond his wildest dreams.

"Of course. But (with a penetrating glance into the yard behind Norman, and a lowering of her voice)—that's nothing to what I'm going to do today! Can you keep a secret?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm going to run away to the cañon!" She waited to enjoy his surprise. She was a wonder in his eyes, and she knew it. "Mamma's gone to town, and I'm to go to Aunt Emma's. But I'm not going. I shall put lots of good things to eat in a basket, and go to the cañon for all day!"

"All day!"

"Yes; it's beautiful there. There's a waterfall and ferns ,and lots more wild flowers than here, and the birds sing right near you, and there's a big stone house where nobody lives, and I am going to play in it. And in the house you call and somebody answers, and you can't find them—but I'll find them today. There's fish in the water, too, and a limb you can swing on right over the stream!"

Norman's mouth fell open and his eyes were like saucers as he drank in her words. His imagination kept pace with her description, and the desire possessed him to see this wonderful place.

She intuitively recognized the psychological moment. "I could put enough in my basket for both of us to eat. Do you like apple pie—there's some in the house?"

"Yes," he answered in a dream.

"Well, stay here while I go and pack the basket." And she sped across the lawn and was gone.

" 'Both of us!—Pack the basket for us!' " he repeated to himself. She seemed to think he was going, too! Well, there was time before she returned to go and ask permission. A fear seized him. If he asked he could not go—that was the most certain thing in all this world! And how he wanted to go! A fellow didn't often get a chance like this—maybe never again.

Just then Peggy came with the lunch basket. "Climb over the fence quickly, so we can get started," she said.

He looked toward his home, then at Peggy—something choked him, and he swallowed hard. Then he climbed over the fence, and without another backward glance, ran swiftly beside her, across her father's yard, and out into the country road.

Joy lent speed to their heels, and they were soon out of sight of their homes. Before long, Norman begged Peggy to stop and rest on a fallen tree by the roadside. He was not a robust boy, and he found that this vigorous exercise tired him. Peggy willingly gave her younger companion a chance to rest, but she scorned the idea of rest for herself. It amazed Norman to see her darting about under the trees for wild flowers, and hopping about on one foot and kicking a pebble with her bare toes, while he was trying to get his lost breath.

Thus they went on their way, running until they were tired, and then stopping to rest, until at last, under the guidance of the experienced little Peggy, they reached the cañon.

And that cañon! Peggy hadn't overdrawn it in the least. Norman could find no words to express his delight. He realized that he had come into his own—this big outdoor world was something he had been hungering for all his life. He felt himself to be a part of it at once.

They had gathered their arms full of the green ferns and pretty flowers, and decorated the rooms in the deserted stone house. They chased through the rooms after the voice that answered them when they called, until they could run no more. They swung on the limb that hung away out over the water, and was just as Peggy said, "That was really the most fun, cause if you weren't careful, you'd fall into the water and be drowned." And as Norman held on firmly, he thought that it surely was much more exciting than sitting on the bench under the acacia tree at home.

The crowning joy to Peggy, after all, was her own discovery. She had never known that there was a little brook running into the big deep stream. When she found it, she held up her skirt, waded in, and took possession. But there was nothing selfish about Peggy; she was never so happy as when sharing her pleasures with her playmates.

"Take off your shoes and stockings, Norman, and come in, too," she called.

He had never gone barefoot in all his life, although he had longed to ever since they had moved next door to the barefoot Peggy, and he felt at once that he ought not. But even as he thought it, he found himself unlacing his shoes. The great outdoors was still calling him, and he had broken down many well-guarded fences today.

When the cold water first touched his legs he shuddered and would have given up all ideas of wading, had not Peggy held him fast until he had grown used to the water. Soon he was as interested as she in their leaf-boat races, and was splashing about in his great excitement. After a while he climbed out on the bank to rest, and then he began to grow very cold and uncomfortable. When Peggy came out of the water to cheer him, she found that even her hardened little legs felt the chill that was creeping into the cañon.

"I guess we better put on your shoes and stockings and start for home," she said.

They had not traveled far on the road when Norman found that his little legs were so tired and stiff that he could hardly make them move. The tears trickled down his dirty face, but he trudged bravely on, holding tight to the hand of the now worried Peggy, who urged him to greater speed, for she feared the darkness would overtake them.

It was in this condition that the distracted searching party found them. Their utter dejection and helpless misery saved them a scolding, as they were bundled into the carriage and driven rapidly homeward. As Norman lay close in Uncle Will's arms, he could think of nothing else but Col. Hasting's eyes, and even when he shut his eyes tight, he could still see them in the dark, but they glared at him like balls of fire, instead of looking hurt and sad as nurse had said.

That night he was a very sick boy, and then for days and days afterward. Sometimes he dreamed that he was burning in a fire, and then again, that he was freezing in an ice-cold river. But no matter where he was, he could always see the eyes of Grandpa Colonel glaring at him like two balls of fire.

One day he stopped all this strange dreaming and awoke. Then he found that his long curls had been cut off, and he was fiercely glad. How he had hated those curls! After many days, he could sit up in bed and amuse himself with his old playthings. Nurse tried to interest him in her former stories of Col. Hastings, but he wouldn't listen—he couldn't bear to hear anything about his old pero. He could never be a soldier now, he said sadly to himself, and so what was the use. He dreaded the day when he would be well enough to be taken downstairs to the sunny library. He wondered if he could go all the rest of his life without ever looking toward that picture and seeing those accusing eyes. He meant to try it, but somehow, he felt that those eyes would compel him to look up in spite of his resisting.

One day grandma brought him a box of old treasures that he had never seen, and he was delighted. Among the things was a piece of paper with some writing on it, and just as he started to read it, he heard his mother and the doctor in the next room. The doctor was talking.

"Nonsense, just see that little Whirlwind next door. She didn't even have a cold from it. I tell you, madam, that boy's been coddled too much. You must turn him barefoot outdoors or he'll be a delicate little fellow all his life."

Norman drew his breath in sharply—it would all come true he knew, because mamma always minded when the doctor talked like that. Then he turned to the writing in his hand and read:

Norman Hastings—His Diary.
Sept. 29, 1844.

"Ran away from school today and went to the woods. Had a fine time with the wild flowers and the birds and the brook. Got licked tonight by father and expect one from teacher tomorrow. Don't care—it was worth it."

And this was Grandpa—his Col. Hastings, the great soldier. Nurse could talk all she wanted to—he was not afraid to look at those eyes in the library now!

PART III—CHAPTER VII.

THE SURVIVORS.

REST and good food quickly brought Percy Darrow back to his normal poise. One inspection satisfied Dr. Trendon that all was well with him. He asked to see the captain, and that gentleman came to Ives's room, which had been assigned to the rescued man.

"I hope you've been able to make yourself comfortable," said the commander courteously.

"It would be strange indeed if I could not," returned Darrow, smiling. "You forget that you have set a savage down in the midst of luxury."

"Make yourself free of Ives's things," invited Capt. Parkinson. "Poor fellow, he will not use them again, I fear."

"One of your men lost?" asked Darrow. "Ah, the young officer whose body I found on the beach, perhaps?"

"No; but we have to thank you for that burial," said the captain.

Darrow made a swift gesture. "Oh, if thanks are going," he cried, and paused in hopelessness of adequate expression.

"This has been a bitter cruise for us," continued the captain. He sighed and was silent for a moment. "There is much to tell and to be told," he resumed.

"Much," agreed the other, gravely.

"You will want to see Slade first, I presume," said the captain.

"One of your officers whom I have not yet had the pleasure of meeting."

The captain stared. "Slade," he said. "Ralph Slade."

"Apparently there's a missing link. Or—I fear I was not wholly myself yesterday for a time. Possibly something occurred that I did not quite take in."

"Perhaps we'd better wait," said Capt. Parkinson, with obvious misgivings. "You're not quite rested. you will feel more like——"

"If you don't mind," said Darrow composedly, "I'd like to get at this thing now. I'm in excellent understanding, I assure you"

"Very well; I am speaking of the man who acted as mate in the Laughing Lass. The journalist who—good heavens! What arrant stupidity! I have to beg your pardon, Mr. Darrow. It has just occurred to me. He called himself Eagen with you."

"Eagen! What is this? Is Eagen alive?"

"And on this ship. We picked him up in an open boat."

"And you say he calls himself Slade?"

"He is Ralph Slade, adventurer and journalist. Mr. Barnett knows him and vouches for him."

"And he was on our island under an assumed name," said Darrow, in tones that had the smoothness and the rasp of silk. "Rather annoying. Not good form, quite, even for a pirate."

"Yet, I believe he saved your life," suggested the captain.

Darrow looked up sharply. "Why, yes," he admitted. "So he did. I had hoped——" He checked himself." I had thought that all of the crew went the same way. You didn't find any of the others?"

"None."

Darrow got to his feet. "I think I'd like to see Eagen—Slade—whatever he calls himself."

"I don't know," began the captain. "It might not be——" He hesitated and stopped.

Darrow drew back a little, misinterpreting the other's attitude. "Do I understand that I am under restraint?" he asked stiffly.

"Certainly not. Why should you be?"

"Well," returned the other contemplatively, "it really might be regarded as a subject for investigation. Of course, I know only a small part of it. But there have certainly been suspicious circumstances. Piracy there has been; no doubt of that. Murder, too, if my intuitions are not at fault. Or at least, a disappearance to be accounted for. Robbery can't be denied. And there's a dead body or two to be properly accredited." He looked the captain in the eye.

"Well?"

"You'll find my story highly unsatisfactory in detail, I fancy. I merely want to know whether I'm to present it as a defense or only an explanation."

"We shall be glad to hear your story when you are ready to tell it—after you have seen Mr. Slade."

"Thank you," said Darrow simply. "You have heard his?"

"Yes. It needs filling in."

"When may I see him?"

"That's for Dr. Trendon to say. He came to us almost dead. I'll find out."

The surgeon reported Slade much better, but all a-quiver with excitement.

"Hate to put the strain on him," said he. "But he'll be in a fever till he gets this thing off his mind. Send Mr. Darrow to him."

After a moment's consideration Darrow said: "I should like to have you present, Capt. Parkinson, while I ask Eagen one or two questions."

"Understand one thing, Mr. Darrow," said Trendon briefly. "This is not to be an inquisition."

"Ah," said Darrow, unmoved. "I'm to be neither defendant nor prosecutor."

"You are to respect the condition of Dr. Trendon's patient, sir," said Capt. Parkinson, with emphasis. "Outside of that your attitude toward a man who has twice thought of your life before his own is for you to determine."

No little cynicism lurked in Darrow's tones as he said: "You have confidence in Mr. Slade, alias Eagen."

"Yes," replied Capt. Parkinson, in a tone that closed that topic.

"Still, I should be glad to have you gentlemen present, if only for a moment," insisted Darrow, presently.

"Perhaps it would be as well—on account of the patient," said the surgeon significantly.

"Very well," assented the captain.

The three went to Slade's cabin. He was lying propped up in his bunk. Trendon entered first, followed by the captain, then Darrow.

"Here's your prize, Slade," said the surgeon.

Darrow halted, just inside the door. With an eager light in his face Slade leaned forward and stretched out his hand.

"I couldn't believe it until I saw you, old man," he cried.

Darrow's eyebrows went up. Before Slade had time to note that there was no response to his outstretched hand the surgeon had jumped in and pushed him roughly back upon his pillow.

"What did you promise?" he growled. "You were to lie still, weren't you? And you'll do it, or out we go?"

"How are you, Eagen?" drawled Darrow.

"Not Eagen. I'm done with that. They've told you, haven't they?"

Darrow nodded. "Are you the only survivor?" he inquired.

"Except yourself."

"The Nigger? Pulz? Thrackles? The captain? All drowned?"

"Not the captain. They murdered him."

"Ah," said Darrow softly. "And you—I beg your pardon—your—er—friends disposed of the doctor in the same way?"

"Handy Solomon," replied Slade with shaking lips. "Hell's got that fiend, if there's a hell for human fiends. They threw the doctor's body in the surf."

"You didn't notice whether there were any papers?"

"If there were they must have been destroyed with the body when the lava poured down the valley into the sea."

"The lava, of course," assented Darrow, with elaborate nonchalance. "Well, he was a kind old boy. A cheerful, simple, wise old chap."

"I would have given my right hand to save him," cried Slade. "It was so sudden—so damnable——"

"Better to have saved him than me," said Darrow. He spoke with the first touch of feeling that he had exhibited. "I have to thank you for my life, Eagen—I beg your pardon, Slade. It's hard to remember."

Dr. Trendon arose, and Capt. Parkinson with him.

"Give you two hours, Mr. Darrow," said the surgeon. "No more. If he seems exhausted, give him one of these powders. I'll look in in an hour."

At the end of an hour he returned. Slade was lying back on his pillow. Darrow was talking, eagerly, confidentially. In another hour he came out.

"The whole thing is clear," he said to Capt. Parkinson. "I am ready to report to you."

"This evening," said the captain. "The mess will want to hear."

"Yes, they will want to hear," assented Darrow. "You've had Slade's story. I'll take it up where he left off, and he'll check me. Mine's as incredible as—Slade's was. And it's as true."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE MAKER OF MARVELS.

As they had gathered to hear Ralph Slade's tale, so now the depleted mess of the Wolverine grouped themselves for Percy Darrow's sequel. Slade himself sat directly across from the doctor's assistant. Before him lay a paper covered with jotted notes. Trendon slouched low in the chair on Slade's right, Capt. Parkinson had the other side. Convenient to Darrow's hand lay the material for cigarettes. As he talked he rolled cylinder after cylinder, and between sentences consumed them in long, satisfying puffs.

"First you will want to learn of the fate of your friends and shipmates," he began. "They are dead. One of them, Mr. Edwards, fell to my hands to bury, as you know. He lies beside Handy Solomon. The others we shall probably not see; any one of a score of ocean currents may have swept them far away. The last great glow that you saw was the signal of their destruction. So the work of a great scientist, a potent benefactor of the race, a gentle and kindly old heart, has brought about the death of your friends and of my enemies. The innocent and the guilty . . . . the murderer with his plunder, the officer following his duty . . . one and the same end . . . a paltry thing our vaunted science is in the face of such tangled fates." He spoke low and bitterly. Then he squared his shoulders and his manner became businesslike.

"Interrupt me when any point needs clearing up," he said. "It's a blind trail at best. You've the right to see it as plain as I can make it—with Slade's help. Cut right in with your questions. There'll be plenty to answer, and some never will be answered . . .

"Now, let me get this thing laid out clearly in my own mind. You first saw the glow—let me see——"

"Night of June 2," said Barnett.

"June 2," agreed Darrow. "That was the end of Solomon, Thrackles & Co. A very surprising end to them, if they had time to think," he added grimly.

"Surprising enough, from the survivor's viewpoint," said Slade.

"Doubtless. They've had that story from you; I needn't go over it. This ship picked up the Laughing Lass, deserted, and put your first crew aboard. That night, was it not, you saw the second pillar of fire?"

Barnett nodded.

"So your men met their death. Then came the second finding of the empty schooner. . . . Capt. Parkinson, they must have been brave men who faced the unknown terrors of that prodigy."

"They volunteered, sir," said the captain, with simple pride.

Darrow bowed with a suggestion of reverence in the slow movement of his head. "And that nigh two nights later?—you saw the last appear portent. Well, I shall come to that. . . . told you how they lived on the beach. With valley it was different. Almost from the fir alone. The doctor ceased to be a compa ceased to be human, almost. His cigarette glowed fiercely in the dimness took up his tale again.

"You all know who Dr. Schermerhorn was. you know—I don't know myself, though I've factotum for ten years—along how many varied activity that mind played. "They were not, indeed," corroborated Barnett.

He began his list, as I remember, with three dozen [illegible], a gallon of pennyroyal for insect bites, a [illegible] assorted fish hooks, thirty pounds of tea [illegible] of carpet tacks. The Weather Prophet.

TRAGIC RESULT OF A MISPLACED CONFIDENCE.

By a Special Contributor.

WRINKLED and gray, and bent beneath the weight of nearly a century of time, the old warrior had long been the one distinguishing landmark of the little frontier hamlet which we will call, just for convenience, Buffalo Bones. This is not the correct name, but some of the principal characters in the tragic drama here presented are still alive, and I do not wish to appear overpersonal in the matter of names and places.

He was the last of his tribe and he lived alone in his solitary wigwam upon the brow of a steep bluff overlooking the straggling collection of cabins occupied by the miners and cattlemen, and the broad valley to the southward. The site of his chosen dwelling was bare and rocky, walled in on two sides with large, irregular boulders and flanked by a scattered growth of scrubby pine and mountain ash.

The old warrior's original name was long and difficult of mastery by an alien tongue, and sounded something like Puk-a-massin-inkie-wee-wan-woo. But, owing to the fact that he was an infallible forecaster of weather conditions to come, his baptismal cognomen had been changed to the more immediately suggestive and easily-spoken title of Old Sun Dog.

As regular as the dawn of day the inhabitants of Buffalo Bones, on arising from their blankets, looked up at the solitary wigwam on the bluff to see what brand of weather was in store for them. If the day was to be fair, the old fellow would be visible, parading majestically forth and back in front of his humble dwelling, naked to the waist and with a gaudy-colored buzzard feather stuck crosswise through his straggling locks, like an ornamental hairpin.

If stormy weather was at hand, he would be invisible within the sacred confines of his tepee, sitting gloomy-eyed and stoical beside his tiny fire of pine cones and dry twigs; and through long experience his less-gifted paleface neighbors had grown to place absolute confidence in his remarkable spirit of atmospheric prophecy.

From whence he acquired his secret and valuable knowledge they had never been able to learn, but not in a single instance had they known his prognostications to be at fault.

Humanity, even of the rougher sort, is not without gratitude, and the old warrior was a privileged character about the camp, going and coming when he pleased, and receiving without money and without price such small items as came within the list of his meager necessaries of life.

As a matter of fact, there was nothing supernatural or startling about Old Sun Dog's special gift of weather prophecy. He was old and feeble, and his blood was sensitive with the poison of rheumatism, and he had simply learned to read the approaching atmospheric changes by his own feelings, as one would read the changing aspects of a barometer.

But cause is always more or less immaterial as long as one can show proper results and "deliver the goods," and in this case Old Sun Dog was eminently entitled to all the reverence shown him by the grateful hamlet of Buffalo Bones.

When several stockmen were routed from their bunks early one morning in November with the information that the herd of mules which they had penned up in the rickety corral the evening before had broken out during the night and stampeded for parts unknown, they swore a few soft oaths as befitted the occasion, hastily prepared to set forth in quest of the runaways, and pursuant to long-established custom, turned their eyes in the direction of the bluff to see what they were to receive in the shape of weather for the expedition.

Had the matter been within the scope of their own judgment they would have opined that the sky had a slightly treacherous and uncertain aspect, but when a hasty glance revealed the aged prophet looming proudly upon the sacred prognosticating ground, decked out in his fetching but meager fair-weather regalia, all private impressions of their own counted for nothing.

In fact, the old fellow seemed to be a little more than usually high-spirited and strutty that morning, a circumstance which they interpreted as portending an extraordinarily fine day ahead. So they stripped down for hard riding, leaving behind all unnecessary clothing and equipment.

"Where in the devil is that demijug?" forcibly inquired Steve Bilkins (fictitious name) who had conceived the idea that he needed a small bracer before hitting the saddle. "I'll swear I hid it there in the feed stall last night, and now there's no trace of it within a mile. Gone, slick and clean!"

"Oh, I suppose Slinky's nosed it out and been using it for a pillow," said Bill Hendricks. "Got to hide away a thing of that kind durned crafty if you keep him from treeing it."

"No time to fool away now, but when we get back with those mules I'll hunt up the galoot that swiped that jug—and rawhide him good and plenty!" stormed the exasperated Bilkins. "You hear me? Rawhide him good and plenty! I'll teach somebody that he can't walk off with my jug, as if I was no more account than a horned toad with his eyes full of sand. Bet your life!"

He had little doubt that the culprit was Slinky, the gangling, loose-jointed youth who watched the stables and corral at night—usually by curling up in a comfortable corner of the horse loft and going to sleep—for Slinky's natural talent in ferreting out hidden liquid receptacles and disposing of their contents was little short of genius.

So it was not in the best frame of mind that the four stockmen mounted their cow ponies and started off down the valley on the trail of the stampeded mules. The chase was a long and exasperating one, for the loose animals seemed grimly determined to give their pursuers a "run for their money," and it was well along in the afternoon when they finally got them rounded up and on the back trail for home.

Sad to relate, the wind which had all day been growing more raw and gusty now settled down to a steady blow accompanied by a regular "norther" of snow and sleet, chilling the scantily-clothed horsemen to the marrow.

It is perhaps needless to say that the lurid volume of gnarled and knotted profanity heaped upon the grizzled head of Old Sun Dog, the faithless, by the luckless cavalcade as it fought its way homeward in the teeth of the freezing blast was something of appalling and fearful dimensions.

When they reached camp, however, the wind had spent its force, and the storm had practically abated.

Stiff and blue with cold, the stockmen slumped out of their saddles, and after procuring a quantity of sorely-needed stimulant with which to brighten up their flickering lamp of life, they struck out in a body for the hut of the old weather prophet, seething with anger and their faces dark and threatening as a thunder cloud. Nothing short of the most summary vengeance could wipe out the score.

Up the steep path to the old fellow's wigwam they scrambled in ominous silence, each muttering silent threats of the most gruesome character.

Arriving at the crest of the bluff, they beheld a spectacle at once highly self-explanatory and weirdly startling.

In the center of the open space before the old man's wigwam sat the "demijug," which Steve had missed that morning, and around it the aged warrior was prancing and cavorting in the mazes of some old forgotten scalp dance which was both wild and wonderful.

An ancient war bonnet of once gorgeous feathers trailed from his scanty locks, almost to his heels, a necklace of bear claws rattled upon his shrunken breast, his eyes bulged wildly from his head, and in his right hand he flourished a murderous-looking tomahawk with blade large enough to cleave the skull of an Arabian giant.

His failure in the morning's weather prognostication needed no special explanation. Either the whisky had acted as an antidote to the usual influence of atmospheric pressure, rendering him unconscious of the change, or in the lurid haze of his innocent "jag" he had forgotten his prescribed duty to his fellow-men and had been parading the bluff in the early hours of the morning merely from unconscious force of habit.

Quite evidently the old warrior was living over again some stirring event of his earlier life, and the appearance of the wrathful stockmen served to produce a fitting climax to the tragic illusion.

They were a party of his old-time foes, the Chickasaws, and in the dancing focus of his frenzied vision each man was multiplied by four or five. Uttering the fierce war whoop of his tribe, which had not sounded over the valley for many silent years, he straightened his bent form erect, swung his tomahawk above his head and leaped upon his visitors like a cornered tiger.

In the words of the classic ballad of recent date:

"They didn't stop to reason why,
They didn't stop to say good-by."

And the next moment the startled guests were flying like the wind down the rough path whence they had come, pursued by a fantastic streak of waving feathers, gleaming tomahawk and the terror-inspiring war cries of a forgotten people.

And this is how Slink escaped the chastisement which he would otherwise have received.

RAILWAYS BUILT FOR WAR.

There is something very sinister in the news, telegraphed from India the other day, that the Russians have at length completed the great steel and concrete bridge across the Oxus at Karki, on which they have been busy ever since the autumn of 1905.

For this bridge is the last and principal link in the new strategical railway, which is being built between the great city of Samarkand, in Russian Turkestan, and the little village of Bosaga, on the Afghan frontier, and as soon as the rails are laid, which will be in a few months, the Czar will be able, should he so wish, to easily mass a million of men upon the borders of this debatable territory.

Nor is this all. Another of these strategic railways has also been recently completed from the Caspian to Penjdeh, by way of Merv. This means that Herat, the traditional "Key of India," is now within easy striking distance of St. Petersburg.

Silently have these great trunk lines been constructed, and secretly. They have never been opened for traffic, except locally on certain sections, else would it be possible to book from Charing Cross to Penjdeh, and to travel thither in the course of a few days.

They are, in fact, railways built for war, and for war only. The sterile regions through which they run can, for the most part, never support any permanent population, and they lead nowhere—at present. They stop short on the frontier of Afghanistan, amid a jumble of mountains and morasses and uninhabited salt deserts.

Who can doubt, however, that the intention is to some day complete them? To carry them south through the Afghan passes to the fertile plains of India? And this, of course, can only be accomplished by force of arms.—[Pearson's Weekly.

An Alexandrite.

THE STORY OF A GEM AND THE SEARCH FOR ITS MATE.

By a Special Contributor.

IN A COSY den opening from his consultation room, Dr. Francois Laveltrie sat before an open fireplace, in which billets of rock maple purred and gave forth long sights of escaping steam from their incandescent depths. His slippered feet rested on a velvet ottoman so as to receive the genial warmth that was chasing from his body the benumbing chill accumulated in a long ride in the teeth of a north wind. He was a city practitioner on Beaver Hall Hill, Montreal, but he had patients in the country, where his family resided, and calls came to him from as far north as Bord-a-Plouffe, and as far west as Isle Perrot. The fierce Canadian winter locked the rivers in a close embrace, and bridged them for the accommodation of the inhabitants with their traineaux. Dr. Francois was a Laval University man, but was on good terms with the medical faculty of McGill University, knowing most of them personally. Among his best friends was Dr. MacNab, demonstrator of anatomy at McGill, who was the confidant of his innermost aspirations. McNab was of the sterling kind that inspire confidence, to whom the shy, smitten heart, that wraps itself in the enveloping folds of secretiveness in the presence of the world, opens and discloses its treasured emotions. The summer before, Laveltrie had invited him to accompany him to a fashionable jeweler's in Notre Dame street on a secret mission, the nature of which he would not disclose, even to him, but would permit him to divine as the event—it was an event, of course—disengaged itself from the future. He asked to be shown some rings, the finest product of the laboratory of the bijoutier. A large tray covered with green velvet was produced from the depths of an iron cabinet, with a grated gate, that swung shut with a click. Nothing of the mediocre in trinkets could require such suspicious precaution against loss, MacNab thought, and when the velvet quiltlet that hid them was removed, the scintillating rows of gems declared their character. Dr. Francois's practice was good and he was steadily enlarging his bank account. So much Dr. MacNab knew, but there must be a larger reservoir to draw from than he supposed, or there must be an emotion more potent than his friend had yet given expression to before him to tempt indulgence in one of these glittering fortunes.

"What would you choose, my friend, in the way of precious stones to express constancy till death and even beyond—constancy and fidelity that nothing can assail, nothing weaken or change?"

"You mean that there must be something beyond their commercial value?" the matter-of-fact MacNab asked, with a puzzled air.

"Oh, of course! Their money value is an accident determined by common facts, such as the difficulty of obtaining them, and the mechanical difficulties of the laboratory. But have they not a language that speaks of qualities that take them up into the realm of the life and thought of men and women?"

"Perhaps the old alchemists had some notion of the kind, but we deride them now and call their ideas the mere vagaries of minds groping in scientific darkness."

"That is possibly all true, and from the point of view of the books I am forced so to believe. But the persistence of the sentiment regarding occult qualities in precious stones must also be taken into consideration."

"Well, my friend, that will only carry us back into the shadowy fifteenth century science."

"I am willing to venture anywhere to find what I want—to take anything that may convey an expression of something that is more than mere emotion, that is a part of my life."

"Perhaps our friend, the bijoutier,' may help us," MacNab suggested, in desperation, and at the end of his own limited resources in the field of sentimentality. "M. Sombriant, what do you know of the language of precious stones?"

The old jeweler, whose broad, high forehead was like an overhanging cliff, under which soft brown eyes were deeply set, and features of a delicate cast lay in thoughtful repose, awoke as from a day dream.

"The language of precious stones?" He seemed to ask himself the question, and in absorbed introspection to await an answer.

"There is mystery about the language of precious stones," he said, after a pause. "Its origin is as early as their use, and is as cloudy as the mystical properties with which the people of remote times endowed them. It is allied to the ancient religions. Why, think you, was Moses instructed to make such liberal use of precious stones in the robes for Aaron, the first high priest? The breastplate, with its twelve gems, arranged by specific divine order in four rows—the breastplate of judgment. Was all, or any of this, merely for ornament? What part did they play in the mysteries of the Holy Place? What language did they speak to Aaron in the judgments of his office? How did they speak? We know not; but be assured they gave forth signs that were understood."

Dr. Francois listened with eager attention to the mild enthusiast, and his practical friend tried not to seem interested.

"Now you are approaching what I seek," Laveltrie said. "How much of this that is definite has come down to us from antiquity?"

"But very little, I am afraid, monsieur, and that little is sadly befogged by the charlatanism of the alchemists."

Dr. MacNab began to entertain a better opinion of the modest jeweler. As for himself, precious stones were just pure carbon, glucinum luminate, or such other mineral substances as chemical analysis might show, with iron or copper compounds for color; very pretty and very appropriate as souvenirs and gifts to the amiable sex. While he abundantly sympathized with his friend, he was rather hard-headed about beliefs and particularly contemptuous toward superstitions.

"Do you know anything, M. Sombriant, among your gems that stands for fidelity, constancy?" Dr. Laveltrie was blushing a fine turkey red as he hesitatingly asked the question.

"When I spoke of the language of precious stones I had in mind something of the past with which the modern so-called language of gems holds but a very loose, if any, connection. This last is arbitrary or whimsical, or, at best, only traditional. Here, for example, is a recently discovered stone of the order of chrysoberyls. It comes into the family of gems fully equipped with an emblematic character. It is a true gem with a singular quality of double color. You observe it is a tourmaline green by the light of day. By artificial light it changes to ruby red."

The two doctors were at once interested.

"If you will step into this cabinet with me I will demonstrate the duplex color."

Taking the ring from the tray, which he placed in the care of an attendant, he took the visitors into the iron cabinet, and, lighting a gas jet, closed the door, effectually making artificial night. In the gas light the jewel seemed no longer the one they had been examining. A rich ruby had taken its place. Dr. Francois was fascinated. Here was an object with a mysterious character of its own, that spoke as from the secret alembic of the Maker, allying it with the hidden arcana of nature. Even Dr. MacNab, the hard-headed, was deeply interested. It was, to him, something to be scientifically investigated. Dr. Francois was the first to speak.

"And what is this an emblem of, M. Sombriant?"

"Undying devotion." There was almost solemnity in the tone in which he spoke. In silence the three came out into the daylight, and M. Sombriant held the stone up in its original somber hue. They were all three under the spell of the little drama of the ring.

"And the diamonds about the stone, monsieur, what do they represent?" Dr. Francois called attention to the circle of minute diamonds about the central stone.

"Purity."

"This is what I have been looking for, MacNab," Dr. Francois said, with prompt decision.

"Mon ami, will you permit me to inquire a little farther? My curiosity has been aroused, but my questions will not at all affect your estimate of the gem, for I consider it a very beautiful object?" Dr. Francois assented.

"What do you know of the history of this particular stone, M. Sombriant?"

"And I, too, would like to know, monsieur," Dr. Francois added.

"Nearly all stones of the value of this one have histories more or less established. This one is brief. It was found in the Catherine Mountains in Russia, where there are emerald mines, and brought to Paris. There the shape of the stone made it advisable to cut it in two, so that somewhere in the world there is a companion stone, not quite so large, which, we have been informed, was cut and set in the same style as this one. I believe I could identify the mate if it should come under my observation. With a glass a vein less than a fine hair in thickness can be traced through the lower part of this stone, in the direction of the dividing cut. It must have extended into the other half. It is not visible to the unaided eye. We purchased the ring from the Paris house, and this completes the history of the stone since leaving the mine."

With a strong magnifier they could see the shadowy line of a whitish color. As the friends, after the purchase, walked toward Dr. Laveltrie's rooms, the latter, in overflowing happiness, confided to his friend that the gem was meant for his fiancé—an engagement ring. Mlle. Célestine de Bellamie of Isle Jesus was the lady, MacNab would remember; he had met her not long ago at the dinner party of her aunt, Madame de Bellamie, of Rue St. Denis? Yes; a charming young lady, beautiful in mind as in person. The marriage was to take place in a year or more; the time was not definitely set, as Dr. Laveltrie planned to go to Paris with his bride for a residence of some months, while he attended lectures at the Sorbonne.

Dr. MacNab was immediately absorbed in the work of his important, though grewsome department, and the incident of the rnig passed from his thoughts, as he now rarely met his friend. There is something about this part of the study of the healing art that, contemplated from the outside, seems absolutely ghoulish, and yet, viewed from within, and from the point of view of the practical results, is seen to be in the highest sense beneficent. The new student approaches the arena of practical anatomy with his Wilson, his new box of scalpels and his new, clean smock-frock rolled under his arm, with a swelling sense of his own importance in the world of science. He opens the door, and on the threshold his senses are smitten by the deadly odor of the charnel-house and the horrible spectacle of torn and mangled bodies, fleshless bones and hideous skulls. He would escape if he dared, but it is too late. Pride and manliness awake. The sickening sensation and the horror pass by degrees, and he becomes interested in the wonderful mechanism so ingeniously and wisely adapted, literally, to a world of uses. The tainted air is dominated by the intellectual atmosphere and—tobacco smoke! It is the beginning of the training to encounter without flinching every form of the disagreeable, and even personal danger.

In the days of Laveltrie and MacNab the supply of "material" was a matter in which the students took more than the mere money interest, for even money could not always command what was required, and long waits were inevitable. To bridge these over, an impatient quintette of students, eager to begin work, might, under the leadership of an upper class man interested in the nerves, make a nocturnal incursion into some rural God's acre. But a curtain was wisely drawn over incidents of this nature, and, unless there was interruption and one of the party should carry away some grains of small shot, they were not spoken of again demonstrator need not know of the matter, not inclined to follow his suspicions into investigation.

Work in the evening was not prohibited quently the demonstrator came in to give fort in difficult situations. On one of these MacNab's quick eye fell upon a table on arrival by the "subterranean." One hand relief under the white sheet covering—a one of the flexed fingers had an unusual It might be a jewel, and an object of that have consequences. He partially turned and the gas light fell on a ruby ring. He ment thinking of the annoyance that might of the discovery, his eyes resting in an on the jewel. As they took in further details sense of horror came upon him. He hastily sheet and uncovered the face. He was a troubled with nerves, but the sight was him. The room began to grow dark, and he what threatened; but in a deeper way he must not faint! He grasped the edge of the with both hands with a grip that brought the blood to the heart, and the blindness gained strength to replace the sheet over with the gaining strength came the full rible situation! He had looked on the face who sat opposite him at Mme. de Bellamie's beautiful fiancé of his friend! What awful fate had wrought this? "Ah, Gray, I suppose you are ready to mogastric?"

"Yes, sir. All the fellows are eager to be

"I pledge you my honor, doctor, that nothing removed."

"Thank you, Gray. I would trust you without but I do not know the new men."

The incident closed without a suspicion of surviving. Dr. MacNab learned later that Mlle. lamie had been mortally sick only a short time, Dr. Francois had been in constant attendance, his city cases in the care of other physicians, end he was too broken to do anything, and by the of his family left for Paris to divert his mind poignant grief. Too Much Compatibility.

JUDGE BOSTWICK, of Columbus, O., recently upheld a woman in her refusal to tell her age in court.

"Were the witness's age pertinent, I should require her to give it," he said; "but in this case, as in many cases, it is not pertinent, and therefore in refusing to state her age the lady is quite within her rights."

Speaking of Judge Bostwick the other day, a Columbus man said:

"He is a remarkable person. He should have been a novelist. As this decision about age shows, he has a peculiar sympathy with the feminine character. He understands it.

"One day I heard him talking about divorce. He was discussing the 'incompatibility of temperament' plea on which so many divorces are granted. He said compatibility was often a bad thing, too. He said there was once a girl, who, after listening to a young man's proposal, answered:

"'No, James, I cannot marry you.'

"James looked frightened, hurt, displeased.

"'Why not?' he asked.

"'There is too much compatibility of temperament about us, James,' said the girl, her lip curling with faint scorn.

"'Too much compatibility? But isn't that a good thing?' asked the puzzled young man.

"'Not always,' she answered. 'For instance, judging from the size of your income, if we married I should undoubtedly insist from motives of economy on dispensing with a servant and doing my own housework, and in your compatibility you would undoubtedly let me do it, James.'"

MIKE MALONEY'S wife was an invalid, and the doctor had been doing all sorts of things for her; changing the medicine so often that poor Mike's income would scarcely reach and make both ends meet; and at last the doctor said that his wife must go to a warmer climate.

Mike listened to that advice for several months, and finally when October came, the doctor told Mike, one Saturday evening after all of his week's wages had been spent, that his wife positively must be sent "to a warmer climate without delay."

Mike left the room for a few minutes, and when he returned, he was wiping his eyes with his left hand, while with his right hand he brought an axe which he gave to the physician, saying:

"I hate to do it, Doc. You please do it for me." D.

Not in a Great Hurry.

ALL of the watchmen at the Treasury in Washington are veterans of the Civil War, and all of them are well advanced in years. Capt. Harry Cobaugh recently pointed out an old man who passed his room and said to Smith Fry: "There is another veteran, and he is to go on my force one of these days."

"Why, that old codger must be past 60 years old, and he doesn't seem strong," was the reply.

"No matter about that," replied Capt. Cobaugh. "If he ever applies, he will be appointed. He goes through here every pension day, to one particular notary public. I have noticed him for a couple of years, and on last pension day he told me that he had been a watchman here shortly after the Civil War, and I asked him if he expected to come back on the force again.

"'I am thinking of it,' he answered, and added: 'If I am in Washington three years from now, I will put in my application for reinstatement as watchman.'

"He went away, and left me wondering why he wanted to wait three years, when every year is bringing him so much nearer to the grave. Two months went by, and I saw him here visiting his son, and I asked him why he wanted to wait three years before applying for reinstatement here, and he answered:

"'If I live to be a hundred years old, I'll come back here. I am 97 now." And the old fellow went away chuckling and chortling at his little joke." F.

Sir William replied that he had every confidence in her judgment, and once more expressed his good wishes for her future.

The Only Grace She Knew.

WELL has the Duchess of Sutherland been called "The Children's Duchess," for it is the chief object of her life to improve the lot of our poorer little ones—particularly those who are ailing.

The other day she paid a visit to the Stoke Workhouse Homes to cheer the little invalids. She took a particular fancy to one little sufferer, and asked her various questions. The child, accustomed to seeing no other ladies than nurses, kept addressing her as "nurse."

"You mustn't say 'nurse,' dear," said one of the sisters. "You should say, 'Your Grace.'"

The little invalid immediately folded her hands and repeated the short prayer with which she always prefaced her meals.

The Duchess could not help laughing, but bent over and kissed the earnest little lips.—[London Answers.

Presence of Mind—and Body.

AN official who has been long in the service of the government at Washington tells a good story of the time when Hamilton Fish was Secretary of State.

Mr. and Mrs. Fish had, according to this official, a grand air, an old-fashioned courtesy, that introduced a new note into the Washington society of that time. It has been said that Mrs. Fish sometimes carried her high idea of courtesy too far—that it was Quixotic.

One of her rules, for instance, was to return every call she received. Her husband was continually holding public receptions, and to these, out of courtesy, many women would come who had no desire that Mrs. Fish should call upon them—who were in no position to receive her properly if she did call.

One such woman attended a Fish reception, left her card, and a little later was duly honored by a call from Mrs. Fish.

It was a beautiful, mild afternoon. The Fish equipage, all a-glitter in the wintry sunshine, dashed down the narrow street and halted before the woman's shabby little house with a musical jingle of silver chains. The footman leaped from the box and opened the carriage door and Mrs. Fish descended.

The poor woman of the house was in a dreadful predicament. She was, alas! kneeling on the sidewalk beside a bucket of hot water. Her sleeves were rolled back. She had a scrubbing brush in one hand and a cake of soap in the other. She was scrubbing the front steps.

Bending graciously over her, Mrs. Fish asked politely:

"Is Mrs. Henry Robinson at home?"

And Mrs. Henry Robinson replied: "No, mum, she ain't," and went on scrubbing.—[Lippincott's.

Did He See the Point?

THERE is a bright young woman of the official set in Washington who, at a public function this winter, found herself much bored by the attentions of a fresh young man, the son of a Senator from a Southwestern State?

Soon after his introduction to the young woman, the fresh young man proceeded to regale her with a story of some adventure in which he had figured as hero. His listener, a remarkably well-bred girl, was as much surprised as he could have wished, though not in the same way.

"Did you really do that?" she asked, not knowing what else to say.

"I done it!" was the proud response of the fresh young man; and he began forthwith another lengthy narrative, more startling even than the first. The young woman again politely expressed her surprise.

"Yes," said the hero; "that's what I done!"

A third story followed, with another "I done it;" whereupon the girl remarked:

"Do you know, Mr. Blank, you remind me so strongly of Banquo's ghost in the play?"

"Why?"

"Don't you remember that Macbeth said to the ghost: 'Thou canst not say I did it!'"—[Lippincott's.

Jake and the Apple.

IT was during an arithmetic class in a country school that Jake Boggs was called upon to solve a problem.

"Now Jake," began the teacher, "if you had two apples and your little brother took one how many would you have left?"

"I'd just like to see him try taking one," said Jake, shaking his fist.

"Well," said the teacher, "we'll put it this way. Suppose you gave him one."

"Yes; but I wouldn't do it," said Jake.

"Just supposing you did, what would remain?" said the weary teacher.

"A big fool, that's what," replied Jake.—[Judge's Library.

Dr. McCosh's Impression.

"AH, I have an impression!" exclaimed Dr. McCosh, the president of Princeton College, to the mental-philosophy class. "Now, young gentlemen," continued the doctor, as he touched his head with his forefinger, "can you tell me what an impression is?"

No answer.

"What; no one knows? No one can tell me what an impression is?" exclimed the doctor, looking up and down the class.

"I know," said Mr. Arthur. "An impression is a dent in a soft place."

"Young gentleman," said the doctor, removing his hand from his forehead and growing red in the face, "you are excused for the day."—[Judge's Library.

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

MISTAKES IN ROSE CULTURE.

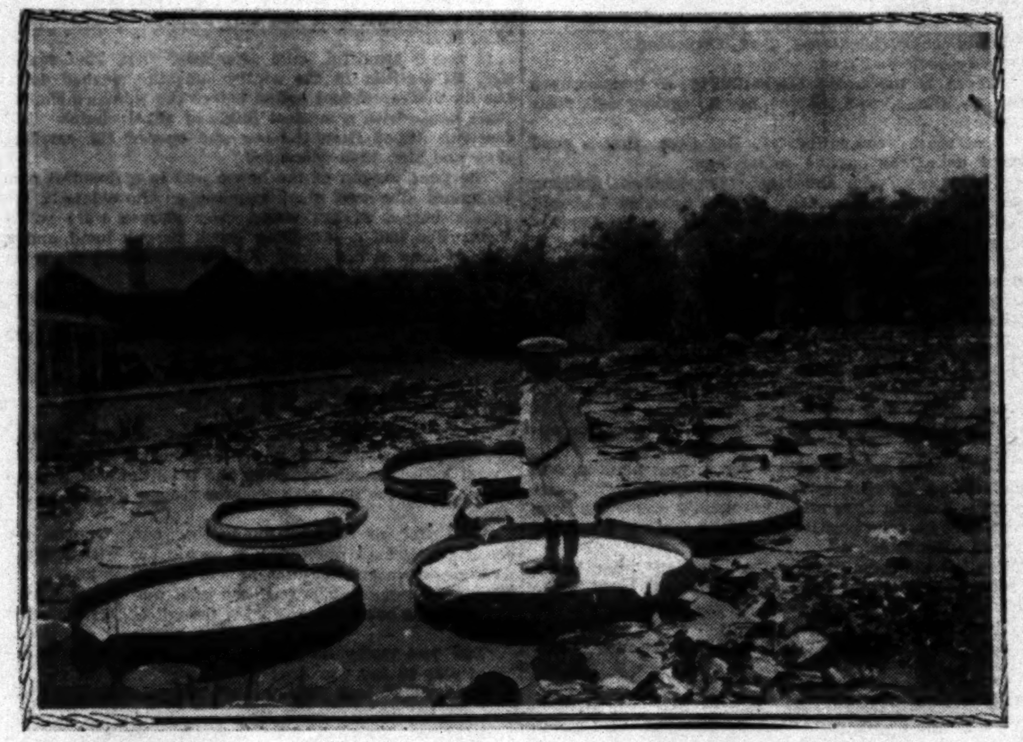
BETTER HAVE A FEW GOOD KINDS THAN MANY INFERIOR ONES.

By Ernest Braunton.

A GREAT many rose fanciers try growing too long a list for best results, partially from ignorance of what is best and somewhat because of a false pride and snobbishness through a desire to have something the neighbors have not. It is far better to have ten good sorts than a hundred, including these ten, where the ninety are ordinary or poor. The primary object with growing roses is to obtain blossoms, not names of flowerless and unbeautiful bushes.

Another mistake lies in sending away for roses to plant houses east of the Rockies. There are no roses grown in the world so well adapted to Southern California as those produced at home by low budding on manetti stock. One great mistake made by some rose growers in all sections is too high budding—a mistake nearly as common as own root roses or those grown from cuttings. Some sorts will do as well propagated in the latter way as by any method, but the general run of standard sorts are far more satisfactory and enduring and may be produced far cheaper than by simple propagation through hardwood or softwood cuttings.

Buyers are apt to err in their purchases by demanding "perpetual bloomers." There is no rose that blooms all the time nor do those which bloom most produce the best flowers—quite the contrary—though to this, like all other rules, there are exceptions. Too many rose growers plant bushes in the lawn where the rose has to endure what the lawn and not roses need. Roses should always be planted where they may be cultivated as any commercial field crop—you are after roses, not bushes, for lawn decoration. Roses to bloom well in winter should be rested in summer. Like a machine, they need an annual rest, overhauling and cleaning. After the rest they should be heavily pruned, all wood smaller than a lead pencil removed (being useless,) thoroughly irrigated and plenty of well-rotted stable manure spaded in. Then you will get roses worthy the name and effort.



THE GIANT AMAZON LILY AT HOLLYWOOD.

The Giant Amazon Lily.

For the third time, during the month of October the giant lily of the Amazon River (Victoria regia) is shown in this department. So many inquiries have been sent to the writer regarding the wonderful sustaining power of the Victoria leaves that a brief explanation is deemed advisable. Now that these pictures have become quite common on postal cards, some people have come to think it all a "fake" as is the case with the giant ear of corn and the equally large watermelon, each of which are made to appear as filling a full-sized flat car.

Victoria regia often has leaves six feet across, capable of sustaining 200 pounds. The upturned rim is sometimes more than six inches high. The framework of these mammoth leaves would prove a scientific study for building engineers for its peculiar structure is upon lines of the greatest strength. The venation system is much the same as in all leaves but the main ribs where they leave the stem are usually two to four inches deep and with the cross veins form hundreds of square cells or cups which give the leaves immense resistance to pressure from above.

Many have thought these photos (or the leaves) "faked" in some way because it may readily be seen that something has been spread on the leaf surface for the person or persons to stand on. This has been necessary owing to the tenderness and thinness of the leaf epidermis or skin which is no thicker or tougher than that of the ordinary water lily leaf so that an infant might poke its finger through between the ribs. In all the pictures we have shown there were first spread on the leaf several thicknesses of The Times (the strongest paper we have) and on these thin boards were laid that the weight might be equally distributed and prevent shoes from cutting through the tender leaf. Of course none of this material touches the water, but adds to the weight the leaf has to sustain. A full-grown leaf with the weight well distributed will easily sustain 200 pounds. All the photos we have reproduced were taken at the ponds of E. D. Sturtevant on Franklin avenue, near Western avenue, Hollywood. Owing to an excess of cool weather the leaves of the present year are not so large as those of former years.

Climatic Differences.

Many persons who have never lived in a mountainous country, and who are not well versed in the physical geography of the Pacific Coast, are at a loss to account for the peculiar effects of climate upon plant and animal life in Southern California. A greater difference may often be found in the distance of a few miles, and at the same elevation, than can be found in large areas in comparative level countries. Considering this fact, it is not to be wondered at that many make a mistake in the selection of a place for a home that is not suited to their health, the plants they set out or the growing of the field or orchards crops they wish to produce.

In case no mountain range or high hills intervene between any locality and the ocean, the air is usually damp unless a considerable distance inland so that the moisture is dissipated before the sea breezes reach so far. However, where moisture-bearing winds pass over barren sand or gravel plains, a short distance is sufficient to render the air comparatively dry. Usually when damp winds pass over lands of considerable elevation as hills or mountains, they lose their humidity before reaching the plains or valley beyond. For the reasons herein set forth, a local study must be made as to the adaptability of certain plants to any given locality before one may garden with pronounced success. Experienced orchardists, for instance, have found that the lemon and the English walnut are seldom or never a commercial success in districts not subject to fogs.

Our State Flower.

It will soon be time to sow seeds of our native poppy and floral emblem of the Golden State, one of the showiest, hardiest, most useful and unquestionably appropriate of all our garden glories; so wide a range of color may now be had in the newer horticultural varieties that the range is from white to crimson through the lemon and orange route.

In addition to their usefulness for a great variety of positions and purposes they are the easiest of all to grow, for they need neither food or water other than so much of the first as may be found in any garden soil and of the latter a sufficiency will certainly be found in the season's precipitation. After the seedlings are well up it is best to transplant some where they come up too thickly, for if those remaining are six inches apart they will make a solid soil cover. Through settlement of suburban tracts and utilization of hitherto idle lands our local poppy fields are becoming more and more circumscribed and the time will come when we must turn to the garden for all that remains of one of the most glorious floral displays for which our State has been famed.

PALMS FOR STREETS.

[illegible] CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH TEND TO MAKE THEM POPULAR.

In spite of the fact that palms do not provide shade to any extent the public seems to love them for street planting because of their ornamentive value. The argument is often put forth that in a dry, warm climate, as this is in the summer time, we need shade trees along our streets, whereas palms are not trees nor do they qualify in shade production. The cold fact remains that the public loves tropical vegetation and are willing to sacrifice comfort for vegetation that is distinctive of the utmost possibilities of our land in the production of tropical leaf and blossom.

Last week the writer spent a day in going over the many miles of fine roads in the Arlington Heights district of Riverside. All of these highways are fully planted on each side, passing through thousands of acres of the best-looking, most productive orange and lemon groves to be found in the world. The street plantings are irrigated and cultivated every time the adjacent orchards are—all one grand scheme—not a weed, clod of earth or other unevenness for miles and miles, a truly beautiful sight. The street planting at present is done as fast as a new tract is set out. James Mills, superintendent of these gigantic interests, was asked why the palms were nearly the only street ornament used, and he replied that the public liked them best, the tourist wanted to see them, they require less care than any [illegible] has in the way, never does one die or become [illegible], are apparently not in the least detrimental to the [illegible], harbor no injurious insects, roots never interfere with orchard, sidewalk or street, and such a long list of good reasons why that the writer could neither write them down nor remember them all. Upon this warrant Mr. Mills has planted many miles of them in years past and is now having one lot of seven miles lined out. The Washingtonia robusta is the prime favorite, but the finest palms on any of the streets were some Erythea edulis on Victoria avenue—the most beautiful of the fan-leafs.

Public Building Approaches.

There is dignity and strength in a long and wide approach to a public building for the loss of which no ornamentation can compensate. One of the most worthy [illegible] of such vistas is the parked main entrance to the county Courthouse in Fresno, a building surrounded on all sides by ornamental trees which during the hot, dry summers cast a necessary and grateful shade quite uniformly over a much traversed territory. Owing to a plentiful supply of soil moisture at no great depth certain classes of trees there make a more rapid growth than may be found elsewhere in the State.

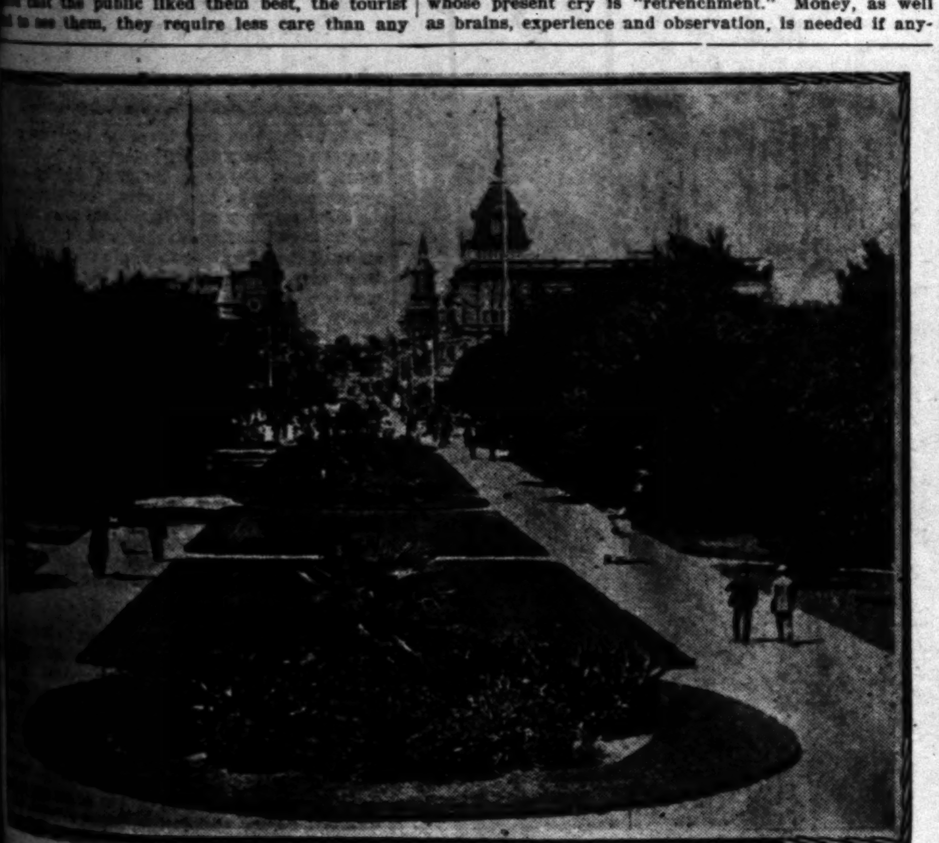
No Flower Shows.

[illegible] Gardeners' Association, which has held [illegible] flower shows, has concluded not to [illegible] this autumn, but will have an extensive display in the spring. Considering the size of the city, [illegible] have been the most successful and satisfying [illegible] on the Pacific Coast. While the floor space [illegible] compared with that covered by the Los Angeles [illegible] materials used have been very select and the [illegible] have shown a net profit on an admission [illegible] cents.

The Southern California Horticultural Society will hold their regular semi-annual exhibition in Blanchard's Hall, Los Angeles, November 7, 8 and 9, and will introduce several innovations of interest to the public, the most gratifying of which will be a reduction of the price of admission from 50 cents to 25 cents. The aim will be to interest every one who ever attends such attractions, and to this end any person who brings in plants or flowers worthy of a place will be given an exhibitor's season ticket, while each stockholder will receive two season tickets. It is expected that this policy, in connection with the lower price of admission, will create a more widespread interest than has any show yet held by this society. The displays will include all the classes of flowers heretofore exhibited and of course the "Autumn Queen" chrysanthemum will predominate.

Comparing Notes.

Park Superintendent Morley has just returned from his annual vacation, which time he uses each year in attending the annual convention of the Association of American Park Superintendents, held this year at Toronto, Canada. The "trade" papers have recorded visits from him to all the park systems of the larger cities of the eastern United States, and it may be presumed he is fairly loaded down with the best bunch of park building ideas obtainable. Unfortunately he brings them back to face a reduced park force and a City Council whose present cry is "retrenchment." Money, as well as brains, experience and observation, is needed if anything worth while is to be accomplished in park building and even with plenty of means development is necessarily slow. Plant life has a most aggravatingly deliberate pace in fulfilling the final aim of the landscape-maker and the average citizen is still more impatient of results, so that our park superintendent once each year gets a much-needed rest.



VIEW FROM MAIN ENTRANCE OF FRESNO COURTHOUSE.

Co-operative Street Planting.

In city communities where there exists an improvement association it should prove an easy matter to get uniform street planting by a thorough canvass of the wishes of the residents, allowing the majority to rule. A great deal of light on the subject may be obtained by inviting the city forester to give a talk on the subject before all interested. Mr. Harper is a minister of the gospel by profession, but will minister to your needs in the street-tree line. He likes to do missionary work in civic betterment and seems to love the Angel City's street-tree work equally with labor in the Lord's vineyard. During the short time he has been in office he has twice addressed the improvement association of which the writer is a member and all present have expressed themselves as instructed and interested. Any evening when not otherwise engaged he will be pleased to meet with any organization interested in civic betterment.

Well-Planted Streets.

But a few years ago we had many streets that were worthy examples of tree planting, and quite often they were seen, in photo-engravings, in articles descriptive of Los Angeles, all over the eastern country. Today they are gone, and we have very few if any, worthy of illustration. Our old peppers were formerly a great Mecca for the photographer, but street "improvements" caused their removal.

In the past few years cities and towns in the more northern counties have been much illustrated, but we are now seldom noticed. On the writer's desk there lies the last number of a Chicago publication containing two illustrations of streets in Riverside, where there are many similar, which we can hardly match in the large city of Los Angeles. If we are to hold the rank to which we have a right and to which it is our duty to aspire, we must do more street planting of more appropriate trees planted and cared for in a far more intelligent manner than that which has marked this work in the past. The fact must be apparent to all who have traveled and observed that Los Angeles is far behind other cities and sections in street adornment.

Giant Zimias.

In addition to the quilled or cactus dahlia type of zinnia noted on this page a few weeks ago, we now have a giant type of the old-fashioned zinnia that is also improved in color and form of flower head. These are about one-half larger than any heretofore seen, and the head is deep or more globular. In addition there are some shades and colors of exceptional brightness among them a yellow that is all but dazzling to the sight.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

ANATOMY OF A MALE FOWL.

A GLANCE AT SOME OF THE PRINCIPAL PHYSICAL ORGANS.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experience with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

MUCH has already been said in this department touching the external qualities of the domesticated fowl, its environment and condition when doing its best for our purposes; but scarcely any reference has been made to its living organism. To know something of bird anatomy is quite as important as an appreciation of type and shape, plumage and color markings. Reference made to the illustration taken from the Feathered World of London, will give a graphic idea of the anatomy of a male fowl, clearly showing position and functions of its organs. These are for the most part understood in a general way by the average breeder, hence require no extended technical description in detail here. The heart (Fig. 1) is a hollow muscular organ, contracting rhythmically, and serving to keep up the circulation of the blood. Often we hear of fowls dying from heart failure, apoplexy, choking, etc. These ailments are the result of others which the careless breeder fails to observe in time. Is there anything possessed of life that could possibly live if the heart failed? The liver (Fig. 2) is the largest gland in the body, reddish in color, rounded at its upper surface and flattened at the lower. That portion of food which is absorbed by the veins passes through it undergoing important chemical changes; from the venous blood which passes through it, the bile is secreted. Between the two lobes of the liver is seen gall bladder (Fig. 3,) which is of a bright dark green color. Bile is antiseptic in its action, or there would be far more disease among fowl as a result of feeding "high" foods. As fats cannot enter the system without bile secreted in the liver, it is easily seen how that organ may be overtaxed by feeding too heavy of starchy ingredients. Birds suffering from liver complaints show that organ on post mortem examination to be in a semi-cheesy condition, indicating tubercular deposits, which is distressingly common in fowl life. Liver diseases are chiefly due to overfeeding, resulting in a congestion of that organ; if allowed to reach a stage of inflammation, it is usually fatal. Symptoms are dark purplish face and comb, general ruffled appearance of feathers, coupled with a brownish watery discharge. Figure 4 shows the gizzard, where the food is ground up and put in conditon for assimilation. It is an enlarged part of the alimentary canal, having strong muscular walls, thick at the outer edge, and thin at the upper and under sides. The gizzard is practically the third stomach, its function being to grind the food into a pulp mixed with its gastric juices. Liberal feeding of soft foods coupled with the absence of grit will much weaken its function for want of proper exercise. This organ is quite exempt from disease, the chief danger being that fowl may pick up sharp substances like nails, pins, or glass, which may penetrate its walls. Next to the gizzard in the picture is the pancreas, a whitish conglomerate gland of irregular shape, pouring its secretion into the alimentary canal during digestion. Figure 6 shows the Duodenum or first of the small intestines, the inner walls of which being lined with small blood vessels, the peptones together with the sugars and salts are taken into the circulation. Figure 9 shows the lungs, covered by membranes, the organ of respiration. The trochea or windpipe (Fig. 10) conveys the air to the lungs.

To possess even an elementary knowledge of the functions of the organs of domesticated fowl is of great service in their management. The above description is but the merest outline, though the excellent illustration affords a good idea of the anatomy of a male bird. Next week we shall have something to say on the internal organs of a laying hen.

Mix Brains With Your Work.

Many of the States now give a special course of instruction in poultry culture in with the usual studies embraced by the agricultural colleges. This is, indeed, a step in the right direction. An industry whose annual product exceeds over $300,000,000 in value is well worthy of educational consideration—the surprise is that it has been so long neglected. In this State there is something being done at Berkeley in an experimental way, and by means of lectures on poultry in connection with the Farmers' Institutes the University Extension movement is put in touch with the poultry breeders; but there is no well-defined course of instruction like there is at Cornell and other universities east of the Rocky Mountains. Since we import something like $3,000,000 worth of poultry products annually into California, it would seem that a little enlightenment on growing chickens would prove a good investment.

The Opening of the Business Season.

Many may not realize the fact that the poultry industry is again on the eve of another business campaign for the sale of eggs for hatching, breeding stock and exhibition purposes. Commencing next month, the show campaign for 1907-8 will open in San José and continue right through to February. More shows will be given this year than last, and the number of exhibits will also be larger. In view of this it is important that breeders and fanciers who intend to exhibit shall get their birds into good condition for the showroom. It is also a good time for the commercial breeder having stock to sell to reach out for trade—in other words advertise his goods. Obviously there are mediums without end, especialy the poultry press, but for specific results in the Southwest, poultrymen all agree that The Times is a medium that secures trade. No other daily publishes so many poultry advertisemen itself goes to show that the breeders know when it stares them in the face in the road.

Pure Poultry Foods.

The proprietary poultry goods have become into use of late years that a number of States have enacted pure-food laws calcula tect Biddy from adulterated mashes and rations. The evil effects from "filler" poultry foods can well be imagined. What other whole grains have been put aside for cial foods now so widely used. When they are not only economic as to first cost, quite apt to augment the health of a flock increase egg production. If this were not to reason that so many large breeders using them so freely. The chemical tests examinations made by the authorities show these foods to be good, while in a number of value was not there. "In my office," says the sioner of Agriculture of Tennessee, "we h samples of commercial poultry foods found weed seed that would ruin any farm that it on. Hence I want purchasers of these foods office in seeing that nothing but goods allo are offered for sale. With the hearty co poultrymen and stock raisers we can secure at the same price." This certainly furnishes tion, namely, if you are in doubt of the of the feed you are buying, send a sample to ment station at Berkeley and have it analy

The Campine Fowl in Southern California.

We understand that there is at present fine pen of Campine fowl coming to Southern direct from Antwerp, Belgium, the birds party residing in this county. It is a very old breed, though but little kno country. In type they much resemble the L like it is a great egg producer, 200 eggs per quite common. We believe they will prove acquisition, especially on our lighter soils, range is at their command.

Home-made Appliances.

As a side issue and a by-product to fruit general farming there is nothing which pays a well-managed flock of standard fowl. In and management many home-made appliances way of houses, feeding and drinking troughs, into play, which serve their purposes ad are at the same time low in price. Through Purgatory Cave.

WONDERFUL CAVERN IN MASSACHUSETTS WITH WALLS OF ICE.

From New York Herald.

A FEW miles from Worcester, Mass., in a rocky chasm called Purgatory, is a cave whose narrow passageways seem to lead into the center of the earth. No one has yet had the courage to penetrate into its furthest depths, and to attempt such a thing would be a very difficult and dangerous proceeding. At its bottom is an unexplored subterranean lake or river.

Last week Miss Lucia B. Thompson, of Boston, who knows every footpath of the Sierras and has climbed the highest peaks of the Pacific Coast ranges, bravely attempted to explore the mysteries of the cavern at Purgatory. After several hours' climbing in the ante-chambers and narrow passages she was prevented from penetrating the great lower chamber by bars of ice. Miss Thompson says that she has never encountered a more difficult task, although she has climbed Mt. Whitney (14,852 feet,) Mt Shasta, Mt. Brewer and Mt. Hood; has explored Cowell's Cave, in California, and penetrated Tuolumne Gorge, in California.

There are scarcely three months in the year in which it is possible to enter the cave further than a few hundred feet. In spring, and even as late as July, curtains of icicles and sometimes walls of solid ice shut these gloomy caverns away from the outer sunlight and make them the more mysterious because of their inaccessibility. In winter great snowdrifts hide all trace of the entrance and fill Purgatory itself nearly to the tops of its huge walls.

Apart from the cave Purgatory is a wonderful place, and its origin has baffled the most eminent geologists. It is reached by a drive of six miles from Milbury and is a favorite picnic ground for the people in the near-by villages. The road winds out from Milbury and along the shores of a chain of lakes, the waters of which are utilized by a large number of factories. Passing these and continuing up into the farming lands, it climbs a steep hill, on the top of which is the historic town of Sutton, founded in 1704, and rich in old houses, old traditions and delicious country air.

Following down the hill on the other side of this village the traveler to Purgatory soon turns into the old turnpike, which runs in a straight line from Boston to Hartford. This is still kept in as good condition as when the stages fared back and forth, but it is only a country road now, not the thoroughfare of earlier days.

After leaving this road the travel becomes rougher, the farms are scarce and the country grows wilder and wilder. In half cleared wood lots mayflowers grow, and by the roadside are green sprigs of laurel, pussy willows and wild strawberries. Up and down hill winds the road and finally turns into the forest that conceals Purgatory.

The tribe of Nipmug Indians knew of this cañon before men settled in the country. When it first was called by its infernal name, however, not even the oldest inhabitant can remember. Its designation seems to have been a natural outcome of the impressions that it made on its explorers.

Purgatory is in the midst of a beautiful fir and spruce forest, and at its head looks like an ordinary ravine. In its gradual descent to the south, however, it grows wider and steeper at every step, and about 300 yards from its start the peculiarity of its formation is revealed. Here the walls are from forty to seventy feet in height and look as if some giant hand had wrenched them apart to form the chasm. In the violence of the process of formation, whatever it may have been, great boulders were separated from the walls and hurled into the ravine, where they lie in Titanic heaps, covered in some places by huge fir trees which they dragged down with them.

The processes of erosion nave aided in this chaotic work, and at different times large stones break loose from the ledges on each side and topple over with a crash that shakes the surrounding country. About two years ago one of these boulders, a great mass of stone with a gnarled fir tree growing upon it, crashed down, and the report when it struck the floor of the chasm was like that of a cannon. When the smaller stones fall, the noise is not so impressive, but in listening to it, one has an awed feeling, almost imagining that it might be a very faint echo of that first awful convulsion.

Some geologists ascribe the peculiar upheaval to a volcanic force acting underneath. Others believe that this portion of the country was the seacoast of Massachusetts at some prehistoric date, and that the waves formed Purgatory by rending its sides asunder. Dr. Hitchcock, in "The Geology of Massachusetts," says:

"This is an immense chasm, and I am at a loss to explain its origin. It is natural to suppose that its sides have been in some manner separated from one another. But I can conceive of no mode in which this could have been accomplished but by a force acting beneath, and this would dip on both sides from the fissure.

"The inclination along the fissure corresponds with that which is common in the region round, viz., 25 degrees northeast. In the vicinity of the fissure, however, the rocks are often exceedingly broken into fragments, and this circumstance indicates some early subterranean convulsion, or the agency of troubled waters, and I am rather inclined to refer these fragments, as well as the fissure, to the long-continued action of the waves of the sea, when the spot was so situated as to form a shore of moderate elevation."

Prof. Agassiz, the elder, visited this unique place many years ago, and was much interested in it. On his return he stopped at some of the spacious farmhouses of Sutton, the township in which Purgatory lies, and some of the younger ones who entertained him there remember his enthusiasm.

"It is the most powerful place of the kind that I have ever seen," he remarked.

About midway down the gorge is the Devil's Pulpit, a tall spire-shaped rock, with a granite ledge like a sounding board above it. A great many eminent clergymen have stood in this pulpit, but there is no record of any sermon ever having been preached there, either by the devil or any of his adversaries.

Descending from this eminence, the visitor to Purgatory naturally lands at the most important point of the cañon, the entrance to the cave—the Devil's Cave, it is called, and with good reason, for no one else has ever explored it to its limit.

Miss Thompson, relating her experiences in the cavern, says:

"The preparatory stage of Purgatory has been good practice for descending into the lower regions. Good climbing is necessary, and one needs a sure footing on the slippery rocks. One also needs old clothes, a lantern and a humble spirit, for in some places the only way to proceed is on the hands and knees.

"Entering the cave, it is necessary to climb around some big boulders that almost block the entrance, and at the foot of these, walled with rock and carpeted with ice, is the devil's ante-room. This is faintly lit, but further in nothing is to be expected. The next proceeding is to light a lantern, and one pauses for a moment at the dazzling effect of the light on the icicles and sparkling icy walls. Perhaps one pauses for other reasons too, for the next plunge is into an impossible dark aperture, under an icicled ledge.

"A slight screwing up of courage is necessary before going on. This hole is a little to the left as one enters the ante-room, and would be easy to get into if the descent were not a slide of smooth ice and if the rocks on each side of the opening were not covered with the same slippery coating. It is not a deep hole, however, and if one has the courage to sit down and slide he lands safely, if suddenly, in another miniature cave, not so commodious or so light as the first one and a trifle damper.

"Here there may be some doubt as to the correct path, as two openings are seen in the further wall, both hung with the uniform scheme of decoration, icicles. There is but one course to pursue, and that is to chop away the glittering obstructions and wriggle first into one small passageway—the one on the left—then into the other.

"This latter proves to be the correct way, so the worm-like motions of the victim of cave curiosity continue. There is no way of raising one's head or even kneeling upright. One experiences all the sensations of a cash box in a pneumatic tube. The ice line is past now, and there is something wet and slimy underfoot. The rocks are wet and slimy overhead. It is impossible not to think of worms and rattlesnakes, for many of the latter are said to infest the locality.

"But having gone thus far, what disciple of Peary would turn back? A little more of the wriggling process and the passage begins to grow broader. It descends more and more steeply, with nothing but yawning blackness ahead, and finally it becomes impossible to go any further. The air is an unpleasant combination of chilly dampness and sickening heaviness, and not even the bravest has taste for further exploration. A lantern had been lowered at this point until there was not sufficient air to keep the light burning. A stone dropped straight into the abyss struck the sides several times, with fainter and fainter detonation, and then was heard a splash in water. This water is supposed to be Purgatory Brook, which emerges at the lower end of the cañon, and which may flow under ground through the upper part of its course. Some maintain that it is an underground lake, in which the brook rises.

"The charm of the sunshine and outer air cannot be described when one emerges from the depth after these explorations. Even the huge boulders on the floor of Purgatory look friendly, and the stately cliffs and the tops of the richly-colored fir trees against the blue sky seem twice as attractive as they did before. The world looks good to the cave explorer, and his mood grows highly appreciative. All of which shows the beneficial effects of a short stay in the lower regions."

One accident has happened in Purgatory. The wife of Prof. George Prentice, of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Ct., fell from a lofty rock on July 7, 1876, and was mortally injured. She became dizzy and fell to the rocks, nearly sixty feet below. She lived for several weeks in a semi-conscious condition.

TWO WAYS OF LOOKING AT IT.

THERE is a young artist in Washington, who classes himself as of the impressionistic school, and who, being somewhat out in drawing, generally makes up for his lack of technique by spreading color recklessly and counting on distance for his effect.

At an amateur exhibition he once hung one of his most extraordinary performances.

"Well," said a friend, whom the artist had taken to see the work, "I don't want to flatter you, old chap, but that is far and away the best stuff you have ever done. I congratulate you."

Much pleased, the artist was receiving the compliment with becoming modesty, when he chanced again to glance at the picture—and turned very red. The committee had hung it upside down!

Hurrying to the head of the committee, he was about to launch into a loud complaint, when he was informed of the good news that an hour before the picture had been sold for $61. The original price mark had been $19 —[Lippincott's.

Apple Crop Injured.

THE press reports indicate that the apples of the higher altitudes of San Bernardino county suffered severely from a gale that visited those localities on the 4th. I hope these reports may be modified. If the apple crop of the Yucaipe Valley is severely injured it will be a misfortune to more than the growers concerned directly. This fruit is extremely high in the East and always commands good prices here, especially the brands sent out from the mountain country of San Bernardino. I do not know how Los Angeles can "keep house" very well without her fall display of fine apples grown in these localities. It is especially deplorable to be short on home-grown apples when so many visitors are here investigating the resources of the country. But such a gale comes so seldom in the early fall that it may be years before another visitation like this occurs.

New Alfalfas.

A FARMER in the southern part of Los Angeles county asks where he may procure the seed of the alfalfa imported lately by the Department of Agriculture. The Fort Hays Experiment Station, Hays, Kan., is growing successfully the Turkestan alfalfa, a variety introduced as a drought and cold-resistant kind. A letter addressed to this station might bring a small package of seed for a starter. Great encouragement should be given the introduction of Asiatic and other foreign alfalfas, with the hope that some of them may prove profitable for dry farming. As a matter of fact, however, nothing as yet approaches the common alfalfa where reasonably heavy irrigation is possible. Varieties resistant to heavy cold are not needed in Southern California. The Turkestan variety, however, is hardy as far north as the international boundary, and may become of importance in that frigid country.

Killing Morning Glory.

A NORWALK correspondent writes as followc: "Under head of 'Spraying to Kill Weeds' you state that a 10-per-cent. solution of iron sulphate sprayed upon the field will kill weeds. Will it kill white morning glory?" All the experiments noted in the reports at hand have avoided even mentioning the morning glory. Wild mustard has yielded to the sulphate treatment without injuring the cereal crops in which it grew. It is safe to say the iron solution would have little effect upon a plant which does much of its growing under ground. Morning glories have been exterminated in very dry soils by the absent water treatment, but this is impossible in soils full of moisture from rain, irrigation or seepage. If any one knows how to stamp out the white morning glory he has not divulged the secret.

Seedless Apples.

READERS of The Times will remember the controversy over Spencer's seedless apple, that was so violent two or three years ago. A company has been operating for years in this variety, and made so many absurd claims concerning this fruit that the agricultural press took issue with the whole mess as to the value of the alleged new kind, making it so warm for the seedless-apple promoters that they have retracted. The company now says that some of the criticisms "were entirely justified." It does not appear that the promoters withdrew their absurd claims before exposure. One investigator writing for the Rural New Yorker says he visited the Spencer farm at Grand Junction, Colo. He writes: "I cut open twenty-five or thirty fruits to investigate the seedless character of this novelty. In over half of these I found from two to five seeds. But what interested me most was that in over three-fourths of the specimens I examined the cores were apparently well developed. I chewed them hopefully, but the tough partitions that separated the cells of the core got between my teeth and were just as obnoxious as those in the core of the Yankee Baldwin. A large percentage of the apples were wormy, although they had been sprayed. The hired man at Spencer's admitted that this apple was even more likely to get wormy than other sorts."

Orange Aphis.

AN ACQUAINTANCE at San Gabriel brought me a lot of orange foliage badly infested with the aphis so common in groves during the summer. Also leaves of the French artichoke literally covered with the green aphis so often seen upon house and garden plants. I do not know of any one who considers the orange species a pest. They are so well controlled by parasites that very little damages occurs even where the aphis covers the leaves totally. The attack causes the young orange leaves to curl badly, and in some cases destroys the tender foliage. But the parasites get them all, sooner or later.

It is not so with the species that attack house and garden plants. Why the parasites do not control these forms is a mystery, especially concerning the plants of more than annual location. It may be the proximity to the ground that preserves them from their parasitic enemies, and were it not for their predatory foes the aphis would ruin the melons, cucumbers and cantaloupes every year when not controlled by climatic influences. Spraying is ineffectual in resisting the melon aphis, and the process is very harmful to the vines. A 10-per-cent. coal-oil solution has been used successfully in destroying a heavy attack of aphids upon apple trees, and where their natural enemies did not appear. But I know of no efficient spray for the melon forms, and there is no way of effective application were the remedy harmless to the vines.

Value of Owens River.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S commendation of the Owens River water scheme, in his Memphis speech a few days ago, is the biggest "boost" we have had for many a day. The President's expressions seem to rivet themselves upon the attention of the civilized world. It was a great day for Los Angeles when he proclaimed the Owens River water scheme "perhaps the boldest project of the kind in modern times." Our chief magistrate not only gave his powerful aid to the removal of preliminary impediments, but now he endorses the plan as an investment, predicting that the water power will be sufficiently valuable to pay large interest on the investment of over $23,000,000.

It secures 20,000 inches of water from the natural flow of the river and from cheap impounding the water will be worth $20,000,000 for irrigation at the popular rate of value, namely, $1000 per miner's inch. Twenty-four years ago one of our best authorities on irrigational values placed the value of water at $720 an inch for ranch use. All agree that water for a great city is worth infinitely more as a direct revenue-producer than for irrigational use. The water used on all the citrus-fruit lands of Southern California for the last year produced a net revenue of say $10,000,000. Who can estimate the number of millions invested in water and land to produce this magnificent result? I have estimated the capital invested in one limited citrus section with which I am familiar at $5,000,000 in land and water. This section produces about one-twelfth of the citrus fruits of the State. Water in some other sections has cost immensely more than it did in the case at hand. A guess of $50,000,000 for purchased rights, all ditches, reservoirs and canals in use by the citrus fruit growers could not be controverted except by another guess. If this has been made to pay, what more could the use of the Owens River do with its power and the domestic irrigational service of a half-million people?

Resistant Vines.

THE question as to the varieties of the grape that are most resistant to the "California vine disease" is often asked. Last week it came to me in regard to planting grapes at Coachella. I have no information to the effect that this disease has yet made its appearance there and do not believe it has. But a planter would be safe in setting out the Malaga at Coachella, as that variety shows the greatest resistance of the raisin grapes. The hardiest table grape is the Tokay, but where that variety does not color well its success would be impossible, though entirely immune. The Black Malvoise is a hardy wine grape, and is also a popular table variety. The Lenoir is said to be the most resistant of all the European kinds, but its origin, however, is in question. As to the power of eastern grapes to withstand the vine disease I have no data at hand, but the inquirer would not wish to experiment on a large scale with American varieties, especially in an untried locality.

The country below Indio and at Imperial should soon become one of the greatest grape-growing districts in the State, and it is already giving indications to that effect. In some of the previously wooded localities nearer the coast, vines have suffered materially from a fungous disease said to be left over in the soil where oaks have previously grown. It is a native fungus, but would not be found in the new soils of the treeless desert regions. Neither should phylloxera ever get a start there if clean vines only are planted. One Coachella planter writes me he has failed to establish a vineyard from cuttings. He was advised to try strong, well-rooted plants this winter. Not only is this good policy in getting the vines to grow in the first place, but it is well to discard weak stock entirely even if it appears free from disease. Innumerable cases of failure, after two or three years growth, have occurred from planting weak, poorly-matured wood. Where irrigation is depended upon altogether, the culture of the grape should be more successful than where the water level may change or get below or above the root system in non-irrigated sections.

Beneficial Insect Search.

THE possibility of the presence of another species of Icerya brings to memory the scourge of the white scale (Icerya purchasi) which bid fair to ruin the citrus fruit industry here twenty years ago. If the unauthenticated report is true that we have a new species of this destructive family we may wonder if the Koebele predatory insects will prove as effective as they were with the white scale. In this connection I find among the records a copy of Mr. Koebele's instructions, given him by the Secretary of Agriculture prior to Koebele's sailing for Australia upon his first quest for beneficial insects, on August 23, 1888. As these instructions are not in line with the ideas of some entomologists, I append them by way of contrast:

"As you have already been informed, your mission to Australia is for the purpose of making an investigation of the parasites of Icerya purchasi, with a view of introducing them into California. It will be necessary for you to go to Adelaide to see Mr. Frazer S. Crawford, who sent the Dipterous parasites named by Mr. Williston Lestophonus icerya, sent to Mr. Klee and Mr. Coquillett at my request. At Adelaide you will prob[illegible] to study this insect carefully. Find out also the [illegible] which these parasites oviposit, and ascertain [illegible] at which success in importation will be most [illegible] each and all of them.

"Once on the ground, you will see for [illegible] what will be necessary to be done in [illegible] about results. You should also endeavor [illegible] department in correspondence with as many [illegible] as you can interest in the subject, and [illegible] means endeavor to get at least one person [illegible] able to devote some time to the matter, and [illegible] the observations after you return. Baron [illegible] ler, formerly director of the Botanic Garden [illegible] resident of that city, and you will find [illegible] informed person to consult."

How well Prof. Koebele carried out his [illegible] may be realized by the orange growers, [illegible] twenty years later, were able to produce [illegible] worth of fruit without one dollar's worth [illegible] from the white scale. Flowers.

BURBANK before his experiments in producing d dahlias had made all manner of other im- in this handsome flower. To make the in form and color that he had already accom- involved much labor and many years of New varieties were brought from foreign coun- crossed with those already familiar to the propa- this country. From Mexico, for instance, was what is known as Dahlia Juaresi, and this new founded the family of what we now call the Cac- with their almost fluffy petals, so much less artificial than the more familiar old varieties. Burbank has been heard to say that the matter of classification of the botanists, considered such a affair by the average student, is as mere beside the work of keeping track of the de- plant's life under change from an old order to a new one. In this work of propagating and recording the results there are countless things to be borne in mind, not the least of these being the facts that relate to its life to the tendencies of the old plants that are blended in the new one are to be kept sight of, and many other things that would be mysteries to the aver-age persons who know nothing of the matter from a scientific standpoint. All that concerns such persons is results, and results Mr. Burbank certainly has achieved.

In his uplifting and improving process of dealing with the dahlia, one day bending over a plot of the plants in his experimental fields, Mr. Burbank noticed a flower that had none of the characteristic disagree-able odor of its kind. The plant bearing this flower was at once isolated, and after careful watchfulness while it grew and developed the seeds were saved and planted in due time.

The plants that came from the seeds of this single, slightly fragrant dahlia were not uniform in the scent that distinguished them. Some were not fragrant at all, but disagreeable in odor like all the dahlias before the parent flower; some had a different, if slighter, dis-agreeable odor, but then, too, there were a few that gave forth a faint, sweet suggestion of the full rich-ness that characterizes the splendid magnolia blossoms of the South. These dahlias only were permitted to live and to ripen their seeds.

The seeds from the crop of scented blossoms were planted as with those from the first slightly fragrant flower, and again the resulting plants were rigidly noted, and as rigidly were all blossoms that gave forth no fragrance doomed to instant death. Again and again and again was this plan followed, until after many gen-erations of plants had been grown and selected there was at last a plant whose blossoms were of the full, true magnolia scent, while at the same time there was to plant and flower all the characteristics that belong to the finest of the modern family of dahlias. All the dis-agreeable odor had gone, and only sweetness was in its place. The soul was there at last.

This changing of an offensive odor in a flower for a delightfully pleasant one is among the most remarkable of Mr. Burbank's achievements. All the life habits and tendencies of the plant had to be overcome and what was strange and new to it made to take its place; so it was no wonder that at first so few flowers were willing to yield and give forth a pleasant smell instead of the old, offensive one. Almost any other characteristic which might be forced upon the plant by cultivation would be more easily accepted by it than this delicate, intangle one of giving out fragrance as a final de-light for its admirers. It is easier always with human beings to develop bodies than souls.

Even more marvelous than the matter of changing a disagreeable odor in a flower for a fragrant one is that of giving perfume to a plant that has no scent at all. This achievement Mr. Burbank has also accomplished with another flower almost as "icilyregular, splendidly null" as the dahlia itself. This is the Calla, which he has made to blossom with the scent of Parma violets, by many considered the choicest of all violet odors. This scent he has fixed in this flower.—[Gentlewoman.

Vegetable Tramps.

WEEDS are travelers of the vegetable kingdom, and may often be found very far from home. Our wide and boundless acres that invite the overflowing crowds from Old World slums and corners make room, as well, for their useless and hated plants. It is a fact that all our more pernicious weeds, like our vermin, are of Old-World origin. They hold up their heads and assert themselves here, and take their fill of riot and license. They are avenged for their long years of repression by the stern hand of European agriculture. "Until I searched through the botanies I was not aware to what extent we were indebted to the Old World for these vege-table Ishmaelites. We have scarcely a weed that we can call our own," says Burroughs. "I recall but three that are at all noxious or troublesome—the milk weed, rag weed and goldenrod."

Some patient mortal has made out a list of these tramp plants, these wild Arabs from over the seas that have taken possession of our waste places and driven out many of our own common weeds. Whole acres are given up to teasle or milk weed, wild carrots and the ox-eye daisy. Meadows are overrun with bear weed and sheep pastures nearly ruined by St. John's wort, or the Canada thistle. All the great family of docks, the malloys, the mulleins, nightshade, dandelion, plantain, chicory, buttercup, purslane, the endless list of mints, catnip, gill, henbane and others are well-known vaga-bonds from other lands.

It is commonly believed that the mullein is indigenous to this country, for have we not heard that it is culti-vated in English gardens and christened the American velvet plant? Yet, it, too, came over with the Pil-grims, and is most abundant in New England. It abounds throughout Europe and Asia, and had its econo-mic uses with the ancients. The Greeks made lamp wicks of its dried leaves, and the Romans dipped its dried stalk in tallow for funeral torches. It affects dry uplands in this country. The first year it sits low upon the ground, the second summer it starts upward its long stalk, with its small yellow flowers, and in the fall, its burden of countless fine black seeds. "As full as a mullein stalk of seeds" is equivalent to saying as numerous as the sands upon the seashore.

Of Old-World origin is the curled-leaf dock that trou-bles the careful gardener, and clings to the soil with its long tapering roots that can hardly be dislodged. Purs-lane, or "pusley," is a stray from England—the common St. John's wort, too, that has taken forcible possession of our fields, the rag weed, that is the bane of hay-fever sufferers. "It's botanical name is Ambrosia," says one, "which means food of the gods." It must be the food of the gods, for nothing terrestrial would eat it, not even a billy goat.

Many of our most rampant weeds were once the dar-lings of the garden. In some discontented mood they have broken bounds and strayed off into the wild, until now they are but strays and wanderers, no more classed among the aristocracy of the plant family. The wild radish, with its wealth of small white flowers; the yar-row, so loved by poets of the old world; the cockle, which was once a garden pink; the wild convolvulus, once the cherished morning glory.

Who has not seen and admired the quaint dodder, with its brilliant hues of shaded yellow clinging to fence corners, or glaring in a tangled mass upon the un-derbrush and sappy plants of some fair creek side? There is something in the very name that provokes a smile. There is a hint of the vagabond in the title, and truly it is a plant loafer, an idler, a veritable parasite. It has neither roots nor leaves.—[Farm Stock Journal.

Roses.

THESE notes on a summer garden would be incom-plete without a closing word or two in reference to roses—the glory of the summer garden. Alover of roses says: "Try as far as possible to have all your seed sowing and transplanting done before the June rosee season begins, that you may give yourself up to this one flower, heart, soul, yes, and body also It was no haphazard symbolist that, in troubadour days, gave love the rose for his own flower, for to be its real self the rose demands all and must be all in all to its pos-sessor."

Roses, perhaps, more than any other flowers, require plenty of sunshine. They should be planted by them-selves with at least a moderate space of earth for each bush so that the soil around them may be con-stantly stirred and its drainage watched. What has al-ready been said about cramping the roots of trans-planted plants must be applied to rose plants. To in-sure fair blossoms, the roots must be well cared for—that means they must be set in light, rich, well-drained soil that can be stirred now and then to let in the nec-essary air. Among the climbing roses that may beau-tify a garden, the Gloire de Dijon has perhaps the rich-est and heaviest foliage and the lustriest branch. Its blossoms are large for a climber, very fragrant and of a rosy buff hue. The Baltimore Belle is desirable often for the reason that itblooms late in the rose season. Then there are the sweet briars with the scented foliage and the pink, crimson or white blossom, and the single and double Cherokee for the lighter and more graceful climbers. Bush roses should be planted for center gar-dens in the form of a shrubbery and not in rows. But volumes could be written upon roses. As to just what roses to plant, that must be left to individual choice, but this little "rose note" is to suggest the planting of some roses for the summer garden.—[Town and Country Journal.

Onions to Set in the Fall.

A GREAT many people are asking me about setting onion sets in the fall. It can be done all right, and the farther south you are the better it will work. When you get pretty well south it is the only successful way to grow onions at all.

You can use any kind of onion sets. Put them in just before cold weather, so they will get nicely rooted, but will not make any top growth. Plant them just the same as you would in the spring. When winter weather comes, mulch them a little, not heavily. They will come on early in the spring and make a good crop of either green onions or dry ones. In this latitude it is a little risky, but will generally pay.—[Fruit Grower.

A MOUNTAIN DAY.

The clouds kissed the mountains as they rolled them by,
  And whispered a fond farewell;
But the rocks were grim and dark and stern,
And clung to the mists, though the mists were
  And fled with the rose of the Dawn.

The sun mocked the hills in their stony despair;
  Nor caressed, nor soothed their brow.
It searched out each crag and rocky nook;
It burned with a pitiless fire, would brook
  No relief from its noonday glare.

But a passing breeze saw the mountain's plight
  And hastened the sun to woo.
It wafted scents of the Southland clime,
And softened the glare to the hue of wine;
  Then vanished as Dusk hovered near.

And the mountain's frowns softened and faded away,
  While mists floated in again.
Valley and crag were blue in the maze,
Blue sky and pinnacle melted in haze.
  O'er the mountain, night was at hand.

What About Breakfast?

THE leading article in A Stuffed Club, for September, bore the above title. In it, Dr. Tilden expressed himself against the no-breakfast plan. He declares that whoever says he doesn't care for breakfast is a diseased person—that 'no wholesome, normal, undomesticated animal will say so."

The editor has the highest respect for Dr. Tilden's opinions on diet. At the same time, he cannot ignore the results of his own experience, and that of scores who have written to him to say how greatly they have benefited throught taking his advice, dropping breakfast. In fact the editor may safely say that judging from communications he receives no one single health rule advocated in these columns has been found so effective as the no-breakfast plan. The editor himself, and his family, have experienced much benefit since they abandoned breakfast. Years ago, like so many others, the editor would arise without an appetite and shove down the regulation oatmeal, eggs, bacon, etc. with a cup or two of tea or coffee. It would have choked him to have to eat a piece of dry bread, or even a piece of bread and butter. It was the tea and coffee that made it go.

This is the case with thousands—nay, hundreds of thousands—of people doing sedentary work. They have no appetite in the morning, but they eat breakfast, because they think they must do so to "keep up their strength"—or because they have paid for their board by the week at the hotel or boarding house.

Perhaps, all these people are sick. Very likely. Most civilized people are sick. Perhaps the editor is sick also. That is not at all impossible. In any case, however, Dr. Tilden will surely not recommend that people should eat breakfast when they have no appetite for it. Indeed, in the article above referred to he says:

"Those who have no desire for breakfast should not eat until they are hungry and not then if the desire comes before dinner time in the evening, and one meal a day should be indulged in until a desire for breakfast comes, then two meals a day will be relished and digested at those times in the day when nature, in a normal state, demands them; namely: morning and evening."

This is good advice. If, on rising, you have a real, good, natural hunger—hunger, not appetite—then eat, not less than an hour after rising, a light—a very light—breakfast. Here is Dr. Tilden's suggestion for a light breakfast. There are many readers of this department to whom it will not appeal:

"A breakfast of toasted flakes and nuts—pecans—the food to be eaten dry and when breakfast is finished sip a cup of teakettle tea—one-third milk, two-thirds boiling water and a lump of sugar." If this looks good to anybody on getting out of bed, he may safely eat it, without fear that he is indulging a morbid appetite.

The late Dr. Dewey explained the theory of the no-breakfast plan on the basis that strength is restored by sleep. That this is so is obvious. For instance, a man starts out early in the morning on a hunting trip. He tramps all day, over the roughest kind of country, and comes home in the evening so absolutely worn out that he throws himself on his bed without completely undressing and goes to sleep, without eating anything. After sleeping ten or twelve hours, he wakes up and jumps out of bed, feeling bright, strong, active and ready for the duties of the day. He has eaten nothing for twenty-four hours. Now, where did his vigor come from?

Here is the experience of a woman with the no-breakfast plan. It is a letter written by Lucy T. Russel, of Whitesburg, Ga., to Charles Courtney Maskell, of Norwich Ct.:

"It is with pleasure that I write you my experience in regard to your method of living as explained in 'Perfect Health.' I am 66 years of age; have had catarrh ever since I can remember, and for the last twenty-five years have had rheumatism. It was so bad in my knees that I could not walk any distance for several years. Could not even go to the orchard.

"That was my condition when I read your book. I at once began to practice doing without breakfast, and my health began to improve immediately, and in one month from the time I began, I walked to a neighbor's who lives a mile and a half away, over one of the roughest roads in the United States, both as to hills and rocks and part of the way plowed ground. I walked home in the evening without feeling any inconvenience. I have practiced your method of living only two months and the rheumatism is all gone, and have not felt a trace of catarrh since I began it.

"About twenty years ago I adopted the plan of doing without supper, on account of not sleeping well. I think that was an advantage to me, but it did not have the curative effect that doing without breakfast has. Doing without breakfast helped me much more in one month than doing without supper did in twenty years.

"I cannot tell the amount of medicine I took, but was always trying something for rheumatism, which troubled me more than anything else. Now I do not take any medicine and am perfectly well, for the first time in many years.

"I have not had any difficulty in doing without breakfast, although I had always relished that meal more than any other. I never want to eat in the morning, and do not get hungry before dinner, neither do I eat any more for dinner than I did before. I eat now only one meal a day, at noon, and believe if the whole world would take up that practice, the doctors would soon have to go out of business. I want everybody to be convinced."

As far as the editor is concerned, he would much prefer a handful of fruit, to the breakfast outlined by Dr. Tilden. There are, however, some who cannot "negotiate" fruit for breakfast—not because there is anything the matter with the fruit, but because there is something the matter with the stomach. On this subject, Dr. Tilden writes:

"An all-fruit breakfast is desirable for those who are able to take care of it. Some people can't take care of fruit. Those who are very nervous, and who are food-saturated—poisoned with uric acid—catarrhal—those on the borderland of neurasthenia, can't take a breakfast of fruit without discomfort. This will be pooh-poohed at by those who think fruit always admissible as a food. Time is too short to dispute with these people. I am willing that they shall go on distressing their patients with fruit until the patients become disgusted and try some other plan."

Here are further remarks by Dr. Tilden on the subject of breakfast:

"No more indigestible meal can be eaten than mush, cream and sugar when swallowed without insalivation. Sugar adds to the indigestibility and fruit eaten at the same meal caps the climax in making a mush meal a stomach destroyer. . . .

"The person who is taxing digestion daily with an ill-adapted breakfast is paying a heavy interest daily by way of irritable nerves, with all that they cost, in the line of kicking up rough house, impaired judgment, incapacity for seizing opportunities in life, inability for turning out finished work, the only kind of work that has any show in the market of High Price."

In the same article Dr. Tilden gives some suggestions in regard to breakfast combinations, from which the following suggestions are taken.

Oatmeal well cooked, eaten alone with milk, and slowly chewed, never as a part of a mixed breakfast.

Broiled meat, not dressed with butter or oil, eaten with zwieback or corn bread, followed with a cup of hot water.

A few crisp slices of breakfast bacon, two soft-boiled eggs, corn bread thoroughly toasted, in the form of zwieback. No fresh bread, no fruit.

A fruit breakfast, consisting of one kind of fruit only, nothing else.

Cakes and syrup, thoroughly masticated and insalivated. Not to be eaten more than once a week.

Tomatoes, either by themselves or combined with lettuce, also radishes and either eggs, chops, steak or broiled fish. No bread, rice, toast or starchy food with this breakfast.

Cottage cheese, buttermilk or clabber milk, with whole-wheat zwieback, on which you may use a little butter. Dr. Tilden says you may have a dish of sliced cucumbers or radishes or raw carrots with this breakfast—which would certainly make a sensation, if served at the Brown Palace, in Denver, or the Angelus, in Los Angeles.

City Conveniences and Comforts.

UNTIL recently, Los Angeles contained nothing that could properly be described as a slum district. With the marvelous growth of the city, however, and the exceedingly cosmopolitan population that is drifting in, such blots upon a city are beginning to make their appearance.

One who has been doing good work to better the conditions of the "submerged tenth" is Rev. Dana Bartlett, whose recently published book, "The Better City," was referred to editorially in the Daily Times of September 27. One subject referred to by Dr. Bartlett in this book has been heretofore touched upon in these columns. He writes:

"Another movement for civic betterment which has not yet been recognized as a necessity in this city is the establishment of public-comfort stations, giving the public use of lavatories, urinals and toilets. The existing coffee clubs furnish such accommodations, the hotels give them to those who are as well dressed as their patrons, and many stores have special retiring-rooms for women; but otherwise the saloons offer the only conveniences for the average man of the street. The patronage of the saloon is increased greatly in return for the use of these facilities. Most men who use them spend money over the bar, or they meet with other men who treat them, thus forming oftentimes the beginnings of a debauch. Temperance workers might well turn their attention to this movement as an essential factor in the promotion of better morals. On the continent of Europe one meets with these conveniences every five or six blocks. In Paris they are sometimes so noticeable as to offend public decency. Their obtrusiveness is remedied in this country by building them beneath the street, or by constructing them in the shape of artistic chalets, at the junctions of streets. In Europe, each station has its attendant, who keeps everything scrupulously clean. The urinals are always free to the public,

Doctors and Diet.

FOLLOWING is an extract from a letter recently received by the editor from Dr. J. H. Kellogg of Battle Creek:

"Call on me whenever I can give you any information which will help anybody. I am surprised to see how deeply you are getting into this diet question. It is rather unusual to find a layman who probes so deep."

There is no cause for surprise in this. It is a fact that most of the notable advances in natural methods of healing disease—some of which have been adopted, to a certain extent, without credit, by the regular medical fraternity—have originated with despised "laymen," in some cases uneducated German peasants.

It is a well-known fact that the medical fraternity is lamentably ignorant in regard to the subject of diet, to which little or no attention is paid in the medical colleges. As an instance of this there is Woods Hutchinson, who has paraded his belief that emasculated white flour and Chicago slaughter-house products are the basis of American civilization. Medical knowledge in regard to diet may be summed up in the two hackneyed phrases: "Eat what you like," and "Eat what seems to suit you"—cloaks to cover ignorance.

There is, however, a noticeable awakening of interest in the subject, among intelligent and studious members of the profession—such men, for instance, as Dr. Kellogg, Dr. Saleeby, Dr. Gulick and Dr. Tilden, to which list might be added the names of a number of "regular" practitioners, who realize that no method of treating disease can be of any permanent value so long as the wrong diet, that has been the main cause of the disease, is continued.

Barlow Sanatorium.

THE fourth annual report of the Barlow Sanatorium for poor consumptives, in Chavez Ravine, has been received. On an average, the sanatorium has cared for thirty cases constantly during the past year, at an average cost of $7.86 for each patient per week, excluding all permanent improvements and new buildings or fixtures. During the entire year 106 patients received treatment, of which number 74 were discharged. The comparatively nominal charge of $5 a week is made. This takes off the sting of charity.

During the past year much has been accomplished toward beautifying the grounds of the sanatorium.

Dr. Barlow says there should be accommodations for twice the present number of patients, if the present number of people making written applications could be taken. 'Among the present needs of the institution he mentions the following:

First—A donation of any amount toward the running expense account.

Second—Regular subscribers, that is, yearly subscribers, annual members, patrons, life members.

Third—Beds to be endowed; $5000 will endow a bed for all time; or any one may keep a patient in a bed at the rate of $5 a week,

Fourth—Suitable wagon (runabout.)

Fifth—Enlarged dining-room.

Sixth—Additional bath-house.

Seventh—Wire, posts, and material for chicken-houses and yards.

Eighth—Separate laundry and dining-room.

Ninth—Nurses who will contribute their services to the institution by the month or longer.

Tenth—Tent cottages, furnished or unfurnished.

Eleventh—Regular donors by month or year.

Twelfth—Bolts of cheese cloth, which are used as handkerchiefs by all patients, and then burned.

Thirteenth—Canned fruit, jellies and fresh fruit.

Fourteenth—Donations of any necessary household supplies, such as boxes of laundry soap, barrels of sugar or flour, or sacks of rice.

As previously remarked, this is a worthy institution, and well deserving of support on behalf of the benevolently inclined. In the opinion of the editor, it would be a good plan if the sanatorium could have an annex, somewhere out on the desert, or in the mountains, where a larger number of patients, who need protracted attention, could be cared for in an aseptic atmosphere

"Chiropractic."

DR. THOMAS STOREY, of Los Angeles was recently the subject of attention on part of the State Board of Medical Examiners, in consequence of the death of a patient, soon after he had submitted to heroic treatment by the doctor. This is the second time, within a year or so, that Dr. Storey has been in a similar trouble.

The school of treatment known as "chiropractic" is not a new thing. It was established about twenty-five years ago, by a Dr. Palmer of Davenport, Iowa. That city is still the headquarters of the school, in the United States. There is at Davenport a large college, to which students come from all over the country.

Like the osteopaths, the chiropractics believe that disease is caused by lesions of the spinal vertebrae. Their mechanical treatment is, however, different from the osteopaths, being more severe. Even among the local chiropractics, Dr. Storey has been the subject of criticism, on account of the severity of his treatments, although it is admitted that he has effected some remarkable cures.

The fact that "chiropractic" is not recognized by the State Board of Medical Examiners as a department of medical healing proves nothing, because State boards of medical examiners have successively opposed homeo-and when you do know the truth about rupture, its prevalense, cause, source and the common sence, natural curing methods I employ, as well as the harmful effects of the various above mentioned methods you will never submit. I make trusses, 15 different kinds, of the best on earth, or any kind you want. It's been my business for 15 years. Have been through the mill myself and know by experience all the various phases of rupture and its treatment. When you are ill there begins a sort of triangular battle for Health, even Life, between you, Nature and NaturAID, the touch that cures and heals you. Nature can always be depended upon to do her part when projerly aided. Can you?

I have nothing to hide. It's free. First I simply aid your body to counteract the effects of gravity, another of Nature's laws, which is induced by the jamming action of the lungs as in coughing, sneezing or straining at stool, etc., forces a link of knuckle of the intestines (bowels) down between your weak and flabby belly muscles, and simply pushes or spreads them apart; they never tear or break, as is commonly thought. I say that I overcome this tendency by simply aiding Nature and will give an absolute guarantee contract, certified to by a Notary, if desired, to refund all moneys if I fail to properly retain any reducable rupture against all possible contingencies, work performed or positions assumed by the body, and when this is properly accomplished a cure, understood, must result. If you can devote five minutes of time to yourself daily and follow the simple, common-sence instructions I teach you, which you ought to do any way for your health's sake. Let me add right here, that if the same effort is put forward in the right direction that it takes to wear a truss, a cure of rupture must result, irrespective of age, occupation or age of rupture.

I said trusses are very harmful. Well they are in several ways, because they are made to fit in the wrong place and will destroy the reproductive or sexual functions, thus causing sterility. I tell you I am prepared to prove every statement I make free of charge to any one who desires to call. There is no truss that will hold a rupture within two inches of the place it first protrudes. And it must get worse.

Again patching up people after operations, constitutes the bulk of my business. Why not see me first? I claim to have discovered, patented and now employ the only feasable cure for rupture ever attempted by anyone, and if it does not appear so to you after investigation, it is up to you to refuse treatment. paths, and eclectics, and osteopaths, all of whom are now recognized.

It should be added that cases have been known where patients, apparently in good health, have succumbed to "regular" surgical treatment, by eminent practitioners.

While it is true that the chiropractics, like some of the osteopaths and other practitioners of natural methods, are inclined to go a little too far, and make their particular method a cure-all, yet, on the other hand, the editor has personal knowledge of the efficacy of the chiropractic method of treating diseases when used by competent hands.

Marriage.

WHEN, about a year ago, the editor reviewed a book entitled "Marriage," by Rev. George W. Savory, of Claremont, Los Angeles county, he suggested that the author would do well to cut the book down about 75 per cent. in size, and elimnate much of the biblical matter which it contains.

Mr. Savory has adopted this suggestion, so far as to make the book smaller in size, although it contains just as many words as the former edition. Indeed, two chapters of new matter have been added. The new book has been reduced from 400 to 160 pages, but the type is much smaller. The author has given it the somewhat sensational title, "Hell Upon Earth Made Heaven, or the Marriage Secrets of a Chicago Contractor." It is mainly in the shape of a dialogue between a man and his wife and their pastor, and to a large extent gives the author's personal experiences. Mr. Savory does not believe in "variety" or "promiscuity" or in any such drastic cures as are nowadays widely recommended for the ills of married life. He believes thoroughly in monogamy, and the sanctity of the home, and aims to show how courtship may be prolonged after marriage.

As the editor said, in reviewing the first edition, there is, in his opinion, a large surplus of Bible reference, because you can, from the Bible, prove almost anything you please, according to your point of view. Apart from this, however, it is a book that may be read with much advantage by all married people, and by those who are thinking of perpetrating matrimony.

It is scarcely necessary to say that Mr. Savory has an important field, when we remember that, according to recent investigations, three-fourths of couples, who have been married a few years, loathe one another.

For the purpose of carrying out his ideas, Mr. Savory has organized what he calls "The Order of the Orange Blossom." He states that it is intended for the "private study, social discussion and public promulgation of the results of such study and discussion of the hitherto criminally avoided subjects of sex, courtship, marriage, reproduction, etc."

The book is published by the author, Claremont, Los Angeles county, Cal. Price $1.

Hay Fever.

THE "Ancient Order of Ach-Choo" recently held its annual convention, at Jamaica, L. I. It is a national fraternity of hay-fever sufferers. One young woman sufferer was reported as saying: "Why dode you dry the rebedy thad gured be?" The president reported having been offered carloads of patent remedies. The convention voted to tabulate the remedies offered, and will call for volunteers to serve as a "poison squad."

Very foolish and very useless. Intelligent people should realize, by this time, that no permanent amelioration of this, or any other disease, can be obtained by taking dope, out of a bottle.

Hay fever is a hyper-sensitive condition of the principal air passages, with intense catarrhal symptoms, mostly occurring in the autumn and spring, and supposed to be due to the inhalation of irritating particles in the atmosphere, such as the pollen of plants—principally grasses. So far as the editor is aware, hay fever is unknown in this southwestern country. Another climatic advantage that we enjoy, over residents of the "effete East."

Land and Water.

AS recently mentioned here, Edgar Wallace Conable has established a sanatorium in the back country of San Diego county. The latest number of his magazine, the Pathfinder, is dated from Jamacha, San Diego county. In an article, descriptive of his new move, Mr. Conable says:

"On my arrival in California something over three years ago I had a long and interesting chat with Harry Ellington Brook, editor of the 'Care-of-the-Body' department in the Los Angeles Times. Mr. Brook knew that I had several things in my head which I had not yet been able to evolve to a practical demonstration, one of which was to secure a good-sized tract of land suitable in every way for an educational institution along health lines, for sanatorium purposes, etc. About the first thing Mr. Brook said to me was: 'Conable, in the selection of land here in Southern California you must look nine times for water while you are looking once for land.' This was most valuable advice, and I have never forgotten it, for which I now most sincerely thank Mr. Brook."

The editor has given similar advice—in every annual Midwinter Number of The Times, which he has edited for twenty-one years, and in the descriptive pamphlet issued by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, which he has edited for more than ten years. He repeats the same advice now, for the benefit of readers at a distance, who may be thinking of turning their steps toward the Land of the Afternoon.

If such advice is heeded, it may save many disappointments and heartaches. Remember, that while one piece of land in Southern California may be cheap at $250 an acre, another piece of land, similar in all respects, but lacking water, and separated only by a ditch, may be dear at $25 an acre.

Babies Versus Poodles.

A FASHIONABLY-DRESSED woman walked into the infant incubator institution, in Dreamland, Coney Island. She carried in her arms a pet spaniel, that had as much, if not more, attention than a child, taking its daily ride in Central Park, accompanied by a footman and a nurse. She became greatly interested in the incubator institution. She visited it again, and expressed a desire to adopt a child. Finally, she arranged that one of the inmates should become a member of her family, when three years old. She said:

"It does not cost more to educate a child than it does to support a spaniel as rich women do. Many of them spend as much time and money on Teddy bears as would feed a child. I shall organize a woman's club to aid poor children in place of dogs and Teddy bears."

Again, a Wichita woman recently read a published statement that the Babies' Home, of the Humane Society, in Minneapolis, was overcrowded, and that the managers did not know what to do. She wrote: "Send a lot of them here." In an interview, she said that when the Wichita police matron had a little girl baby to give away, recently, she received seventeen applications.

It would certainly be an excellent idea if society women would transfer their affections—or part of them—from pet poodles and "Teddy bears" to unfortunate infants who have no natural guardians. They might discover, to their surprise that the young of the human species can be quite as interesting a subject of attention as a pug dug.

Rats!

DR. POWERS, the city health officer, has returned from a trip to San Francisco, where he has been looking into the bubonic-plague conditions. He announced that he is going to start a war of extermination on rats.

As the editor has said, it will do no harm to kill the rats, provided you also remove the filth on which they live. Unless you do that, your last condition will be much worse than your first. Besides, all this "bug" foolishness tends to detract the attention of the public from the only real measure of protection, namely, a thorough cleaning up. This, however, is too easy. Any "layman" can do it, without the help of a salaried health officer. But then, the Council is bent on cutting down the expenses of the health office, and the officer must make a showing, to let people know that he is earning his salt.

So long as Dr. Powers does his utmost to make people clean up, the editor of the Care of the Body department is in full sympathy with him, but when he wanders off into the devious paths of bugology and animal filth injections, there he and the editor part company.

By the way, that quotation, in a recent article, in these columns, on the bubonic plague, was incorrect. It is many years since the editor read Jonathan Swift. Here is the correct quotation:

> "So naturalists observe, a flea
> Has smaller fleas that on him prey,
> And these have smaller still to bite 'em,
> And so proceed, ad infinitum."

Cigarette Smoking.

DR. LAWRENCE and his wife are continuing their peripatetic philanthropic efforts against the use of cigarettes by children. Whatever divergent views may be held as to the greater or less evil effects of tobacco smoking—smoking has comforted many a sorely-wounded soldier—there is scarcely an intelligent person who will attempt to deny that it is a deadly practice for young people who have not attained their full development, stunting their growth and warping them, mentally, physically and morally. It is of vastly more importance to the nation that the sale of cigarettes to the young should strictly be forbidden, than that adults should be deprived of their wine, whisky or beer.

Another thing. No gentleman will smoke where it is likely to cause discomfort to another.

For the great popularity of the cigarette in this section we are largely indebted to our Mexican residents, to whom a "cigarrito" is as the breath of life. On Catalina Island, the Banning Brothers employ a number of Mexicans. Smoking during working hours was strictly forbidden. Thereupon, the cholos quit, "muy pronto." Every mother's son of 'em. They would rather go without eating than without smoking. So now smoking is forbidden to the white employés on the island, but the hombre from over the border is allowed to use the weed.

Fasting for Emaciation.

A CASE was recently reported in The Times of a young man, 19 years of age, who has been puzzling the doctors at the County Hospital. He has fallen off in health, until he only weighs 69 pounds. Otherwise, he is in good condition. He is exceedingly anxious to put on flesh, and expressed his willingness to undergo "any kind of an operation," if it would do any good.

who have examined him are said to be at a loss to explain his condition.

[illegible] will be of any use, in such a case. What does the editor advise? Now, prepare to smile. He advises a fast—a protracted fast. You think this [illegible], don't you? Read the following extract from [illegible] to the editor, from Dr. Linda Burfield Hazzard, who makes a specialty of fasting for the cure [illegible]

[illegible] Murphy of Humansville, Mo., came to me [illegible] months ago, in a most aggravated condition [illegible], caused by many years of overeating, and [illegible] trouble and death in the family. A [illegible] feet eight in height, she weighed just 91 [illegible] and all. After dieting and gradually [illegible] meals, I placed her on the absolute fast, [illegible] only for forty-five days. Her weight at [illegible] the fast was 68 pounds, and for the last ten [illegible] compelled to remain in her room, and most [illegible] in her bed. When hunger returned, after [illegible] days of fruit and vegetable juices, she began [illegible] weight at the rate of one and one-half [illegible] daily, which she is keeping up regularly, and [illegible] reach the normal weight of a woman of her [illegible] build. Her nervousness has entirely disappeared and her strength and vitality have increased [illegible] weight, so that her own people no longer recognize her as the same woman that left Missouri six [illegible] ago. I think I have succeeded in 'show-

It is good for any [illegible] condition, because an abnormal condition [illegible] one or more of the organs—usually the [illegible]—are not working properly, and a fast [illegible] a chance to recover their tone.

Studies.

[illegible] to a recent mention in these columns of [illegible] studies, in Germany and Japan, and in a [illegible] business college, a correspondent calls attention to the fact that an art school, near Westlake [illegible] several years had open-air studies, and [illegible] enclosed studios open into a roof garden, [illegible] the park. An adjoining school for girls has [illegible] completed a roof garden, for study.

[illegible] good work go on. It will undoubtedly result [illegible] and better students. Clear thinking, and air [illegible] deprived of a part of its necessary oxygen, [illegible] incompatible.

Summer.

[illegible] mentioned, this has been a remarkably [illegible] summer. Apart from an exceptionally long [illegible] weather, in the Fourth of July week, there [illegible] a single heated term this year. Beginning [illegible] there was one warm day, and again, on [illegible] October, a belated after-thought of the weather [illegible] the temperature up to a high point. And [illegible] it rained.

[illegible] who have been spending their first summer [illegible], must have been agreeably surprised at [illegible] it is not necessarily so awfully hot here in [illegible] because it is very mild in winter. Indeed, it [illegible] and in Los Angeles, all through the summer, [illegible] that a person not doing any hard physical [illegible] found an opportunity to perspire.

[illegible] feelings are sometimes a poor guide, when it [illegible] question of temperature. For instance, A. B. [illegible] the local forecaster of the United States Weather [illegible], in reply to an inquiry from the editor, [illegible] following information, from which it will be [illegible] the average temperature of the past summer [illegible] slightly above the normal:

[illegible] to your request of yesterday, I beg to say [illegible] temperature for June last was 65 degrees, [illegible] of a degree above the average for the last [illegible]. The mean for July was 72 degrees, or five [illegible] the normal, the excess being mostly due [illegible] spell from the 1st to the 5th, inclusive. In [illegible] 69 degrees, or about normal; while September [illegible] degree above the average for the month,

[illegible] seen by the foregoing figures that the mean [illegible] for all months, except August, was slightly [illegible] the average, but with the exception of the [illegible] during the latter part of June, and the early [illegible] there was an entire absence of the hot weather [illegible] experienced from time to time during the [illegible]

[illegible] exception of July, somewhat more than the [illegible] of cloudiness obtained, the excess being [illegible] in August and September."

[illegible] been a remarkably cool and pleasant summer. Any one who is not satisfied with [illegible] weather ought to go to heaven. And there [illegible] probably begin to complain about the fit of [illegible] the weight of his golden crown.

had become habitual to MacNab in his thought of his absent friend. It was exceedingly brief.

"I have found it! Snall go home by the next steamer. F. L."

The change in Dr. Laveltrie was marvelous. As they walked along the parapet wall by the river he cheerfully told MacNab the story of his search and finding, at the Monte de Piété, the mate to the stone. With a glass he had traced the small, hair-like line that was continued from the—; but Dr. Francois was overcome by the painful memories that swept over him as he followed that slender line into the tomb of his buried love. He turned and grasped the iron bars of the parapet and bent over in the convulsions of uncontrollable grief. When he became calmer he said he had had the fillet enlarged to fit his finger, and he held up his left hand with the gem on the ring finger. He went cheerfully to work, regained his practice and lived on, wearing the ring that wedded him again to life and the sweet, sad memories of his betrothal—in undying devotion.

A few years later Dr. MacNab was on a steamer on Lake Winnipeg when a friendly face beamed on him from above the broad shoulders of Dr. Gray, whom he had last seen as he received his diploma. They talked long of old times, and Gray recalled the incident of the dissecting room.

"Were you not mistaken about that ring, doctor?" Gray asked.

"No. That was what first attracted my attention. I had seen the ring selected."

"Well, there was no ring there when I returned to the room."

"You astonish me? Who assisted you?"

"Grossman, one of the first-year men of the party."

"Not the man who was expelled that winter?"

"So he was. I had forgotten that. Could he have—" Gray paused at the painful recollection of a man who had gone to the bad and was dropped for repellant misconduct.

"What became of him?" MacNab asked.

"I lost trace of him, but heard that he shipped from Montreal on a Bordeaux ship for France."

The subject was changed.

On Dr. MacNab's return to the Canadian metropolis he was in daily intercourse with Dr. Laveltrie, but only once was the ring again the subject of conversation between them, for MacNab was uncomfortably suspicious. Laveltrie had again shown him the ring and gave him a magnifier.

"You see the line plainly?"

"Oh, yes, plainly." But he saw more. A slight curve that he had noticed in the first stone was reproduced exactly in the one in his hand. He passed the gem back without further observation. It was doing a good work for this friend.

Dr. Francois has been gathered to his fathers many years and no danger of disillusionment can arise from the disclosures of this narraive, the facts of which were carefully guarded by his sympathizing and loyal friend through years of close intercourse.

GREAT SPEED PROMISED.

NEW FORM OF MARINE ENGINE THAT PROMISES ONE HUNDRED MILES AN HOUR.

[London Tribune:] The British admiralty has now under consideration a new form of marine engine and propeller which, the inventor claims, will revolutionize not only naval warfare, but the navigation of the whole world.

The invention is the fruit of much ingenuity, labor, and expenditure on the part of Mr. F. Maltman, of Redburn street, Chelsea, who has devoted to it years of study and experiment. At first sight the engine resembles a turbine, but closer inspection reveals important differences. Steam from any type of boiler is brought to bear upon a shaft fitted with twelve chambers, divided into two sets of six each. Shaft and chambers are all of steel, cast in one piece, and of great strength. Exactly what the arrangement of these chambers is the inventor deems it imprudent at present to disclose, but it is such that the admission of steam through the orifices at their ends causes the shaft to revolve at a tremendous speed.

So great is the power of the new form of engine, indeed, that the inventor considers it useless to apply it to the ordinary screw propeller lest the terrific pace should result in the formation of a complete or partial vacuum in which the screw would "race" without exerting its propulsive force. He has accordingly devised a modification of the screw propeller which will make a return in speed for all the power that can be applied to it.

The screw has three blades, each of the shape already familiar, but instead of being attached to one small hub, they are fixed at intervals of a couple of feet from one another to a long shaft. The result, of course, is that each blade works in its own water, instead of in that through which its fellow has cut but a moment before. The shaft is fitted with three of these dissected screws, each of them with a larger orbit than the one immediately in front of it, so that when set slowly in motion it presents to the eye the effect of a huge corkscrew worming its way forward.

The shaft bearing the three screws is fixed immediately beneath the keel of the boat, and runs parallel with it and with the driving shaft and its twelve chambers. This occupies so little space that practically the only machinery in the body of the boat will be the furnace and boiler, and the inventor, therefore, believes that in the case of cargo vessels the device will have the advantage of adding to the carrying capacity as well as of increasing the speed. It is, however, in naval warfare that he expects for the invention the greatest immediate utility. Up to now, the new system has been tried only on models upon the Serpentine and the Thames, but the speeds attained in the largest of these lead Mr. Maltman to believe that on a vessel with the size and steam power of a present-day torpedo boat it would yield a velocity of 100 miles an hour.

THE RETURN.

HOW A SOUL CAME TO EARTH TO DISCOVER ITS AWFUL MISTAKE.

By a Special Contributor.

I held the glittering thing in my hand. It was such a tiny thing to deal so deadly a blow. Should this be the end? I was so tired, and I had thought until my brain swam. Why delay longer? How the tiny thing glittered, and how cold it felt. But life was cold and hard, and I was weary, so I lifted the shining weapon.

"O God, if there be a God, unto Thee I commend my soul!"

There was a dull crash, and the world dissolved into a million glittering bits. Then darkness that made itself felt. A shaft of light pierced the darkness, and a voice, calm and dispassionate, yet withal gentle and pitying, broke the silence.

"The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. The life that I gave thee, my daughter, was not thine to take. Let this be thy punishment; for thou shalt go everywhere and see those whom once thou called dear; but they shall suffer, and thou canst not comfort; they shall receive blows, and thou canst not shield them; and this until thy soul be purged of bitterness and doubt."

And then I heard voices of inexpressible sweetness which sang: "Glory to the Father in heaven, now and forever, world without end."

I stood by the side of the old woman who in my earthly life I had called Grandmother. Her life was drawing to an end, but her soul was beset with doubts and fears. "Is there a God?" she cried in her anguish of soul. I drew near.

"Fear not," I said. "There is a God whose love and pity are infinite, and when your life is over here His strong arms will support and shield you."

But she heard me not, nor felt my presence.

* * *

I went to the man who had been my father and whose love and care had sheltered me for so many years. He was alone and sad. I drew near and tried to comfort him, but he did not hear me.

* * *

I went to the child who had been my son, and a cruel man was beating him. I sought to throw myself between the little one's body and the blows, but I was nothing but a spirit, and I could not shield my child.

* * *

I sought the man who had been my husband. I threw my arms about his neck. I tried to whisper "I am here." But like the others he could not feel or know. He was weary and sad, but I could not lighten his burdens.

* * *

"My God!" I cried, "I am punished enough. Give me back the life I so carelessly threw away. Teach me to bear my burdens."

* * *

Once more, light. And a voice heard but faintly at first.

"Half an inch more and it would have been fatal."

And then dear and familiar faces bending over me. I could only whisper, "Forgive!"
